"It will be readily seen from the foregoing report that there is no commodity in common use that is so absolutely monopolized as the anthracite coal production and there is no commodity upon which there is such a high rate of tolls paid for the carrying of the same. It is a low-grade commodity, where the loading is through chutes from bins, carried in carload lots, and dumped without any more hand labor than the mere opening of gates to permit the coal to run from the cars. This same character of product, to wit, the bituminous coal, is carried to the market at about one-half of the toll rates charged for anthracite. It has been stated time and again, it is the backbone of a least six of these nine anthracite carrying companies because of the great receipts for this product.

"When it is taken into consideration that the royalty cost is ten times greater than bituminous and that the tonnage cost is twice as great as bituminous, it can be readily understood why anthracite is commanding such a high figure.

"If there is any subject matter that needs the serious consideration of the Congress of the United States, it is these excessive royalties and high tonnage rates of anthracite coal, together with the great underlying cause of all—that one group of financiers control the anthracite production of this country.

"The Creator of this universe placed coal in the bowels of the earth for the use and benefit of man. It is one of the vital necessities of life; and the great corporations which own and control it should not be permitted to exercise the monopoly which they now enjoy, to the disadvantage and discomfort of mankind generally. The great transportation companies have no more right to this God-given article of necessity than the humblest citizen of this Republic. The transportation companies that profit by the monopoly of coal production have no natural rights which rise higher than the law that permits them to be chartered to transport the coal, and the monopoly is not in accordance with the constitution of the State of Pennsylvania, which forbids them to engage in mining it. If the constitution of Pennsylvania, which forbids the transportation companies to mine coal, is a dead letter in that State, there is no reason why the Federal Government should not interpose and forbid these companies who are engaged in interstate commerce from doing the unlawful thing of mining coal.

"It is within the power of the Federal Government, and a power which should be exercised, to divorce the transportation companies from the mining companies. It is a matter which can be easily and effectually accomplished under the interstate-commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. The people of the United States have a right to demand of Congress that they be protected from the greed, cupidity, and avarice of these soulless corporations. It is unfortunate, in my judgment, that the Federal Constitution is so constructed that the Federal Government can not take control of coal mines and operate them for the benefit of all the people. Governments are made for men rather than men for Governments, and the Government that fails to protect its citizens from the cupidity of corporations in the distribution of one of the necessities of life is faithless to its people.

"Owing to the limited time, the many phases, and ramifications of this business, the committee has found it impossible to finish this work. The time at hand will not permit a thorough investigation and the working out of some proper solution; but we have succeeded in uncovering so many facts and have gathered together so much evidence, that Congress will find the completion of the task easy of accomplishment.

"We sincerely hope that necessary legislation may be enacted at an early date which will vouchsafe to the people of America an ample supply of anthracite coal at a reasonble cost. If the Government will so act in dealing with this problem as to secure justice for all, it will relieve the world from much suffering. The price of coal should be fixed by the Government, and a fair return on the investment of those who have secured a monopoly on one essential of life should also be vouchsafed by the Government."

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Smoot.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Spencer
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Sterling
Colt	Kellogg	Page	Sutherland
Culberson	Kenyon	Pittman	Swanson
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Thomas
Dillingham	La Follette	Ransdell	Thompson
France	McCumber	Robinson	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gay	McLean	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gronna	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Walsh
Hale	Moses	Sherman	Warren
Harding	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Henderson	New	Smith, Mich.
Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is unavoidably detained on official business.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is detained on official business.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

INVESTIGATION BY JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], who is in charge of the deficiency appropriation bill, to yield to me temporarily to make a motion.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to yielding temporarily, assuming the matter the Senator brings up will not consume any considerable time. If it should take any considerable time, I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it does, I will agree to lay it aside. Four times I have asked unanimous consent to take up an important matter in which the Senate is involved. It is Senate resolution 469, instructing the Judiciary Committee to make an investigation. We have not been able to make a complete investigation and make a report on account of the jam here before the Senate, because we had to be here in the Senate in the last few weeks. I ask unanimous consent to proceed once more to the consideration of the resolution, and I want to say that if unanimous consent is not given I propose to move to take it up and pass it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. May I ask what the particular resolution is?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the resolution to investigate the liquor traffic, German propaganda, and Bolshevism.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I object.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was read Saturday night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, conducting, by subcommittee, under resolutions of the Senate numbered 307 and 436, investigations of German propaganda and Bolsheviki propaganda, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to continue said investigations until the expiration of one calendar week from the commencement of the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress; to sit in Washington or elsewhere during the period between the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress and the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress and thereafter during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and to report in the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress; and the authority for the incurring and payment of the expenses of said investigations, whether incurred in Washington or elsewhere, is hereby extended for the same length of time.

JOINT COMMISSION ON RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As senatorial members of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, as provided for by section 9 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 1, 1919, I appoint the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In pursuance of section 3 of the Post Office appropriation act approved February 28, 1919, authorizing the appointment of a commission consisting of five members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, together with a similar committee from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to investigate the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, with a view to reclassification and readjustment of such salaries on an equitable basis, the Chair appoints the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] as the committee on the part of the Senate.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BORLAND.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In pursuance of the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on the 25th ultimo, the Chair appoints the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] as the committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the late Representative Borland, of Missouri.

WAR DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the 14th instant, which will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 3, 1919.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

SIR: In reply to the Senate resolution of January 14 (calendar day, Jan. 18), I report that so far as the records of the department show all former civil-service employees of the War Department in the District of Columbia who resigned and volunteered or were drafted into the Army and who have been discharged therefrom and applied for reinstatement to their former positions have been reappointed and are being assigned to duty as rapidly as they report.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

MORGAN'S LOUISIANA & TEXAS RAILROAD (S. DOC. NO. 438).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 28th ultimo, a report of the facts as shown by the records of the Treasury Department as to a claim for $2,094.17 of Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co., as assignee of Charles Morgan, mail contractor, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COST OF THE WAR (S. DOC. NO. 441).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a report relative to the cost of war with Germany and Austria as shown by expenditures under the appropriations for the service of the Department of Commerce, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SEIZED ALIEN PROPERTY (S. DOC. NO. 439).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Alien Property Custodian, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 24th ultimo, certain information relative to property taken over by him and the disposition made of the same, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES (S. DOC. NO. 437).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Director of the War Trade Board, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 15, 1918, a list showing the number of civil employees in that board on February 26, and the number discharged during the previous two weeks, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS (S. DOC. NO. 440).

The Vice President laid before the Senate a communication from the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate, transmitting a full and complete report of all the property in his possession and in the Senate Office Building on the 21st of December, 1918, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 357. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States;

H. R. 11219. An act providing for the appraisal and sale of Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12860. An act granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female), Army field clerks, field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and civil employees of the Army pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States; and

H. R. 13482. An act creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, and so forth, of the Perry victory memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition from Leroy Holt, president of the Imperial Irrigation District, of Los Angeles, Cal., relative to an appropriation to furnish employment and homes for returning soldiers and sailors, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., March 1, 1919.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

As a community which has been credited with furnishing the largest number of men for the military service of the United States according to its actual population, Imperial Valley urges your support of Lane's hundred million dollar appropriation to furnish employment and homes for returning soldiers. Imperial Valley with its wonderful record of over $30,000,000 of production annually is an example of what can be done in the way of turning desert and waste places into pleasant and profitable homes. Over 300,000 additional acres of public land equally fertile lie within the Imperial Valley, but beyond the present irrigation system which could be reclaimed by a reasonable expenditure and made into homes for returning soldiers. Other communities probably offer similar attractive proposition. We feel that Secretary Lane's plan offers a wonderful constructive program for the reconstruction period which will not only constitute a suitable recognition of the courage and patriotism of our soldiers and sailors but also will increase the resources of our country, add to the stability of our Government, and increase the contentment of society in general.

IMPERIAL IRRIGATION DISTRICT,
By LEROY HOLT, President.

Mr. CURTIS. I present concurrent resolution No. 34 of the Legislature of Kansas, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution is as follows:

House concurrent resolution 34.

A resolution concerning the return of the Thirty-fifth Division from service overseas.

Whereas it has been announced that the Thirty-fifth Division, composed of the National Guard of Kansas and Missouri, will shortly be returned to this country for muster out of Federal service; and

Whereas this division was organized and trained by National Guard officers of Kansas and Missouri, and the record made by the citizens of Kansas and Missouri constituting its membership in the battle of the Argonne Forest was one of unsurpassed heroism and efficiency; and

Whereas the affection existing between the officers and men composing the division and their State pride and esprit de corps contributed in the largest measure to their gallant achievements against the professional soldiers of Germany; and

Whereas it is the desire of the members of the division and of the citizens of Kansas that our citizen soldiers be permitted to return to their own people under their own officers: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, respectfully petitioned to direct that upon the embarkation of the division the officers who accompanied it across be returned to it, and that National Guard officers of Kansas and Missouri serving with the same be assigned to the command of its regiments, battalions, companies, and batteries to accompany the same to the point of demobilization.

Resolved further, That the governor be requested to cause these resolutions to be laid before the President and to acquaint him with the earnest desire of the people of this State that this simple act of justice be done the survivors of more than 10,000 Kansans whose efforts and sacrifice have made possible the glorious achievements of this division; and

Resolved further, That the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress be requested to call on the President immediately upon his return from France and petition him to cause the necessary orders to be issued in the premises.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house and passed that body February 25, 1919.

D. A. N. CHASE,
Speaker of the House pro tempore.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate February 26, 1919.

CHAS. S. HOFFMAN,
President of the Senate.
EMMET D. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved, February 27, 1919.

HENRY J. ALLEN, Governor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, favoring the return of telegraph and telephone lines to private ownership, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Simple resolution 54.

Feeling that the public sentiment of the people of Texas, as expressed by resolution of this senate, would better enable the Congress of the United States to solve and direct the course of the problem of Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Thirty-sixth Legislature of the State of Texas, That we are opposed to Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines. Be it further

Resolved, That we favor the return of the telegraph and telephone lines to their owners at the earliest possible moment. Be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the senate forward properly authenticated copies of this resolution to each Senator and Member of Congress, in the United States Congress, and copies to the chief clerk of the legislature of every State in the United States.

Mr. WEEKS. I present resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the granting of six months' additional pay to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
IN THE YEAR 1919.

Resolutions urging Congress to provide additional pay for soldiers and sailors discharged from the service of the United States.

Whereas thousands of soldiers and sailors in the service of their country are daily being discharged from the Army or Navy of the United States; and

Whereas such discharged soldiers and sailors are encountering much difficulty in securing employment on account of the present industrial condition of the country; and

Whereas in the opinion of the General Court of Massachusetts it is the duty of the National Government to provide for the care and support of such discharged soldiers and sailors until they secure employment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby requests the Congress of the United States to pass suitable legislation for the purpose of providing six months' additional pay for soldiers and sailors upon their discharge from the service of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the Members of the Senate and House in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In house of representative adopted February 13, 1919.
In senate adopted, in concurrence, February 18, 1919.
A true copy.
Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. HENDERSON. I present for the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California favoring an appropriation of $100,000,000 for placing the returning soldiers and sailors upon farms, and so forth, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE, FORTY-THIRD SESSION,
AT SACRAMENTO, ASSEMBLY CHAMBER, January 25, 1919.

To the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to the President of the United States Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of Congress from the State of California:

In compliance with the provisions of assembly joint resolution No. 14, adopted by the Legislature of the State of California at the forty-third session, I am sending you a true copy thereof, in title and words, as follows:

CHAPTER 21.

Assembly joint resolution 14.

(By Mr. N. J. Prendergast, of the twenty-seventh district)

Relative to the plan recommended by the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, for the placing of returning United States soldiers upon farms.

Whereas it has been recommended by the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, that Congress immediately appropriate the sum of $100,000,000 for placing the returning soldiers of the United States upon farms, thereby inaugurating a plan whereby at least 100,000 men will be immediately employed in the creation of at least 25,000 farms within the territory of the United States; and

Whereas the plan as outlined by the honorable Secretary of the Interior proposes the reclamation of approximately 215,000,000 acres of arid and swamp land within the United States at present unfit for cultivation because of the lack of water in the one case and drainage in the other; and

Whereas the plan suggested is not a "charity scheme," and under appropriate management will be self-funding, and will offer alluring opportunities to settlers as compared with the old land settlement systems, inasmuch as 40 years' time is to be given the settlers within which to reimburse the United States for the money and credit loaned to them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and assembly, jointly, That the plan as outlined by Secretary of the Interior Lane meets with its heartiest and utmost approval, and that this legislature urges upon the Congress of the United States the early enactment into law of the plan proposed and the appropriation of the money needed to carry out the provisions thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be, and he is hereby directed to forward copies of these resolutions to the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to the President of the Senate of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each of California's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

HENRY W. WRIGHT,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. C. YOUNG,
President of the Senate.
MARTIN C. MADSEN,
Private Secretary to the Governor.
FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.

And do hereby certify that the same was duly filed with the secretary of state on January 25, 1919.

B. O. BOOTHBY,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I also present for the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] a resolution of the Legislature of California concerning an adequate merchant marine, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE,
AT SACRAMENTO, FORTY-THIRD SESSION,
Assembly Chamber, January 26, 1919.

To the honorable President of the United States, President of the United States Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of California:

In compliance with the provisions of assembly joint resolution No. 10, adopted by the Legislature of the State of California at the forty-third session, I am sending you a true copy thereof, in title and words, as follows:

CHAPTER 18.

Assembly joint resolution 10, by Mr. Edgar S. Hurley, of the thirty-eighth district, relative to the constructing and fitting out of all ships and vessels used by Emergency Fleet Corporation or coming under their control.

Whereas during our recent war there have been constructed within the United States many shipyards which, taken altogether, have a capacity sufficient to construct all the ships required by the Federal Government in the operation of the American merchant marine; and

Whereas we are now confronted with the problem of caring for our returned soldiers, there appearing to be more men than jobs; and

Whereas in face of this fact the Emergency Fleet Corporation is reported to have let contracts to the shipyards located in foreign countries in an amount exceeding $30,000,000: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly and the senate, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California memorializes the Congress of the United States that they take such steps as may be necessary to prevent final consummation of this deal and to cancel any contracts that have been entered into if the same can be done consistent with the honor and integrity of the United States. And that they enact such laws as will prevent a repetition of such, and that they further provide for all American ships to be constructed in shipyards in the United States.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California be requested to use all honorable means to secure the action desired in this matter for the purpose aforesaid: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, President of the United States Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California, including those who shall assume office on March 4, 1919.

HENRY W. WRIGHT,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. C. YOUNG,
President of the Senate.
MARTIN C. MADSEN,
Private Secretary to the Governor.
FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.

And do hereby certify that the same was duly filed with the secretary of state on January 25, 1919.

B. O. BOOTHBY,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. HENDERSON (for Mr. PHELAN) presented a petition of the governing committee of the Realty Board of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the return to private ownership of the railroads of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Trades Council of Kemmerer, Wyo., favoring an investigation into the Postmaster General's administration of the wire system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Terminal Lodge, No. 602, United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers, of Portland, Me., praying for Federal control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Billings, Mont., praying for the repeal of the tax on sporting goods, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MOSES presented resolutions adopted by sundry manufacturers of Franklin, N. H., favoring the continuance of the daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Hillsboro County Teachers' Association, of New Hampshire, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Council No. 92, Knights of Columbus, of Manchester, N. H., favoring the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of congregations of the Congregational and Methodist churches of Bristol, N. H., praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Sellersville, Pa., and a petition of the Kiwanis Club, of Easton, Pa., praying the return to private ownership of telegraph and telephone lines be deferred until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon a proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Local Union No. 500, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Butler, of the United Labor Council of Butler, and of Monongahela Lodge No. 430, United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers, of West Elizabeth, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring the proposed five-year extension of Federal control of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. THOMPSON. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, relative to the embarkation of the Thirty-fifth Division, composed of the National Guard of Kansas and Missouri, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 34.

A resolution concerning the return of the Thirty-fifth Division from service overseas.

Whereas it has been announced that the Thirty-fifth Division, composed of the National Guard of Kansas and Missouri, will shortly be returned to this country for muster out of Federal service; and

Whereas the division was organized and trained by National Guard officers of Kansas and Missouri and the record made by the citizens of Kansas and Missouri constituting its membership in the Battle of the Argonne Forest was one of unsurpassed heroism and efficiency; and

Whereas the affection existing between the officers and men composing the division and their State pride and esprit de corps contributed in the largest measure to their gallant achievements against the professional soldiers of Germany; and

Whereas it is the desire of the members of the division and of the citizens of Kansas that our citizen soldiers be permitted to return to their own people under their own officers: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Kansas: That the President of the United States be and is hereby respectfully petitioned to direct that upon the embarkation of the division the officers who accompanied it across be returned to it and that National Guard officers of Kansas and Missouri serving with the same be assigned to the command of its regiments, battalions, companies, and batteries to accompany the same to the point of demobilization.

Resolved further, That the governor be requested to cause these resolutions to be laid before the President and to acquaint him with the earnest desire of the people of this State that this simple act of justice be done the survivors of more than 10,000 Kansans whose efforts and sacrifice have made possible the glorious achievements of this division; and

Resolved further, That the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress be requested to call on the President immediately upon his return from France and petition him to cause the necessary orders to be issued in the premises.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house and passed that body February 25, 1919.

D. A. N. CHASE,
Speaker of the House pro tempore.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate February 26, 1919.

CHAS. S. HUFFMAN,
President of the Senate.
EMMET D. GUGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved February 27, 1919.

HENRY J. ALLEN,
Governor.

Mr. GORE. I should like to have printed in the RECORD a memorial introduced by State Senator Hill and adopted by the Oklahoma State Senate, and perhaps by this time adopted by the house. I also present a resolution adopted by the city council of Tulsa, Okla. I ask to have the memorial and resolution printed in the RECORD, together with certain other letters and matter which I will furnish later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senate resolution No. 22.

A resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Oklahoma to use their good offices in behalf of Oklahoma soldiers who are now confined in Federal prisons by order of courts-martial.

Whereas it has been currently reported that a number of Oklahoma soldiers who were at training camps have received severe and unjust prison sentences from military courts-martial; and

Whereas these soldiers came into the Army from civil occupations and were wholly unaccustomed to, and unfamiliar with, military rules and regulations; and

Whereas under such conditions the imposition by court-martial of such severe and unwarranted sentences is destructive to morale and discipline and tends to weaken the confidence of the civil population in the ability and integrity of our military leaders: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby respectfully requested to use their good offices to the end that justice may be done to these soldiers, and that they may not, for minor offenses, be forced to languish behind prison bars.

Passed February 27, 1919.

RESOLUTION OF THE IRISH SITUATION.

Whereas the Great World War, by virtue of the armistice that has been heretofore executed, is at a standstill, and

Whereas there is at this time assembled a conference of the representatives of the different nations of the world being held upon French soil, and

Whereas there has been suggested the names of delegates to this great peace conference that have not been accorded a seat thereat, and

Whereas we feel that a country that has been the home of statesmen like Emmet, Curran, O'Connell, Purnell, and the Count Horace Plunkett, should be represented at this conference, for

As we look back over the pages of history we see in the distance a small nation that has, throughout the centuries, been struggling upward and onward and a country that has produced some of the brightest minds, the greatest intellects, the finest orators, and the sublimest statesmen that have been permitted to set their feet upon the footstool of the Almighty.

This small nation has been ruled and governed by the strong arm of a monarchy that has at times been of the most tyrannical nature that ever pressed down the crown of thorns upon the brow of human kind. A few of the many acts of tyranny that have been enforced by this monarchial form of government against this small nation during the years that have dawned and died, have been,

The coercion acts in which the citizens were coerced into doing things that were revolting to their manhood.

The suspension of the habeas corpus act by which thousands of the people of this country were put in prison without charge or any means of any character afforded to them by which they could get release or relief.

The suspension of a trial by jury, the result of which meant new punishment or acts of tyranny against the individuals in such manner as might seem or be the pleasure of tyrannical judges to inflict.

A search by the police without warrant or ceremony of any character, ruthlessly crossing the threshold of the home at any time that their own peculiar inclinations might suggest.

The innocent were fined and imprisoned for offenses committed by the guilty, who were permitted to go without molestation.

The alien or foreign visitors have been expelled from this country.

The curfew law and the blood money of the Norman conquerors have been exacted; the press and the newspapers have been gagged, suppressed, and, in some instances, destroyed. This tyrannical monarchy has manufactured new crimes and offenses; yet and with it all, and through it all, the people of this country have struggled on and on, at all times looking toward the day when they could be free and independent and establish for themselves a republic and make a democracy that would be a benefit to themselves, a blessing to their inhabitants, and an inspiration to the world.

The eyes of America are turned at this time on the Irish people. The world knows of the Sinn Feiners and to the people of America the Sinn Feiners are standing in the same attitude toward England to-day as the Thirteen Colonies along the eastern shores of the United States stood in 1775, and are making the same fight for their own independence that the heroic men of Washington's Army made, and we sincerely hope that their success in obtaining their independence will be equal to that obtained by John Hancock, Benjamin Franklin, and the signers of the Declaration of Independence of 1776.

It occurs to the people of the United States, or at least a large number of them, that the Sinn Feiners are the democratic organization of the Irish colonies, and due recognition is given to their assertion that they never have relinquished their claim to separate nationhood and to the establishing of an Irish republic; and they feel that they have certain inalienable rights to sovereign independence and that they should choose their own form of government, and they deny the right of the British Parliament or British Crown or the right of any foreign government to legislate for the republic of Ireland. The people of the United States feel the same as a "highly placed Englishman in Dublin," when he recently said, "We have to choose now between recognition of Ireland's rights or the loss of our hard-won union with America, with all that that means to ourselves and to the world." This is the cardinal fact, this is the menace in the Irish situation and the press of England's answer, appears to be to the Englishman, to "use all their influence to divert the disaster to the world which this threatens," and concluded by saying, "A little longer and it will be too late," and we feel that they should be recognized and be permitted a seat at the peace session in Paris, and that inasmuch as Count Plunkett, Edmond de Valera, and Arthur Griffith have been named by the Irish republic as their delegates to the peace conference: Therefore be it

Resolved by the mayor and board of commissioners of the city of Tulsa, Tulsa County, Okla., That the people of Ireland should, and of right, ought to be free and independent; and be it further

Resolved, That our Government should lend its assistance to this struggling country to aid it in establishing for itself a democratic form of government; and be it further

Resolved, That the representatives of our Government now sitting at the peace table in the Republic of France should insist upon the recognition of Count Horace Plunkett, Edmond de Valera, and Arthur Griffith as duly qualified and regularly elected representatives at said conference, and be it further.

Resolved, That the Government of the United States should recognize the Republic of Ireland with its Democratic ideas, ideals, and independence as a free and independent nation, and accord to it all of the rights and privileges of any Republic.

Adopted and approved this 28th day of January, A. D. 1919.

C. H. HUBBARD, Mayor.
M. J. MCNULTY, jr.,
Commissioner Streets and Public Property.
F. M. BOHN,
Commissioner Police and Fire.
H. F. NEWBLOCK,
Commissioner Finance and Revenue.
R. E. CURRAN,
Commissioner Water.

Attest:
[SEAL.]
CHAS. F. BURKE,
City Auditor.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
County of Tulsa, city of Tulsa:

I, Chas. F. Burke, the duly elected, qualified and acting city auditor and ex officio city clerk of the city of Tulsa, Okla., hereby certify that the foregoing copy of the "Resolution on the Irish Situation," is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

Dated this the 25th day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.]
CHAS. F. BURKE,
City Auditor.

THE COTTON EMBARGO—LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to have printed in the RECORD a memorial introduced by State Senator Hill and adopted by the Oklahoma State Senate, and perhaps by this time adopted by the house. I also present a resolution adopted by the city council of Tulsa, Okla. I ask to have the memorial and resolution printed in the RECORD, together with certain other letters and matter which I will furnish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE COTTON EMBARGO.

(Appeal to the President, signed by Senator GORE and other cotton States Senators.)

FEBRUARY 24, 1919.

Mr. PRESIDENT: We respectfully urge the necessity for immediately removing cotton from the embargo list.

The present price at which cotton sells is below the estimated cost of production in many localities. Bankers and merchants have advanced upon it in many instances beyond the prices at which it now sells.

The situation is demoralizing business conditions of the States in which cotton is raised, and threatens serious financial loss to cotton growers and to merchants and bankers who have advanced upon cotton.

We urge that this condition has been brought about in large part by the embargo which prevents shipments of cotton to markets in which it could otherwise be sold.

Cotton, now on the embargo list, can not be exported except where the exportation is approved by the War Trade Board. A number of us have learned recently of large sales of cotton which could be made to neutral countries but for the fact that the War Trade Board refused licenses, and cotton, being on the embargo list, could not be exported without the licenses.

We are advised that the burden resting upon cotton owners will be greatly relieved if you will remove cotton from the embargo list.

That you may appreciate the condition and the injury that this restriction of markets places upon holders of cotton, we call your attention to the fact that cotton was selling last September for 38 cents a pound. It was then that the subject of cotton was referred to the War Industries Board, with a view to stabilizing the price or fixing the price. This interference with the market broke the price and demoralized purchasers, so that buyers ceased to purchase at the 38-cent market and bid down the market to around 30 cents a pound. The War Industries Board finally determined that it had no authority to fix a price and no power to maintain it, but the injury had already been done.

Then it developed that the War Trade Board was seriously interfering with the export of cotton by restricting licenses for shipment even to countries not contiguous to Germany and Austria, and from which countries cotton could not have reached either of the enemy countries. This still further demoralized the cotton market and forced down the price.

If cotton is taken off the embargo list broader opportunities for sale at once will follow, and the injury which has been done to cotton raisers and merchants and bankers in the sections where cotton is raised will be reduced.

We earnestly appeal to you to take cotton off the embargo list and permit it normally to be sold and shipped where purchasers are willing to buy.

The cotton raiser has suffered more from the war than any class of our citizens. He is not now asking the Government to give him the assistance which is going to other farm products. We only ask that he be relieved from burdens placed on him by his own Government.

Respectfully,

———— ————.

VATICAN FINDS FAULT WITH PROPOSED LEAGUE.—"MIGHT HAVE BEEN CONSTITUTED IN SIMPLE MANNER," SAYS PAPER.

ROME, March 12.

The Osservatore Romano, the semiofficial organ of the Vatican, prints an article on the league of nations which is understood to embody the viewpoint of the Holy See. It says the league "might have been constituted in a simpler manner" and outlines the functions of the league as follows:

The setting up of an arbitration tribunal to solve international conflicts.

The formation of a society of all civilized nations, including those defeated in the war, which will pledge themselves to submit their differences to a tribunal and accept its rulings.

The bringing about of an agreement to declare an economic boycott against any nation which refuses to submit controversies to a tribunal or which will not accept decisions on matters which have been so submitted.

In conclusion the article recalls that such a project was suggested in the pope's appeal to belligerent nations on August 1, 1917.

—

OSCAR STRAUS URGES PEACE LEAGUE CHANGE—FAILS TO GET AMENDMENT AT UNION MEETING TO GUARD MONROE DOCTRINE.

LONDON, March 12.

(By the Associated Press.)

The efforts of Oscar Straus, of the American League to Enforce Peace, to have the league of nations union favor an amendment to the league of nations covenant designed to safeguard the Monroe doctrine failed to-day.

The French and English delegates, who dominated the conference, pleaded that the subject was too far-reaching for quick action, while the Chinese protested that it too vitally affected them.

Mr. Straus proposed an addition to article 10, providing that should two States threaten war on each other the nearest great power "in the first instance" was obligated to step in without calling for the assistance of the other great powers. Should this power fail, then it would be a matter for the entire league's fighting forces to handle.

The British proposal that article 16 be changed to make any nation which breaks the covenant ipso facto at war with all the other members of the league, rather than merely committing an act of war, as the covenant provides, was defeated on the plea of Mr. Straus, who maintained that it conflicted with the Constitution of the United States. Whereupon the other delegates said they were glad to drop the matter as they were unwilling to arouse further feeling in the United States.

The French and British societies presented many proposed changes, but those agreed upon were relatively unimportant.

—

LEAGUE OF NATIONS INDORSED BY BRYAN—FORMER SECRETARY, HOWEVER, FINDS SOME FAULT AND PROPOSES CHANGES—BIG STEP TOWARD PEACE—WOULD PRESERVE MONROE DOCTRINE, INCREASE UNITED STATES VOTE, AND LIMIT AUTHORITY OF GENERAL COUNCIL.

WASHINGTON, March 11.

William Jennings Bryan issued a statement here to-night indorsing the league of nations but suggesting amendments to the proposed constitution which, among other things, would preserve specifically the Monroe doctrine, enlarge the proportionate voting power of the United States, and make it clear that each member nation might decide for itself whether it would support decrees of the league's general council.

While pointing to imperfections, Mr. Bryan argued that they should not be allowed to lead to rejection of the plan, declaring that risks to be run in accepting the league were less than those involved in rejection and returning "to the old ways of blood and slaughter."

Mr. Bryan dictated the statement from his sick bed at the home of friends, where he has been confined for nearly three weeks. He said the league of nations idea, "the greatest step toward peace in a thousand years," was taken from the 30 arbitration treaties negotiated by the United States while he was Secretary of State. It was not to be expected, he said, that so great an idea would be made perfect in detail in so short a time, and added that while President Wilson "had done the best he could" he would be helped by intelligent and friendly criticism from the American public.

MR. BRYAN'S STATEMENT.

The statement follows:

"The league of nations is the greatest step toward peace in a thousand years. The idea of substituting reason for force in the settlement of international disputes is in itself an epoch-making advance. The constitution of the league as announced provides for three things which constitute in themselves an advantage the importance of which can scarcely be estimated. Deliberation before the war, the investigation of all disputes, of their kind and character, before hostilities begin. This almost ends war. The idea is taken from the 30 treaties negotiated by the United States with three-quarters of the world. Our Nation, therefore, gives to the peace league its greatest piece of machinery. Second, the reduction of armaments will make it impossible for a nation to prepare for war without notifying the world of its intention. Third, the abolition of secret treaties, which will do much to prevent the combinations which lead to war. If the league of nations did nothing more than provide for these three things, our Nation would be justified in supporting it to the utmost.

"It is not to be expected that so great an idea as the league of nations would be made perfect in detail in so short a time. There are defects that should be corrected, and the fullest discussion of proposed amendments should be invited. The newspapers of Great Britain, France, and Italy are not backward in the expression of their views as to changes that should be made. Why should the American people be silent? Ours is the Nation most influential in the league and the most powerful, because most disinterested. Its people should help, by free and frank discussion, to perfect the league. The President has done the best he could, but he will be aided by intelligent criticism from those friendly to the idea.

PROPOSES AMENDMENTS.

"I venture to point out certain amendments that should, in my judgment, be made in the interest of a stronger and better league. First, the basis of representation is not fair to the United States. A comparison of voting strength will show that while our Nation is the most powerful in the combination, whether measured by population, wealth, or moral influence, it has no larger vote than nations much inferior in population, wealth, and influence. This inequality ought, if possible, be corrected, for justice is the only foundation upon which any institution can rest in permanent security.

"Second, the terms of admission to nations that may desire to join hereafter are not fair. To require a two-thirds vote to admit a new nation suggests the social club, where a few blackballs may keep out an uncongenial applicant. The world league is for the world. The President has well said that our Nation is not interested in a league unless all nations are in it. The qualification for admission ought to be fixed, and then it ought to be made as easy as possible for those who are qualified to gain admission. Under no circumstances should the consent of more than a majority be required for the admission of any qualified nation.

FINDS DRAFT INDEFINITE.

"The faults of the constitution are found to be in its indefiniteness rather than in things positively objectionable. For instance, it is not stated with sufficient clearness that the Monroe doctrine is preserved. Our Nation is not asking to be permitted to assist in the settlement of European disputes, and therefore it ought not to be asked to give up its paramount influence in the Western Hemisphere as a condition precedent to its entry into the league. Then, too, it is not stated with sufficient clearness that a league member is not required to become a mandatory. It ought to be definitely stated that a nation asked to become a mandatory is at liberty to accept or decline. Again, it should be made clear that the league is not to interfere in the internal affairs of the nations belonging to the league. The league is for the settlement of international disputes, not for the adjustment of differences between a nation and its own people.

"Another matter that should be made clear—and nothing can be more important than this—is that each nation has a right to decide for itself whether it will undertake the things advised by the general council. The language of the constitution, while not definite, would seem to indicate that no nation is required to furnish force to back up a decision of the council. But no doubt should be left on this subject. This matter can not afford to allow a council in which it has so small a voice to carry it into war against its will. Our people will have as much sense when the time comes to act as they have now, and they will have more light to guide them. When the emergency arises and they understand all the circumstances and conditions, they may be willing to assist by force, but they can not decide in advance or call a council to decide for them.

OPPOSES COMPULSORY BOYCOTT.

"The constitution of the league would seem to imply the right of the council to compel the declaration of an economic boycott by the members of the league. This is not quite so serious as the declaration of war, but economic boycott is likely to develop into a war, and an economic boycott may be pecuniarily advantageous to the nations that want to declare it. Our interests may not be identical in this respect, and we ought to have a right to say at the time whether we would declare such a boycott.

"I venture to suggest that the scope of the league's work might well be extended beyond what is now contemplated. A substitute for war must be able to deal with every situation that can become a cause of war. One of the most fruitful causes of war has been the necessity for expansion. Growing nations, feeling the necessity for more room, have often gone to war on some clumsy pretext when the real purpose has been to secure territory for an increasing population. The right to live is one of the inalienable rights. It is a primal right that must be recognized in nations as well as individuals.

TO BRING IN NEW TERRITORY.

"Nations exercise the right of taking unused land and distributing it among those who need it. So if the league of nations is to substitute reason for war it must be able to deal with claims that are made for the waste places of the earth. A nation feeling a need for more territory should be able to go before the league and present its claims and point out the territory which it can use to advantage. The council should consider the claim and advise it, and the force of public opinion should be used to secure such an adjustment of equities as would afford a peaceable means of securing needed territory.

"Such adjustments could be made the easier if the league indorsed the proposition that any nation extending its sovereignty over new territory should stand ready to purchase the property of residents who do not desire to remain under the new sovereignty. The resident does not go with the land. He has rights independent and superior to the right of the land. If, against his will, he is brought under new sovereignty, he ought to be able to sell his property without loss, and choose a sovereignty of his own like.

"I have suggested what seemed to me to be desirable changes, some being modifications, some being merely more explicit statements. I conclude, as I began, that while we should endeavor to make the league as nearly perfect as possible, we should not allow its imperfections to lead to its rejection. We must take risks no matter whether we accept the league or reject it. The risks that we take in accepting it are less than the risks we take if we reject it and turn back to the old ways of blood and slaughter. God grant that those who are intrusted with the launching of this great work may have the wisdom to so purge it of selfishness and greed and so infuse into it the spirit of the Prince of Peace as to make it the end of war."

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

[Interview with Senator GORE, The Daily Oklahoman.]

It would be a tragedy worse than war if nothing came out of this war which even tends to minimize the causes, multiply the substitutes, and moderate the horrors and sorrows of war. As to that end all are agreed. As to the best means of attaining that end there will be a diversity of views and there should be the greatest liberality of discussion. Free discussion is the best crucible in which to separate the gold from the ore. When the 13 original States ratified the Constitution of the United States, they recommended more than 150 amendments. Twelve amendments were submitted by the First Congress, 10 of which were adopted. That was a method sanctioned alike by statesmanship and by common sense. Ex-President Taft has just suggested that the Monroe doctrine and that foreign immigration should be excepted out of the jurisdiction of this proposed league. I agree with him. American labor will never consent, no true American will ever consent, that the question of Japanese and Chinese immigration should be referred to and decided by interested aliens.

Senator OWEN and other Senators have suggested certain amendments. I have suggested a certain amendment designed to democratize war. The proposed constitution provides that before resorting to war the nations will refer their disputes to a "court of arbitration," the "executive council," or to the body of "delegates." My amendment would add "THE PEOPLE." Require each nation before resorting to war to submit the issue to the people themselves. I want the fathers and mothers whose sons are to fight these battles and die in distant lands to pass judgment upon the desirability of the war. That is democracy. I could not consent to see economic isolation apply to any country which had not voted for war. Economic isolation punishes the innocent as well as the guilty. It is little less than economic death. Take a case in point: The isolation of the United States would break practically every cotton farmer. It would break practically every bank that finances them. It would break practically every merchant that depends upon their patronage. The economic isolation of Great Britain—which could never be enforced on account of her navy—would wreck many of our own industries as well as hers.

I am not willing, through an entangling alliance or otherwise, to bind the United States in advance to take part in every war that ever happens in every quarter of the globe, without reference to our rights, our interests, and our honor. The proposed league should make this clear, that we do not surrender the independence or vacate the sovereignty of the United States. No true American is willing to tear down the Stars and Stripes, to furl the flag that makes him free, to see the Government of the people, by the people, and for the people perish from the earth. I hope to see a permanent international legislative council established. It should meet annually and should clarify, codify, and promulgate the rules and principles of international law. A permanent court of arbitration should also be established to decide justiciable questions—a court of conciliation to consider nonjusticiable questions. The enlightened opinion of mankind should be concentrated against the offending or refractory nation, and a scheme of economic isolation might be applied to the nation whose people vote for war. These would be long steps in the course of evolution. Our hope is in evolution—not in revolution. Let us not lose the jewels at our feet trying to grasp the stars above our head.

—

THE CONQUERED BANNER.

["Father Ryan" (Abram J. Ryan).]

Furl that banner, for 'tis weary;
Round its staff 'tis drooping dreary;
Furl it, fold it, it is best:
For there's not a man to wave it,
And there's not a sword to save it,
And there's not one left to lave it
In the blood which heroes gave it;
And its foes now scorn and brave it;
Furl it, hide it—let it rest.

Take that banner down, 'tis tattered;
Broken is its staff and shattered;
And the valiant hosts are scattered,
Over whom it floated high.
O! 'tis hard for us to fold it;
Hard to think there's none to hold it;
Hard that those, who once unrolled it,
Now must furl it with a sigh.

Furl that banner—furl it sadly;
Once ten thousands hailed it gladly,
And ten thousands wildly, madly,
Swore it should forever wave;
Swore that foeman's sword should never Hearts like theirs entwined dissever
Till that flag should float forever
O'er their freedom or their grave!

Furl it! for the hands that grasped it,
And the hearts that fondly clasped it,
Cold and dead are lying low;
And that banner—it is trailing!
While around it sounds the wailing
Of its people in their woe.

For, though conquered, they adore it!
Love the cold, dead hands that bore it!
Weep for those who fell before it!
Pardon those who trailed and tore it!
But, oh! wildly they deplore it,
Now who furl and fold it so.

Furl that banner! True, 'tis gory,
Yet 'tis wreathed around with glory,
And 'twill live in song and story,
Though its folds are in the dust;
For its fame on brightest pages,
Penned by poets and by sages,
Shall go sounding down the ages—
Furl its folds though now we must.

Furl that banner, softly, slowly,
Treat it gently—it is holy—
For it droops above the dead.
Touch it not—unfold it never,
Let it droop there, furled forever,
For its people's hopes are dead!

—

NEW YORK, February 26, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Americans are being asked to enter a league of nations and bind themselves to abide by its constitution forever.

Do my fellow Americans, let me ask, realize clearly the fact that the United States of America is now the richest and most powerful Nation in the world?

Do they realize clearly the fact that as a member of the "league" the United States would be only one of an "executive council" of nine nations, and that the other eight would have a common interest against us in the internationalization of our Panama Canal?

Do they realize clearly the fact that the European nations have important interests in common which we do not share, and that in these questions they would naturally stand together against us?

Do they realize, for instance, that the other eight nations are our debtors, and we are the creditor of all; that we would be one creditor in the power of eight debtors?

Are they willing to bind themselves not to increase our Army or Navy without the consent of an "executive council" controlled by the other eight—by the powers of Europe and Asia? I am not.

Are they willing thus to surrender into the hands of such a coalition of European and Asiatic powers the security upon which depends the sovereignty of the United States? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves to "preserve as against external aggression"—which means to fight for—the territorial integrity and political independence of States, little and big, in Europe, Africa, Asia, and Central and South America? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves to accept the decision of the powers of Europe and Asia in matters which relate to Mexico and the countries which surround and control our Canal Zone, and thus, in effect, to surrender the Monroe doctrine? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves not to make war in defense of our southern border or our Canal Zone without the consent of the European and Asiatic powers? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves not to make war to prevent the transfer of Magdalena Bay or Lower California to a foreign nation, if the European and Asiatic powers confirm the title of the purchaser and refuse the United States their permission to fight? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves to stop doing business at the command of the powers of Europe and Asia with any nation that those powers may determine to punish, even if it be against our will and interests? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves to surrender the control which we now exercise over the supply of arms and ammunition to Mexico, for instance, and to place that control in the hands of the European and Asiatic powers? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves to administer remote territories in Europe, Asia, or Africa as an agent of the European and Asiatic powers? I am not.

Are they willing to bind themselves to give these powers the right to direct our actions as merely an agent of these powers in the work of policing Central America, for instance, for the protection of our Panama Canal? I am not.

Finally, are they willing, have they the right, to bind themselves, their children and their children's children, to these things forever? I am not; I have not the right.

Is America so unable to care for herself that she needs must place herself under an international protectorate? Ought we not have sufficient faith in her great destiny to wish to preserve her independence?

What would have been Roosevelt's answer to these questions? I know, so should every American.

Cordially,

HENRY A. WISE WOOD.

—

[From the Washington Post, Sunday, March 9, 1919.]

MAJ. GEN. WILLIAM CROZIER DISCUSSES THE QUESTION OF TESTING THE INTERNATIONAL CONSTITUTION OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

(By Maj. Gen. William Crozier, member of the International Peace Conference of 1899 at The Hague.)

A good way to estimate the sufficiency of the new constitution of the league of nations for effecting its object of avoiding war is to apply its terms to some of the international disputes which in the past have proved too much for the powers of diplomacy and have brought the disputants into armed conflict. We can examine the probable effect of the new constitution if it had been in operation at the time of these conflicts, and can also make up our minds as to how we would have liked the results.

In 1914 I published in the North American Review an article in which I undertook to show that we would not have liked at all the probable outcome of the submission to judicial settlement of the causes of several of the wars in which the United States had been engaged, for the reason that our contentions, though just, and subsequently accepted as such by the world at large, had not been in accordance with the precedent and established order which constituted the international law of the time, and therefore could not have been granted by a judicial body.

RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR CITED.

The war in which hostilities have so recently ceased is too close to be fairly used as a test case for the new constitution. Nobody who is likely to see these lines can claim to be in an entirely judicial frame of mind in regard to its causes. But if we go as far back as the Russo-Japanese War, for instance, we can claim to be reasonably free from prejudice, and can also examine the attendant circumstances from the detached viewpoint of the outsider who had no direct interest in the quarrel.

The war arose from the mutual jealousy of Russia and Japan, each distrusting the intentions of the other with reference to the territory of Manchuria and Korea, lying between them.

Manchuria belonged to China, in regard to whose political health the rest of the world had for a good while been solicitous, while Korea was independent, but was undoubtedly very sick and senile. Neither of these nations was able to stand up for itself, and Korea was even less able than China to govern itself in the interest of its own inhabitants or to fulfill its obligations to foreign nations.

Russia had for some years since the Boxer troubles been occupying Manchuria with her troops, but under a delayed promise to get out. Japan claimed "special interests" in Korea. Under these circumstances Japan suspected Russia of an intention to permanently occupy Manchuria and to spread from there over into Korea, to the threat of her own national existence. Of what intentions Russia suspected Japan it is not so easy to say.

JAPAN'S DEMANDS ON RUSSIA.

Japan, therefore, demanded of Russia that she keep her engagement with China and withdraw her troops from Manchuria, and Russia replied that Japan had nothing to do with her affairs with China, but she would respect Japan's special interests in Korea if Japan would agree not to use Korean territory for strategic purposes; that is, presumably, would not keep troops in Korea conveniently disposed for interfering with Russia's doing in Manchuria.

Both nations evidently had designs on territory that was not their own—Russia on Manchuria and Japan on Korea—and probably both were apprehensive that the other would not stop in the territory on which it had its first designs. Not being able to come to agreement, they went to war.

If the constitution of the league of nations had been operative at the time, what could have been done under it to meet the situation and avoid the war?

WOULD ARTICLE 13 APPLY?

Under article 13 it is agreed to submit to arbitration any dispute or difficulty which the parties recognize to be suitable for such submission, but it is altogether probable that neither Russia nor Japan would have considered their quarrel which culminated in 1904 to be such a dispute.

Russia's promise to get out of Manchuria was, of course, a justiciable matter, which could have been pronounced upon by a court; but the promise was made to China and not to Japan, and it is not certain that Japan could have gotten into court on the issue. Besides, Russia knew that that particular question, if it could have been taken into court, would have been decided against her, and therefore she would not have consented to a judicial determination of it in its simple form.

Japan knew that her underlying desire to control Korea could also not be granted by a judicial body and consequently would not have found her remedy to lie in action by such a body. Indeed, she had opportunity to try for such action in that an international court had been provided for by The Hague peace conference of 1899, but there is no record of an effort on her part to resort to it.

NO NATION URGED RESORT TO COURT.

That the rest of the world agreed that judicial process would not meet the situation is evidenced by the fact that no nation advised resort to the court, although the tender of such advice was a duty which they had assumed as signatories of the convention for the peaceful settlement of international disputes. Article 27 of the convention reads in part:

"The signatory powers consider it their duty in case a serious dispute threatens to break out between two or more of them, to remind these latter that the permanent court of arbitration is open to them." It was adopted as a measure of moral pressure to induce resort to arbitration when attempts to secure agreement to compulsory arbitration of certain classes of cases had failed.

The situation, therefore, would seem to have called for action under article 15 of the constitution, in which it is agreed that any dispute likely to lead to rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration, shall be referred to the executive council of the league; and it is pertinent to examine what the council could have done in the way of a solution which would have satisfied the sense of right of the world at large, and would therefore have justified support of the league.

INTEREST OF WORLD CONSIDERED.

With respect to the withdrawal of the military forces of Russia from Manchuria, the task of the council would have been much more difficult than that of a court. It is easy enough to decide that the presence of Russia in Manchuria was not legal, but it is not so easy to decide that it was not in the interest of good government and social order at that time, and therefore best for the world at large, and even for the Chinamen in the occupied territory. If the Chinese government of Manchuria had been bad enough and oppressive enough of its own people, it is conceivable that the council might have considered the only really satisfactory conclusion to lie in the termination of the Chinese sovereignty.

But since Manchuria has carried on under China since the war in a manner which the world has not found intolerable, it is probably that the council would not have found such a radical measure as the withdrawal of Manchuria from Chinese sovereignty necessary, and could, therefore, with reasonable assurance have decided upon the evacuation of the territory by the Russian troops. But there would have remained the question of Korea, and with it the probability that this country could not have continued under its corrupt, feeble, and altogether inefficient government with such maintenance of tolerable living conditions as to justify the council in advising the continuance of the status quo.

OUTCOME OF WAR SATISFACTORY.

In trying to make up our minds as to the possibility of a satisfactory outcome through the intervention of the council, we can not do better than to take the outcome of the war as about as good a conclusion as could have been reached, since it has resulted in conditions good enough to survive until the present day. This outcome was, in the main, the withdrawal of the Russian forces from Manchuria, and the agreement between Russia and Japan that they would carry on their respective enterprises in Manchuria with decent respect for the sovereignty of China; the recognition of Japan's special interests in Korea, which immediately resulted in a protectorate, and the transfer—as about the only spoils of war—of the lease of Port Arthur and the Laotung peninsula from Russia to Japan. As part of the outcome may be included the complete annexation of Korea to Japan, under the name of "Chosen," which occurred about five years later.

The stable results of the war, therefore, were recognition and respect for China's sovereignty over Manchuria; substitution of the orderly Government of Japan for the decrepit Government of Korea in Chosen, and the transfer of Port Arthur. Would the league have been able to bring about so good a result?

COULD LEAGUE DECIDE PROBLEM?

There appears to be no doubt that, under the proposed constitution, the league could have competently directed the final actual outcome with respect to Manchuria. But with respect to Port Arthur and Korea, the power to produce the actual result does not seem to exist. Russia, Japan, and China may be assumed to have been members of the league if it had been alive. The membership of Korea is much more doubtful, but if she had been a member the undertaking of article 10 to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league would have prevented her annexation to Japan, or even the protectorate which immediately followed the war.

Article 19 provides for the administration under mandate from the league of certain backward countries by more advanced nations, as trustees responsible to the league for the government of these backward countries in the interest of their inhabitants; but the countries are limited by the terms of the article to those colonies and territories which, as a consequence of the late European war, have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them; and the article is apparently inserted only to cover the cases of the former colonies and other dependencies of Germany and her allies, and is not intended to be of general application.

KOREAN QUESTION NOT COVERED.

So, even if Korea had not been a member of the league, the constitution does not seem to provide for her administration in any way by Japan. The difficulty about the transfer of Port Arthur is not so important.

Here then is a limit to the power of the league under its constitution. It does not provide for the assumption, by an advanced Nation, of the government of a backward country, in which life, property, and other human rights are not secure, and the people are not sufficiently intelligent or instructed to compel a government in their own interest from their tyrannical or incapable governing officials. In the case in point the war brought about a state of affairs in regard to Korea which was better for all concerned, including the Koreans and the world at large, than the league would have had power to produce, unless its powers under the proposed constitution had been exceeded.

Let us look into another case. Our war of 1812 with Great Britain was undertaken on account of two causes: improper interference with our sea-borne commerce and the impressment of seamen into the British service after visitation and search of our vessels. The first cause was voluntarily discontinued before the commencement of hostilities, so that the war was actually fought for the second cause alone.

The right of a belligerent to impress into its naval service its own nationals, found upon visitation and search on board neutral vessels, has been examined by the late Hon. John W. Foster and the late Admiral Mahan, who both concluded that the practice was in accordance with long-established precedent, and had not before our protest been called in question. The need of England for sailors, fighting for her life and making essential use of her sea power in prosecuting the Napoleonic war, was almost desperate and not to be lightly given up, while the long-continued practice of impressment of nationals had not theretofore occasioned distressing incidents because there had been no great difficulty in distinguishing the nationals of the visiting vessel from the crew of the vessel visited, who were usually of a different race.

The practice was based on the doctrine of the inalienability of citizenship, which we ourselves admitted at the time and for some years thereafter.

NEW CONDITION HAD ARISEN.

Now, however, a new condition had arisen, in which there had come into existence a nation formed of the same stock as the one claiming the right of impressment, and the practice gave rise to errors and hardships which the United States considered intolerable. The interests were directly conflicting. Those of England were bound up with the old order, while those of the United States called for a change. Both sets of interests were of the greatest importance to the respective parties. What relief could have been afforded by the league of nations, supposing it to have been in existence under the proposed constitution?

England evidently would have been willing to invoke article 13 and submit the matter to judicial settlement, since all the precedent was on her side; but the United States needed a new rule to fit new conditions and therefore could not have considered the case one suitable for such submission. The only possible chance for the United States would have been in submission of the matter to the executive council, under article 15, or to the body of delegates. Now, what could either body have done in the premises for the relief of the United States? If the conclusion had been that the existing law and practice needed no change the matter would have been simple enough and there would have been nothing for the United States to do but give up its contention and submit to the continued impressment of its sailors.

THINKS COUNCIL WOULD LACK POWER.

But if the council or the body of delegates had considered that the position of the United States was right and that the law, although clear, was wrong, it is not easy to see what they could have done about it.

To change the law would have required legislative action, and an examination of the proposed constitution does not disclose legislative powers granted by it to either the executive council or the body of delegates.

Mr. Taft has not failed to note the necessity for legislative powers for the league, if it is to have a chance of completely serving its purposes, and has included in his scheme a general congress, saying, "All nations should be represented in the general congress, but the representation should be determined by the charter members in accordance with the population, political importance, and responsibility of each applicant. The congress would enact and codify, subject to the approval of the nations, international law and adopt other general rules of policy for the conduct of the league."

MUST POSSESS THREE FUNCTIONS.

Hence we see that in two cases of past wars the proposed league would not have been able to meet the situation and could not have brought about as good a result as the wars did for lack of sufficient power granted by its constitution, and we run into an obstacle which we might have reasoned, a priori, that we would encounter in endeavoring to fit the league into history.

The league, of course, is an attempt at federation of the world to the extent necessary to avoid war and must have the functions which all federations, to be effective, must possess, viz, legislative, executive, and judicial. That is, the body of delegates must, with reference to all subjects which might bring about war, be a superlegislature, able not only to codify but to enact, and hence to change the rules under which the constituent nations are living together.

And this is in accordance with experience, in that the only method which has been found of suppressing wars is to federate the warring elements under a common government, as individuals have been federated in municipalities and small political divisions have been federated in larger ones; examples being the union of dukedoms in the Kingdom of France, and of England and Scotland in Great Britain, in each of which a whole series of wars was brought to an end.

LEGISLATIVE POWER ESSENTIAL.

If we are not willing to endow the league with these legislative powers it is scarcely worth while forming it on the lines proposed, for history shows that without these powers there would be many important cases of international dispute which it would be unable to meet.

Now, federation can not be effected without the surrender of sovereignty. A federation for a limited purpose might entail only a limited surrender; but the surrender would be comprehensive enough to include all those subjects which are likely to lead nations into war, and the member nations would be under engagement not only to submit to all decisions of the court of international justice and the administrative body, but to accept such new rules and laws as the international legislature might consider it necessary to enact. The power which such a league would have to exercise, in order to be effective, would therefore be very great, and the decision to create it and to endow it with such power would be a momentous one.

Mr. Taft admits the surrender of sovereignty, but maintains that there is nothing new in that, since everybody and every nation surrenders sovereignty and independence every time it enters into any kind of engagement.

The argument, however, is not against the surrender of sovereignty as a principle, but against a greater surrender than is warranted by the advantages to be expected and the assurance that the advantages will be realized.

FEDERATION IN UNITED STATES.

The States of this country are federated into a union to which the surrender of sovereignty is very great; but the surrender is made under circumstances of high confidence in the central government, as being one in which the powers are exercised by a legislature and an administration composed of representatives of a homogeneous people, speaking the same language, looking back on the same history, and animated by the same ideals, and by courts which are guided by principles acceptable to Anglo-Saxons.

With all these safeguards a considerable number of the States found themselves, at a juncture, without confidence in the Union in regard to a matter which they considered of vital importance to them and made a herculean effort to free themselves from the federation; which shows the difficulty of satisfactory federation, even under favorable conditions.

DISCUSS INTERNATIONAL COURT.

Probably the least risky element of the proposed league is the court of international justice. It is the one which the nations 20 years ago reached the point of providing for and recommending resort to. But it would be taking a great deal for granted to assume that an international court would be the same kind of a judicial body that we are accustomed to in the United States. We know that the continental European conception of a court is different from that which we have inherited, and a court comprising on its bench Asiatics, Africans, and South Americans might be so different in the ideals and principles by which it would be guided from our own courts as to constitute a really, to us, unknown kind of tribunal.

There would be a real risk, therefore, in agreeing in advance to submit all cases to it.

The question revolves itself into one of the degree of confidence which we can have in the proposed league, the power of which over matters of the most serious relations between nations would be very great. Contests and other risks of individuals and communities have been considered so undesirable that human beings have consented to associate themselves for their avoidance, clear up to this point of the association of nations, where they have stopped.

JOINS HETEROGENEOUS ELEMENTS.

The components joining themselves together in the unions have had confidence enough in their associates to take the risks of federation and the restriction of independence entailed for the advantages to be gained. But in the step which is now before us we are asked to trust to a combination of more heterogeneous elements than we have heretofore had experience with and in regard to matters whose importance is not transcended by that of anything with which we have to deal. It is worth while to look very hard for a shorter step and for a way to at least approach our final aim more gradually.

I share fully the feeling that it would be not only deplorable but would constitute an arraignment of our intelligence if the united wisdom of the allies could not lead us, after the terrible experience which the world has been through, to a position of security against its repetition in the least degree advanced beyond that which the world was occupying at the beginning of the great war; but has anything occurred since the peace conference of 1899 to justify us in going so far beyond what was unsuccessfully attempted at that time as to unreservedly agree to submit all differences, however important to us and of whatever kind, either to an international court or an international council, and to abide by the result if our opponent does?

NATIONS REFUSED IN 1899.

The principal nations refused in 1899 to bind themselves to submit even limited classes of cases to arbitration. The best that could be done was to provide for a court and then to agree to advise disputants to resort to it; but we have seen above one case in which nobody thought it worth while to follow this agreement, and other cases could be cited.

Such cases show the frequent inadequacy of the judicial process and illustrate in consequence the enormous power which must be exercised by the executive council or the body of delegates in order to meet these cases, or the failure of provision to meet them if the league is not to be endowed with such power.

The most dramatic international events which have occurred since 1899 have been the Russo-Japanese War, the Balkan wars, and the great war now still unended. Has the conduct of the parties which brought these wars about been such as to greatly increase the confidence in the fairness, consideration, and judicial quality of all the nations concerned in them, which in 1899 was not sufficient to induce the signatory powers of the convention for the peaceful settlement of international disputes to impose upon themselves any restrictions of discretion in the handling of future disputes?

WORLD REASON AND PROGRESS.

It would require considerable condonation to admit that the world has demonstrated such progress in sweet reasonableness as to call for a trustful submission of our destinies to other hands which 20 years ago we refused to consider.

But as to something less radical, a very useful step is taken in article 11 of the constitution, which provides that "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations." This engagement would place the member nations in a very different attitude toward a controversy threatening to become acute from that which they have hitherto occupied.

A promise to take cognizance is not an agreement to take action, but it is an admission that the promising nation has a duty and a responsibility in the premises and would require a reason for standing aside and allowing the controversy to go on instead of calling, as at present, for a justification for stepping in and helping to prevent its continuance, and endeavoring, with insistence, to settle it peacefully.

MIGHT MAKE LANGUAGE STRONGER.

The language might be made somewhat stronger, so as to require the member nations to promise that they would make the matter their own and use their resources for coercion, unless they should find at the time and declare that the interests of their people and their duty compelled them to abstain.

If we had been under such engagement Col. Roosevelt could not have written, in the autumn of 1914, speaking of the violation of Belgium: "We have not the smallest responsibility for what has befallen her, and I am sure the sympathy of this country for the suffering of the men, women, and children of Belgium is very real.

"Nevertheless the sympathy is compatible with full acknowledgment of the unwisdom of our uttering a single word of official protest unless we are prepared to make that protest effective; and only the clearest and most urgent national duty would ever justify us in deviating from our rule of neutrality and noninterference." And Mr. Wilson could not, later in the same year, have spoken of the European conflict as "a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes can not touch us."

WOULD OBLIGATE NATIONS.

Article 11, even if reinforced as suggested, would involve no infringement of sovereignty or of ultimate discretion, but it would put upon each member nation an obligation of conscience to intervene effectively, upon occasion, in aid of the suppression of an aggressor, or to justify its abstention by a declaration which it would be willing to submit to the public opinion of mankind, and subsequently to face itself upon its own record with self-respect. The adoption of such an article would have been impossible in 1899.

Another material step which could not have been taken in 1899, and just as certainly not in 1907, would be an engagement on the part of the signatory powers of any convention to take cognizance in concert of the violation of any of the terms of the convention, whether they should themselves be the parties injured by the violation or not. As in the previous suggestion the engagement need not be any more specific, since it is hardly conceivable that, having assumed such a duty, great nations would shirk effective action, and since, also, it can be admitted that the sense of national duty and of high obligation would be as keen in the presence of a crisis as at the time of signing the convention.

URGES COLLECTIVE RESPONSIBILITY.

The important thing is to secure a collective assumption of responsibility for the enforcement of what might be called an international statute; after that, the means and method of enforcement might be left to the judgment and the conscience of the signatory powers, as informed by the circumstances of the occasion demanding enforcement. This, again, would involve a minimum of surrender of freedom of action.

If such an engagement had been in force at the outbreak of the present war the violation of the neutrality of Belgium, in contravention of the laws and customs of war on land, as adopted at The Hague conference of 1899 and modified in 1907, could not have taken place without either action by the neutral signatory powers or a declaration, which would have been very hard to make, that the circumstances did not call for action.

I am using these illustrations in the belief that any kind of association of nations ought to be such as, if it had been in existence in the summer of 1914, and all the facts now demonstrated had been known, would have led the whole association into coercion of the central European powers from their course.

LEAGUE'S FUTURE PROSPECTS.

We can sum up, then, by saying that the league of nations, under its proposed constitution, would not have been able to deal effectively with certain familiar crises in the past, and would not be able to deal with those which are sure to arise in the future, because of the failure of the grant of legislative power.

This failure leaves the league without power to meet a situation in which, through the progress of the world, the previous precedent and practice—that is, the law—have become an anachronism, and need change, but change is resisted by a nation whose interest is bound up with the old order.

But to confer this legislative power would be an enormous grant, and would call for a degree of confidence far exceeding that which the nations refused to exhibit at the peace conference of 1899, when they declined to bind themselves in advance to resort even to judicial process.

CHANGES ARE SUGGESTED.

We are not, however, left without a program because of the dangers attending the one which has been proposed. A league might be constituted about as sketched in the first seven articles of the proposed constitution, which prescribe its general form, amended in detail so as to meet the views of the lawyers; and, without erecting it into a supergovernment within its sphere, the member nations might engage, as in article 11, to concern themselves as a league with any threat to the peace of the world, and to take any steps which at the time of the threat they should judge to be called for.

Article 19, concerning mandatories, might be modified so as to make it the duty of the league to consider the case of any backward country, unable to govern itself in the interest of its own people, and to determine what steps, if any, might be called for to insure therein the necessary conditions of humanity and order.

Articles 8 and 9, relating to armaments and the manufacture of munitions of war, might better be omitted, as covering subjects with reference to which nations would be reluctant to commit themselves until after some experience with the operation of the league.

OPPOSE THREE ARTICLES.

Article 10, guaranteeing territorial integrity, is unwise and might bind the league to perpetuation of a distinctly undesirable condition. Articles 12 and 13, containing promises as to arbitration and refraining from war, are unsafe, in that they involve a long step forward from the state of confidence which has hitherto obtained. Article 15 prescribes a meritorious effort to bring into actual existence the court of international justice which the peace conference of 1907 provided for, but upon the plan of whose formation the nations have been unable to get together. The effort should be continued.

Articles 15 and 16 are in the same category as articles 12 and 13. Article 17, relating to the application of articles 12, 13, 15, and 16 to nations not members of the league, would be unnecessary without these articles, and might be considered as sufficiently covered by article 11, in which it is agreed to take cognizance of any threatening condition.

The articles relating to trade and commerce, to labor, to the control of existing international bureaus, to the registration of treaties, to the revision of obsolete treaties, to the supersedure of obligations inconsistent with the league's constitution and to amendments to the Constitution, though important, are not essential in a general discussion of the fundamental scheme.

POSSIBILITIES OF LEAGUE.

A league under such a constitution would be provided with machinery for considering any kind of case that the proposed league is intended to deal with and for reaching a conclusion as to what should be done, and it would maintain the machinery in existence. It would not be a government with legislative, executive, and judicial powers and with forces at its disposal for carrying its conclusions into effect, and it would not have sovereignty over the member nations, who would retain their own essentially unimpaired.

In an emergency calling for action by the league the member nations would be under no binding engagement to follow the right course, but they would be under binding engagement to ascertain it by the best agents whom they could appoint to the task. Thereafter their action would be governed by their sense of national duty and obligation, as viewed in the light of the facts developed by their representatives.

In the case of an acute international dispute, threatening war, they could not say, as did the President of the present war, "With its causes and its objects we are not concerned." They would have a distinct and assumed duty in any grave crisis or threatened crisis and an intense incentive to take a proper course.

RESULTS TO LEAGUE MEMBERS.

A binding engagement in advance to follow a given course in assumed circumstances could have no other effect on a nation facing an important emergency as a member of a league and pledged to take cognizance of it than to force it to a kind of action which it might otherwise deem inappropriate at the time.

Under this less radical constitution the nations associated in the war against the central European powers could proceed with the settlement of all the terms of peace, including the formation of the new nations, with just as good assurance that their arrangements would be permanently cared for as could be had from the constitution proposed. Or they could proceed without forming any league, feeling certain that, after a settlement of peace terms, there would be no difficulty in securing the serious attention of all nations to a plan of association which, while less dangerous than the one to which they have been asked to commit themselves, would call upon all to acknowledge a burden of responsibility with reference to the well-being of the world.

JAPAN OUT OF LEAGUE—RACE DISCRIMINATION BAR TO HER JOINING, WARNING OF ISHII—COOLIE IMMIGRATION AN ISSUE—FUTURE MIGHT SEE JAPAN, RUSSIA, AND GERMANY IN ALLIANCE—SECRET TREATIES BETWEEN TOKYO AND PEKING CONCEDE NIPPON PREDOMINANCE IN CHINA—LANSING RECOGNIZES RIGHTS IN PACTS WITH ISHII—ACCEPTANCE OF LEAGUE CONSTITUTION WOULD ABROGATE TREATIES.

(BY GEORGE ROTHWELL BROWN.)

[Copyright, 1919, by the Washington Post Co.]

Japan has given notice that she will not join the league of nations as it is now framed.

The compact must be radically amended if Japan is to become a member, and those amendments would bring the league into direct conflict with the principles of Americanism to the preservation of which a sufficient number of Senators to defeat the adoption of the league have pledged themselves.

If Japan should not join the league the only great nations outside of the league would be Germany, Russia, and Japan, and all of them would be in the position of outcasts. This reflection gives rise to the fear that if Japan should be driven into this position the logical consequence would be an alliance between Japan, Russia, and Germany.

CHINA WOULD BE FORCED IN.

It would be an alliance of unbroken geographical extent stretching from the Pacific Ocean to the Baltic and the North Sea. At either end would be powerfully organized peoples accustomed to the discipline of despotism, and, from the point of view of efficiency, among the foremost in the world. In between would lie a vast country, rich in natural resources and without a government. To this alliance China would be bound politically and geographically. In material wealth, in population, and in location, this alliance would be potentially of equal power with the league of nations.

One of the considerations which renders it impossible for Japan to enter the league of nations touches a point of vital economic and political concern to the United States.

IMMIGRATION QUESTION RISES.

The amendments demanded by Japan are that an article be inserted in the league constitution specifically declaring that there shall be no race discrimination between nations of the league. This would open the way for a demand by Japan that its people shall be admitted to all other countries on terms of equality. The immigration restrictions against Japanese coolies would have to be removed.

Under the league constitution Japan could force an inquiry by the executive council, and if its recommendations should be adverse to the United States this country would be compelled to remove all barriers against Japanese immigration.

The United States could not object to such a recommendation of the executive council without coming under article 16, which declares that any nation disregarding its covenant "shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league."

WARNING BY VISCOUNT ISHII.

The Japanese ambassador, Viscount Ishii, in a speech in New York last night of great international and diplomatic significance, confirmed the warnings uttered by Count Okuma, last of the genro or "elder statesmen," that Japan would demand removal of race discrimination as a condition of her joining the league of nations. In the face of such a plain and unmistakable intimation of Japan's determination to insist upon this point, the assertion by advocates of the league that immigration is a domestic question falls to the ground.

It is necessary to read between the lines of Ambassador Ishii's speech, which is couched in the most conservative language, to see the deep significance of his words.

"The constitution for a league of nations," he says, "for which the eminent representatives of international justice and peace are now working in Paris with their untiring energy, would not be worthy of the great world conference if it omitted the necessary provision for the remedy of this conspicuous injustice arising out of the race prejudice."

LEAGUE ABROGATES OLD TREATIES.

But the league of nations must be examined in the light of two secret treaties between Japan and China, herewith published for the first time, and in the light of the Lansing-Ishii agreement, between the United States and Japan dated November 6, 1917.

In that agreement the United States recognizes what is in effect a "Monroe doctrine" for Japan in the Orient, the United States by its terms recognizing "that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous."

Article 25 of the proposed constitution of the league of nations reads:

"The high contracting parties severally agree that the present covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and solemnly engage that they will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof."

CONCEDE JAPAN'S INTERESTS.

The Lansing-Ishii agreement most certainly does concede to Japan our recognition of Japan's special interest in a particular part of the world. The league of nations recognizes no such special interests, and therefore the Lansing-Ishii agreement must be considered as "inconsistent with the terms thereof."

The entrance into the league of nations by this Government would place us in the position of consenting to the abrogation of a solemn agreement reached between the United States and another power. This agreement being Japan's "Monroe doctrine," which differs from the American Monroe doctrine in that it rests upon a written agreement and not upon the expressed will of a people, Japan can not surrender that policy for membership in a world league.

YIELD PREDOMINANCE IN CHINA.

The secret treaties between Japan and China give to the former Government that position of predominance in China which is recognized by the United States in the Lansing-Ishii agreement. These secret treaties antedate the Lansing-Ishii agreement by more than two years. They are exceedingly significant in the light of yesterday's cable from Paris stating that the supreme council of the peace conference has virtually decided to include in the preliminary treaty of peace a requirement that Germany shall relinquish her leasehold of Tsingtao and all other holds on the Shantung Peninsula.

In entering the war and taking over the German positions referred to, Japan did so with the understanding that she was taking them for China, under the conditions under which they had been held by Germany—that is, under a 99-year lease.

CONFIRMS JAPANESE RIGHTS.

One treaty specifically pledges China "to recognize all matters that may be agreed upon between Japan and Germany respecting the disposition of all the rights, interests, and concessions which Germany possesses vis-a-vis China in Shantung." China thus recognizes Japan's right to these leases for 99 years.

Here is a confirmation by China of all Japanese rights acquired, or that may be acquired, from Germany. These rights, supported by American recognition of Japanese "special interests in China" under the Lansing-Ishii agreement, are of such vast importance to Japan that their surrender forms another barrier to the acceptance by Japan of the league of nations, in addition to that of racial discrimination.

SEEDS OF CONFLICT SEEN.

Article 24 of the league constitution is also worthy of analysis in this connection. This article makes it the "right of the body of delegates from time to time to advise the reconsideration by State members of the league of treaties which have become inapplicable, and of international conditions of which the continuance may endanger the peace of the world."

This article would make it possible at any time for the delegate from Timbuctoo to propose an investigation of the relations between Japan and China, which relations are already guaranteed to the supposed satisfaction of Japan by treaties with China, an agreement with the United States, and the actual physical possession of the Shantung Peninsula.

In view of the position of Japan toward the league of nations, these treaties and Ambassador Ishii's speech last night are of great interest.

TREATIES CONCLUDED MAY 25, 1915.

There are two treaties concluded between Japan and China on May 25, 1915. The one is respecting the Province of Shantung and the other is in respect of south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia. Thirteen notes exchanged on the same date are attached to the treaties.

The engagements made by Japan and China and concessions granted by China under these treaties and exchanged notes are as follows:

"1. Engagement by China to recognize all matters that may be agreed upon between Japan and Germany respecting the disposition of all the rights, interests, and concessions which Germany possesses vis-à-vis China in Shantung.

"2. In case China undertakes the construction of a railway connecting Chefoo or Lungkow with the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway she shall, in the event of Germany's surrendering her right of providing capital for the Chefoo Weisien Railway line, enter into negotiations with Japanese capitalists for the purpose of financing the said undertaking.

"3. Opening, of China's own accord, as nearly as possible, suitable cities and towns in Shantung for the residence and trade of foreigners.

"4. Inalienability of any territory within or along the coast of Shantung.

"5. Extension of the lease terms of Port Arthur and Dalren and the terms relating to the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Moukden Railway to a period of 99 years, respectively.

RIGHTS OF INNER MONGOLIA.

"6. Permission to Japanese in Manchuria to lease land necessary either for erecting buildings for commercial and industrial uses or for agricultural purposes.

"7. Right of Japanese subjects to enter, travel, and reside in south Manchuria and to carry on business of various kinds—commercial, industrial, and otherwise.

"8. Permission of joint undertakings in inner Mongolia of Japanese and Chinese peoples in agriculture and industries auxiliary thereto.

"9. Opening, of China's own accord, of suitable cities and towns in eastern inner Mongolia for the residence and trade of foreigners.

"10. If, in future, China grants to foreign capitalists, in matters relating to railway loans, more advantageous terms than those in the existing agreements, the Kirin-Changchun Railway loan agreemeent shall be further revised.

"11. Permission to Japanese subjects of certain mines in south Manchuria.

PRIORITY OF JAPANESE CAPITAL.

"12. Priority of Japanese capital, when foreign capital is required, to build railways in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia; and also priority of Japanese capital when China proposes to raise foreign loan on the security of the taxes of the above-mentioned regions (excluding salt gabelle and customs duties which are already made securities for the loans of the central government).

"13. If in future China desires to employ foreign advisers and instructors on political, financial, military, and police affairs in south Manchuria preference will be given to Japanese.

EXCLUDING FOREIGN CAPITAL.

"14. Chinese engagement not to confiscate or nationalize the Han-Yeh-Ping Co. with which Japanese capitalists have very close relations. Further engagement by China to approve the agreement that may be concluded between the company and Japanese capitalists for its joint undertaking, and not to permit the company to contract any foreign loan other than Japanese.

"15. China will in no case permit a foreign power to build a shipyard, military coaling station, naval station, or any other military establishment, nor to build the above-mentioned establishments with foreign capital.

PROVISION FOR KIAOCHOW.

"16. Japan declares to return to China the leased territory of Kiaochow Bay, if upon the conclusion of the present war the Japanese Government should be given an absolutely free disposal of the said territory, subject to the following conditions:

"(1) Opening of the whole of Kiaochow as commercial port.

"(2) Establishment of a Japanese settlement in the locality to be designated by the Japanese Government.

"(3) Establishment, if desired by the powers, of an international settlement.

"(4) Arrangements to be made before the return of the territory is effected, between Japan and China, with respect to the disposal of German public establishments and properties, and with regard to the other conditions and procedures."

—

RACE PREJUDICE UNREMEDIED IN CONSTITUTION OF LEAGUE—WARNING OF VISCOUNT ISHII.

NEW YORK, March 14.

Warning that the peace conference must take action to eliminate race prejudice was sounded by Viscount Ishii, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, in a speech before the Japan Society here last night.

Elimilation of this issue, the Ambassador asserted, would effectively contribute to the foundation of permanent peace. He pleaded for application of a proper remedy to remove a fruitful cause of international discord. Viscount Ishii's address follows:

"The race prejudice has been a fruitful source of discontent and uneasiness among nations in the past, and promises to be an increasingly disturbing element for the peace of the future, unless a proper remedy be brought upon the matter at this opportune moment.

"If the foremost object of the great conference now sitting in Paris is to establish a solid and permanent peace on earth, nothing would more effectively contribute to the attainment of this object than the timely elimination of this cause of international discord. In this world war the Asiatics have fought side by side with the Anglo-Saxons, Latins, and Slavs against the common foe, the Teutons, Turks, and Bulgars. The single and unmingled object of the war was the maintenance of international justice and the establishment of durable peace.

RACE ISSUE ALONE UNSETTLED.

"No consideration of racial feeling entered in the supreme decision for the sacrifices of blood and treasure on the part of any of the allied or associated powers. And now when this war for international justice is about to come to its happy termination, and when the world league for permanent peace is being contrived, why this question of race prejudice, race discrimination, and race humiliation should alone be left unremedied?

"When restriction or prohibition of discriminatory treatment against chattels and commodities are being adequately provided for, why should this unjust and unjustifiable discrimination against persons be allowed to remain untouched? An idea, however good, loses most of its value if only half executed.

QUESTION OF SELF-RESPECT.

"The constitution for a league of nations, for which the eminent representatives of international justice and peace are now working in Paris with their untiring energy, would not be worthy of the great world conference if it omitted the necessary provision for the remedy of this conspicuous injustice arising out of the race prejudice.

"It may be added, in order to avoid possible misunderstanding, that this question of straightening out the existing injustice of racial discrimination should be considered independently of the question of labor or immigration. The one is principally economical in its nature, while the other is essentially a question of sentiment, of legitimate pride and self-respect.

"If anyone is afraid that a stipulation introduced in the league covenant for the prohibition of any discriminate treatment on account of racial differences will necessarily bring about labor difficulties or economic troubles, that man has singularly overlooked the actual facts of international intercourse. The existing treaty between Japan and the United States guarantees to the people of Japan the right of freely entering and residing in this country. In spite of this express treaty stipulation, my Government invariably sticks to its policy of strict restriction upon the emigration of its countrymen into the United States. Why? The Japanese Government and people understand that the labor question in America constitutes an exceptional circumstance which even a solemn treaty can not stipulate away in a sweeping manner.

OBSERVE GENTLEMEN'S AGREEMENT.

"While, therefore, they must not be expected to be contented with the situation, you can depend upon the wise patience of the Japanese nation, which calmly though anxiously waits the time when, by gradual process of evolution, this difficult matter will be finally cured and settled to the mutual satisfaction of the two countries. In the meantime Japan, in her faithful adherence to the spirit of what is called gentlemen's agreement, will continue in her policy of strict and self-imposed restriction in this delicate matter of labor emigration, notwithstanding her treaty right.

"This fixed policy of Japan, as abundantly attested by her past record, will, I hope, disarm any alarmistic and unwarranted view pointing to the probability of Japan's taking advantage of the coveted article in the league constitution against racial discrimination, with the consequent relaxation in her policy of emigration restriction.

ALL UNITED FOR CIVILIZATION.

"I have no hesitation in stating that nothing will be further from Japan's thought than to hastily force the issue of the labor question in event of the league covenant being modified in accordance with her desire, i. e., upon a new article being inserted in the covenant against racial discrimination.

"In the course of the last 25 centuries we have passed through various stages of wars—the wars between tribes, the wars between races, the wars of religion, the wars of interest and ambition. The present world war has been the first instance in the history of mankind in which men and women of different nationalities, creed, and races have combined for a noble principle and lofty ideals, i. e., for the maintenance of liberty and humanity and for the promotion of justice and civilization.

DIFFERENCES SHOULD MERGE.

"This world war has done away—forever, let us hope—with the wars of domination and oppression, and the only wars we may yet have to fight in future will be the wars of antisocialism, of antibolshevism. In this forthcoming struggle people of every nationality and of every race should act in unison against the common foe, and all consideration of different creed or of different races should merge for all time and in all countries."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HENDERSON (for Mr. PHELAN):

A bill (S. 5674) for the relief of Capt. Sven Christenson, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; and

A bill (S. 5675) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Edward E. Wilson, Pay Corps, United States Navy; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5676) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to each of the cities of Salinas, Monterey, and San Luis Obispo, in the State of California, one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 5677) to provide for the regulation of transportation systems after the termination of Federal control, to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000,000 for the operation of ships herein or heretofore authorized or in any way acquired by the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois if he will yield to me in order that a short joint resolution, which has come over from the House, may be laid before the Senate and referred to the Finance Committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that House joint resolution 439 be laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 439) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of the Finance Committee I present a favorable report, with an amendment, on House joint resolution 439.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is the first time I have heard of a meeting of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. There has been no meeting of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina tells me that there has been no meeting of the committee, but that it has been polled. If this joint resolution is to be passed, I shall insist that at least one other amendment be made to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not now asking for the passage of the joint resolution. I wish to state to the Senator from Utah that I have polled the committee and have a list of the members of the committee who, I understand, have agreed to it. I did not see the Senator from Utah myself, but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] advised me that he had spoken to the Senator from Utah about it, and that it was satisfactory to him. So I put his name down on the list for that reason.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri asked me if I had any objection to an amendment with reference to the tax on furs, and whether that amendment could be included in the joint resolution. I do not know what the amendment is to the House joint resolution as reported by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Only that, that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina tells me that is the only amendment; but I wish to have an assurance that the joint resolution will be amended in another particular, covering a feature of the revenue bill as it was reported to the Senate. I am not now going to take the time of the Senate to call attention to that particular amendment, but I think the Senator from North Carolina knows what it is. However, with that understanding, I have no objection to the report being presented.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say—and I would not say it except that the statement of the Senator from Utah makes it proper, I think, that I should make it—that I have seen the members of the committee personally with respect to this matter, with the exception of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I have put their names down, because I was assured by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] that he had already spoken to them about the matter,

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, would the Senator object to having the joint resolution read? We are in the dark here concerning it.

Mr. SIMMONS. It has been read, referred to the committee, and reported from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received and placed on the calendar.

DISCHARGED SICK AND DISABLED SOLDIERS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I wish to submit an uncontested conference report on the hospital measure, which is absolutely vital, if we are to provide for our soldiers, and which ought to be acted upon without any delay.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the general deficiency appropriation bill is before the Senate, and I do not want anything to transpire that will lead to argument or displace that measure. I will yield temporarily for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think there will be any debate about it; if there is, I will withdraw it for the moment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. With that arrangement, I have no objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. I present the conference report on House bill 13026, the hospital bill, and ask for its adoption.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to provide immediate additional hospital and sanatorium facilities for the care and treatment of discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, Army and Navy nurses (male and female), patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, and the following persons only: Merchant-marine seamen, seamen on boats of the Mississippi River Commission, officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard, officers and employees of the Public Health Service, certain keepers and assistant keepers of the United States Lighthouse Service, seamen of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, civilian employees entitled to treatment under the United States employees' compensation act, and employees on Army transports not officers or enlisted men of the Army, now entitled by law to treatment by the Public Health Service.

"SEC. 2. There are hereby permanently transferred to the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service for hospital or sanatoria or other uses the following properties, with their present equipment, including sites and leases, or so much thereof as may be required by the Public Health Service, including mechanical equipment in connection therewith, and approaches thereto, with authority to lease or purchase sites not owned by the Government, as follows: Hospitals, with such other buildings and land as may be required, at Camp Cody, N. Mex.; Camp Hancock, Ga.; Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Fla.; Camp Beauregard, La.; Camp Logan, Tex.; Camp Fremont, Cal.; and nitrate plant, Perryville, Md.; and such hospitals, with other necessary buildings, hereafter vacated by the War Department, as may be required and found suitable for the needs of the Public Health Service for hospital or sanatoria purposes. And for the purpose of such remodeling of or additions to the above-named plants as may be required to adapt them to the needs and uses of the Public Health Service, the sum of $750,000 is hereby authorized.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer, without charge, to the Secretary of the Treasury for the use of the Public Health Service such hospital furniture and equipment, including hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles, in good condition, not required by the War Department, as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals, and the President is authorized to direct the transfer to the Treasury Department of the use of such lands or parts of lands, buildings, fixtures, appliances, furnishings, or furniture under the control of any other department of the Government not required for the purposes of such department, and suitable for the uses of the Public Health Service.

"SEC. 4. So much of the Battle Mountain Sanatorium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, with its present equipment, as is not required for the purposes for which these facilities were provided, is hereby made available for the use of the Public Health Service for a period of five years from the approval of this act, unless sooner released by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service.

"SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to contract with any existing hospital or sanatorium, by lease or otherwise, for immediate use, in whole or in part, of their present facilities, so as to provide bed capacity and facilities for not exceeding 1,000 patients, and for such purposes the sum of $300,000 is hereby authorized.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the same will be for the best interests of the Government from the standpoint of cost, location, and of the emergency needs of the Public Health Service, to purchase the site, buildings, and hospital facilities and appurtenances at Corpus Christi, Tex., known as General Hospital No. 15, and for such purpose the sum of $150,000 is hereby authorized.

"The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized to be held as an emergency fund for the purchase of land and buildings suitable for hospital and sanatoria purposes, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to select and locate, and to make additions and improvements suitable to adapt them to the uses of the United States Public Health Service, if in his judgment the emergency requires it.

"SEC. 7. By the construction of new hospitals and sanatoria, to include the necessary buildings with their appropriate mechanical and other equipment and approach work, including roads leading thereto, for the accommodation of patients, officers, nurses, attendants, storage, laundries, vehicles, and live stock on sites now owned by the Government, or on new sites to be acquired by purchase or otherwise, at the places hereinafter named: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a finding that any hospital project hereinafter specifically authorized is not to the best interest of the Government from the standpoint of cost, location, and of the emergency needs of the Public Health Service, he is hereby authorized to reject such project or projects and to locate, construct, or acquire hospitals at such other locations as would best subserve the interest of the Government and the emergency needs of the Public Health Service within the limits of cost of such authorization.

"a. At Cook County, Ill., by taking over the land and executing the contract for the construction thereon of hospital buildings specified therein of a certain proposed contract executed by the Shank Co., August 31, 1918, and in accordance with such contract and the plans and specifications identified in connection therewith August 31, 1918, by the signature and initials of Brig. Gen. R. C. Marshall, jr., Construction Division, Quartermaster Department, United States Army, by Lieut. Col. C. C. Wright, and the Shank Co., by George H. Shank, president, at the cost stated therein, namely $2,500,000, with such changes in said plans and specifications as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury to adapt said specified buildings to the needs and purposes of the Public Health Service, at a total limit of cost not to exceed $3,000,000.

"b. In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to execute the contract with the Shank Co. hereinbefore specified, with such verbal changes as are made necessary by a change in the contracting officers, and to assume all obligations in said contract contained, and to purchase materials and labor in the open market, or otherwise, and to employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of cost herein authorized.

"c. At Dawson Springs, Ky., on land to be acquired by gift, the necessary buildings for a sanatorium having a capacity of not less than 500 beds. The sum of $1,500,000 is hereby authorized for the construction of such sanatorium.

"d. The sum of $900,000 is hereby authorized for the construction, including site, of a hospital plant complete at Norfolk, Va.

"e. The sum of $550,000 is hereby authorized for the construction, on land owned by the Government, on a site to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, of a hospital plant complete in the District of Columbia or vicinity.

"f. The sum of $190,000 is hereby authorized for additional hospital accommodations, including such minor alteration in and remodeling of existing and authorized buildings as may be necessary to economically adapt them to the additional accommodations herein authorized for the marine hospital at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., the sum appropriated for additions to the said hospital by the act approved March 28, 1918, is authorized to be expended in full without the construction of psychiatric units.

"SEC. 8. In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, all new construction work herein authorized shall, as far as feasible, be of fire-resisting character, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contracts for the construction, equipment, etc., of such buildings on Government-owned lands, or lands acquired for such purpose, to purchase materials and labor in the open market, or otherwise, and to employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of cost herein authorized.

"SEC. 9. For the purpose of carrying the foregoing authorization into effect there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, the sum of $8,840,000, and for furniture and equipment not otherwise provided for the sum of $210,000; in all, $9,050,000.

"SEC. 10. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to employ, for service within or without the District of Columbia, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and to pay from the sums hereby authorized and appropriated for construction purposes, at customary rates of compensation, such additional technical and clerical services as may be necessary exclusively to aid in the preparation of the drawings and specifications for the above-named objects and supervision of the execution thereof, for traveling expenses, and printing incident thereto, at a total limit of cost for such additional technical and clerical services and traveling expenses, etc., of not exceeding $210,000 of the above-named limit of cost. All of the above-mentioned work shall be under the direction and supervision of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"SEC. 11. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for necessary personnel, including regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service and clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and maintenance, hospital supplies and equipment, leases, fuel, lights, and water, and freight, transportation, and travel, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $785,333 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920."

And the Senate agree to the same.

THOS. W. HARDWICK,
J. C. W. BECKHAM,
I. L. LENROOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FRANK CLARK,
ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN,
R. W. AUSTIN,
JNO. W. LANGLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just one moment. May we understand what is in the report?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will be glad to explain it to the Senator if it will not interfere with the Senator from Illinois. It is a conference report on House bill 13026, to provide hospital facilities for discharged and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States, and for other people entitled to hospital treatment under the Public Health Service laws. The House proposed to appropriate $12,000,000; the Senate proposed to appropriate $7,000,000; the conferees have reluctantly yielded and agreed to appropriate $9,000,000, instead of the $12,000,000 proposed by the House and the $7,000,000 proposition of the Senate. We added a million and a half for emergency use for this service, if in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury it should be required. That is the major part of this increase allowed by the conferees.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is there any part of this appropriation that has been agreed to that is available for the selection of hospitals at the discretion of the Surgeon General?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; there is one and a half million dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not apportioned out to any particular locality?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; that if left to his discretion.

Mr. SMOOT. It is in relation to that particular matter that I wish to make a very brief statement.

The Senator having the conference report in charge notified me a short time ago that there had been provided a million and a half dollars for the erection of hospitals in what may be termed the intermountain section of the country. I really am a little surprised, Mr. President, because there has already been an appropriation provided through the War Department for building a hospital at Fort Douglas, Utah, with accommodations for 1,100 beds. The other day the War Department issued an order to cease work altogether upon that hospital. I inquired as to how many beds the hospital would accommodate as it had been finished prior to that order and was told 400 beds.

Mr. President, the reason given for the order was that there had been so few of our soldiers wounded in France and returning to this country that they already found out that the hospital accommodations already ordered were more than were actually needed, and, instead of building a hospital of 1,100 beds, they now want to build a hospital with facilities for only 400 beds. I do not see, if that is the case, why there should be any appropriation, unless it be specifically stated where it is to be and what the money is to be expended for.

I am not going to object to this report, but I sincerely hope that there has not been any understanding that out of that million and a half dollars some hospital shall be located at some particular stated point.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is not. I can assure the Senator on that point.

Mr. SMOOT. It is for that reason that all other work ordered by the War Department should cease.

Mr. HARDWICK. There has been no such understanding; on the contrary, the Senate conferees put the language in the conference report that it should not be used at all, unless it was essential as an emergency proposition, in addition to what we provide.

Mr. SMOOT. The position taken by the War Department now in relation to the hospital accommodations at Fort Douglas is that for the intermountain section of the country 400 beds are all that are necessary. Of course, there would not be an expenditure of the money if that is so.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say to the Senator that probably there will be a greater number than that needed, because the discharged soldiers are handled by this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE TRUE STORY OF HOG ISLAND.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it has been my purpose for some months to prepare for the RECORD a story of the Hog Island infamy, about which so much has been said in this Chamber and in the public press, but I have been so very busy with other matters that I have been unable to execute that purpose. It is my very great desire to perpetuate the memory of that notorious transaction. It is one of the monumental enterprises of this period of our national history.

It was conceived in the greed for gain, brought forth in a gush of mock patriotism, and swaddled in the American flag. It is my desire that the American people shall remember it. I wish them to see it naked, in all of its details, all of its phases, its good and its bad sides.

I find published in the current number of Pearson's Magazine a fairly accurate story of this notorious organization. I think I can say that probably 99 per cent of the story is accurate. There may be 1 per cent inaccurate; but taking it all in all, I am quite sure it is about as correct an account of the Hog Island enterprise as the average human intellect could get up. The report does not bring its history up to date. For instance, it states that the cost of the plant at Hog Island was $63,000,000, when, as a matter of fact, it cost more than $66,000,000.

It will be contended by the apologists for Hog Island that the abuses complained of in the beginning of the enterprise have been corrected. I admit that some of them have been corrected, but there has been no restitution of the money improperly expended and other forms of petty graft. The Federal Treasury has been plundered and the taxpayers robbed and somebody has made way with the swag.

I believe the man who is now at the head of this company, a Mr. Brush, is an earnest, honest, capable, straightforward young fellow, and in so far as it is within his power will improve the condition of these things there.

I hope the Congress may look further into this matter, Mr. President, and that the enormous fees that were contracted to be paid to the plutocratic citizens who compose the corporation with which the Government made the contract may be withheld. Mr. Vanderlip and his associates have not earned a penny of the $8,000,000 or $14,000,000 which under the terms of the contract they are to receive for the "know how." They have not rendered one dollar's worth of service. The payment of this money to these men will be an unwarranted prodigality of public funds. The President of the United States, who has the authority to do it, should have ordered the contracts canceled a year ago for failure to comply with the terms of the contracts.

I am going to ask unanimous consent to have this article published in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"HOW UNCLE SAM IS SWINDLED: THE TRUE STORY OF HOG ISLAND.

"Before giving the facts about Hog Island, the public should know the difference between the American International Corporation, generally supposed to be the contractor or agent, and the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, the actual contractor or agent.

"The American International Corporation, which, contrary to the general belief, is not the contractor, is a real concern with financial responsibility and substantial working capital. The American International Shipbuilding Corporation, the actual contractor or agent, is a nominal corporation with a total capital stock (nominal) of only $2,000, without financial responsibility or working capital, incorporated in Delaware, September 27, 1917, by the American International Corporation, which owns without liability to itself all its capital stock of $2,000. This corporation was formed by the American International Corporation, the supposed contractor, to completely divest itself and its assets of responsibility and liability and yet assure to itself all the profits to be made.

"This method of incorporating nominal stock companies opens a broad way to every sort of fraud. The American International Shipbuilding Corporation, the real contractor, can enter into contracts involving millions, as it did in this case, pay great dividends, and then dissolve or go bankrupt, without liability except as to its nominal capitalization and assets, and without being subject to prosecution for fraud.

"It has been, in fact, loudly acclaimed by the officers of the American International Corporation, the supposed contractor, that nothing criminal has been done. This has been confirmed by Attorney General Gregory in his report; but when the facts are known, not many persons will agree with the ex-Attorney General.

"This dummy corporation is the old Wall Street method of keeping within the limits of the law under the advice of shrewd Wall Street lawyers, who, as one person has tersely remarked, have, with their clients, a complement of crooked ways, but no shipbuilding ways.

"The American International Corporation, the supposed contractor, according to its last published statement in Moody's Manual of Industrials, 1918, page 1951, had capital stock, assets, working capital, and officers and directors as follows:

"Capital stock: Common, $49,000,000; preferred, $1,000,000. Assets, $37,106,015; net working capital, $4,798,588.

"Its officers and directors are as follows:

"Officers: F. A. Vanderlip, chairman of board; C. A. Stone, president; G. J. Baldwin, senior vice president; H. D. H. Connick, Philip W. Henry, Robert F. Herrick, Frederick Holbrook, William S. Kies, R. B. Sheridan, R. P. Tinsley, vice presidents; Cecil Page, secretary; T. W. Streeter, treasurer, New York."

These are men of great wealth, who wrapped themselves in the American flag during the war and denounced everybody who did not rush to America's sublimest patriots for pelf.

"Executive committee: F. A. Vanderlip, C. A. Stone, O. H. Kahn, P. A. Rockefeller, T. N. Vail, Beekman Winthrop, William Woodward.

"Directors—J. Ogden Armour, G. J. Baldwin, C. A. Coffin, W. E. Corey, Robert Dollar, Pierre S. du Pont, Philip A. S. Franklin, J. P. Grace, R. F. Herrick, Otto H. Kahn, H. S. Pritchett, Percy A. Rockefeller, John D. Ryan, W. L. Saunders, J. A. Stillman, C. A. Stone, T. N. Vail, F. A. Vanderlip, E. S. Webster, A. H. Wiggin, Beekman Winthrop, William Woodward.

"The American International Shipbuilding Corporation, the real contractor, whose capital stock is owned without liability for its acts by the above, according to its certificate of incorporation had capital stock, assets, working capital, and officers and directors as follows:

"Date and place of incorporation, September 27, 1917, Delaware.

"Incorporators—Stafford Smith, New York City, 16 shares; James E. Manter, Portland, Me., 2 shares; Clement M. Egner, Elkton, Md., 2 shares. Total shares, 20. Par value, $100 each. Capital stock, $2,000; assets (common stock), $2,000; working capital, none.

"(Note the capital stock is owned without liability by the American International Corporation, the supposed contractor.)

"Its officers and directors (American International Shipbuilding Corporation), according to its certificate of incorporation, are as follows:

"Chairman, George J. Baldwin; president, M. C. Brush, and six vice presidents plus secretary and assistant secretary-treasurer, and three assistants.

"Directors—George J. Baldwin, M. C. Brush, H. D. H. Connick, P. O. Knight, G. O. Muhlfeld, M. A. Neeland, A. R. Patterson, and F. W. Wood.

"It will be noted that for a corporation with a total capital stock of only $2,000 and no other assets and no working capital it has a very extensive stage setting or array of officers—a chairman of the board, a president, six vice presidents, a general counsel, a secretary and assistant secretary, and a treasurer and assistant treasurer. Verily it was considered either a very valuable or a very risky $2,000.

"So much for the identity of the two corporations—the supposed contractor, the American International Corporation, and the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, the real contractor. Now for the contract given to it by Chairman Hurley and executed by him on behalf of the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

"According to the statement given by the American International Corporation, the supposed contractor, as the owner without liability of the capital stock of the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, the nominal company and real contractor, on page 1950, Moody's Manual of Industrials for 1918, the American International Shipbuilding Corporation was organized in 1917 (Sept. 27, 1917, by certificate of incorporation) to carry out the terms of a contract for the construction of a large ship-assembling plant at Hog Island, on the Delaware River, and build a fleet of cargo vessels, of standard design, of 7,500 dead-weight tons each, for the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

"This, the original contract, dated September 13, 1917, two weeks before the incorporation of the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, calls for a yard of 50 ways and the completion of 50 of such vessels at the earliest possible date. In October, 1917, the month following, before the work had fairly started and before it was possible to tell what the outcome of this contract would be, Mr. Hurley—Mr. Piez was then advising him sub rosa—awarded the corporation an additional contract for the construction of 70 cargo and transport ships, each to be of 8,000 tons dead-weight. In April, 1918, when it was certain that the delivery of any ships would be much later than planned, and when it was clearly obvious that a successful outcome of this experiment in shipbuilding was exceedingly doubtful or impossible, Mr. Hurley and Mr. Piez awarded the corporation a further contract for 60 cargo vessels of 7,500 dead-weight tons each, making a total of 180 ships awarded it, with a total tonnage of 1,385,000 dead-weight tons. The first ships under the contract were to be delivered in October, 1918, and the balance in 1919.

"The contract is of the 'cost-plus fixed fee' type, providing that the Emergency Fleet Corporation, as owner, shall control and pay all expenses of the work, including cost of land, buildings, ways, machinery, tools, labor, and vessels. The fee to be paid the contractor was agreed to be 5 per cent on an estimated and agreed basis of cost of the ships themselves, which was estimated for that purpose only to be $236,500,000.

"The amount of the fee agreed upon to be paid the contractor by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, as agreed to on its behalf by Mr. Hurley, was therefore $11,825,000; that is, on a total risk by the contractor of only $2,000. The contractor, the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, under the terms of the contract granted to it on behalf of the Emergency Fleet Corporation is to receive therefore a profit of 5,912 per cent on every dollar risked, and upon the completion of the contract the Government holds the bag in the cost of the land and yard, which has now reached the sum of $63,000,000.

"The contractor graciously waived the 5 per cent fee on the cost of the land and yard, but no charge is made for its use under the contract given to it by the Emergency Fleet Corporation. A minimum charge for such use would be 5 per cent per annum on the cost of the same for interest on the investment and 5 per cent per annum for depreciation, or a total of 10 per cent per annum on the cost of $63,000,000.

"Waiving this charge or rental is equivalent, therefore, to presenting the contractor with an added profit of $6,300,000 per annum, or, say, for two years, within which time the contract was promised to be performed, and within which time the contract called for completion, with a total additional profit of $12,600,000, or an additional 6,300 per cent on the contractor's total risk of $2,000.

"The total profit provided for the contractor on its risk of $2,000 under the terms of the contract given to it by the Emergency Fleet Corporation practically amounts, therefore, to the following:

Fee 5 per cent of $236,500,000	$11, 825, 000
Rental and depreciation 10 per cent of cost of plant per annum $6,300,000, or for 2 years	12, 600, 000
Total profit	24, 425, 000

"This amounts to 12,212 per cent on the contractor's risk, namely, $2,000. Evidently working for Uncle Sam, if you are rich already, beats all the El Dorados yet discovered in the world!

"As to the progress of the contract, one ship only of the 180 to be built has been completed. This was launched last summer, when only 65 per cent of its rivets had been driven.

"The cost of the entertainment attending this launching, according to the testimony of Director General Piez before the Senate committee, January 2 last, was $38,000. This, under the contract, was an item of cost, and the contractor receives 5 per cent on the same, or a profit on this item alone of $1,900, a sum lacking only $100 of the total amount of the capital stock and assets of the contractor, namely, the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, and the total sum risked by it.

"What a delightful business bankers do! They give entertainments at the expense of the Government and receive a commission on the cost of the same equal to the total risk they have taken. No wonder Balzac called bankers the brigands of to-day!

"The entire plan of fabricated ships, to be turned out like tin cans, was experimental. The design was experimental, as well as the method by which it was proposed to construct them. Messrs. Hurley and Piez, by committing the greater part of the shipbuilding program and our cause to this scheme, which has netted only four ships from all such yards to date, according to Director General Piez's recent testimony before the Senate, astounded the real shipbuilders of experience and every practical engineer.

A FURTHER EXPOSURE.

(By J. L. Spivak.)

"Even before the contract was signed by the United States and the American International Shipbuilding Co. for the shipyard on Hog Island a good deal of money was squandered. So many suspicious facts came out during the investigation of the Hog Island shipbuilding yard by the Senate committee that President Wilson ordered the Department of Justice to investigate and to hold criminally responsible those who were found guilty of misusing the people's money. This order was given in February, 1918. Near the end of December, 1918, the Department of Justice report was ordered published.

"Six weeks have since elapsed and the report has not yet been published. But we all know that the Department of Justice found nothing wrong at the Hog Island shipyard, and though the Christian Science Monitor declares that whoever publishes the facts that have been revealed in the Hog Island investigation by the Senate committee will risk accusations of pro-Germanism, let us see what happened at Hog Island.

"The marsh land known as Hog Island was assessed and taxes paid on a base value of about $100 per acre. The International Shipbuilding Co. bought the land for $2,000 an acre and rented it to the Government at the price of 6 per cent upon $2,000. 'Mr. Black, who sold the land to this shipbuilding company for $2,000 an acre, had agreed to sell it the year before and had an option outstanding for $1,000 an acre. As a reward for his getting $2,000 an acre he has been taken out of civil life and is now a lieutenant colonel in the Ordnance Department of the Government.' [Senator NELSON.]

"The land was worth, at its assessed value of $100 per acre, $85,300. The company paid for the land $1,706,000. The Government, however, has an option on the land, if they wish to buy it, at the price of $1,706,000.

"George J. Baldwin, chairman of the board of the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, said to the Senate committee that 'In May, 1917, the United States Government, through the Shipping Board, invited the American International Corporation to undertake the construction of a shipyard to contain 50 ways and to build therein a fleet of 200 cargo vessels of an aggregate tonnage of 1,500,000.' The contract that resulted from this invitation was officially awarded on September 13, 1917, and the American International Shipbuilding Corporation was instructed to proceed. It was estimated that it would cost $21,000,000 to complete the plant. But, only three months after the contract was officially awarded and more than a month before the first keel was laid, the expenditure amounted to over $23,000,000.

"When $23,000,000 is spent within three months after a contract is awarded, and hardly any accomplishment is shown, it becomes interesting to see where the money went.

"LABOR.

"An average of 26,000 men were employed upon Hog Island. Since there were no housing facilities and the food was of the poorest quality, men did not stay long on the job. There was always an army of men leaving the island because they were dissatisfied. To insure the average of 26,000 workmen it was necessary to have about 35,000 workmen on the spot. Hence, there was an endless hiring and firing on the island. The new applicants usually wasted the first half of the day before they were hired and assigned to their jobs. Their pay started from the time they set foot upon the island. Once the men were hired they were assigned to different gangs, under the supervision of foremen.

"Col. S. M. Felton, president of the Chicago Great Western Railroad, who had given his services as an engineer to the War Department, after a visit to Hog Island, testified as follows: 'I should estimate that possibly between 5 and 10 men out of every gang of 100 congregated about the plant were busy. I never saw such idleness in all my life. Half the men we saw there, if properly organized, would have done more work than all the men we saw.'

"These thousands of laborers who did little or no work received weekly pay envelopes ranging like this: $48, $30, $49, $48, $49, $46, etc. In addition to the thousands of laborers there were, of course, the high-salaried officials. 'Contracts were made to pay double salaries for expert services. The cost of the construction, it is now conceded, will be three to four times the Government's original estimate. This single hold-up of the Government will probably cost it not less than $30,000,000.'

"In addition to nonlaboring laborers and fat-salaried officials a little paper was started (the Government paying the editors' salaries) with the express intention of creating interest in the job among the employees. The editorial salaries were as follows: R. N. Hunt, publicity assistant, $666.66 per month; D. T. Pierce, publicity manager, $833.33 per month; Thomas B. Reed, publicity assistant, $500 a month. Senator Vardaman aptly remarks, 'Did they really accomplish anything other than furnishing a pretty good story for some very excellent gentlemen?'

"But enough about the item 'labor.' Let us now consider the

"MATERIAL.

"Cranes are essential to a shipyard. The price of an ordinary crane is seven to eight thousand dollars. This is the price even in war time; but suppose one allows a $3,000 increase because of war conditions, one would expect to pay about $10,000 for a crane. Yet, 'Mr. Towle testified that in the gathering of machinery, for instance, an ordinary crane that you should buy for from seven to eight thousand dollars cost the Government from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars.' [Senator MCCUMBER.]

"This one instance will serve as an example.

"MANAGEMENT: HIGH-SALARIED OFFICIALS.

"Testimony was given that about 75 men were ordered to unload three frozen cars of cinders—25 men to each car—the cost being approximately $70 a carload. In the summer time these same cars could be unloaded by ordinary business men at a cost of from $2 to $3.

"Senator MCCUMBER. Freight cars were allowed to pile up and remain unloaded until 1,300 cars stood for long periods of time without being unloaded, while the country was freezing because cars could not be obtained to haul coal.

"Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator may not have observed that in that connection it was also shown that there were 3,000 cars on the way that had to be held up.

"The CHAIRMAN. How about the owners of the trucks? Did they receive as much as $25 or $30 a day?

"Commander REED. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Were high-priced automobiles hired and placed at the disposal of executives for their use in going to and from the island and elsewhere and charged to the Government?

"Commander REED. 'A large number of automobiles and trucks of all kinds were hired every day; it was customary for the officials of the company to go to Hog Island and return in these automobiles; yes, sir.'

"The high prices of material aroused suspicions as to whether some men were not pocketing huge sums while the American people were giving their blood and their dollars for the war. This was indignantly denied.

"Mr. BALDWIN. 'I have got a boy over there. * * * We are not doing this for money.'

"Senator JOHNSON. 'You are not doing it for money, but you have some $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 coming to you out of this contract. How do you explain that if you are not doing it for money?'

"Mr. BALDWIN. 'Because you can not keep a corporation alive on patriotism. You can keep the individual going on that basis, but you can not keep a corporation going on it.'

"The average monthly expenditure by the United States upon the Panama Canal was $2,500,000; the average monthly expenditure upon Hog Island was $10,000,000. The exact expenditures upon Hog Island up to August 5, is, I believe, not now obtainable. However, figuring upon the admitted average monthly expenditures from the time the contract was signed up to August, I calculate that about $100,000,000 were spent. Let us, for mercy's sake, cut this figure in half, and we get $50,000,000. After this $50,000,000 were spent came the glorious day to Hog Island. The first ship was to be launched!

"There was much bustle and excitement. And, if so many millions had already been spent, a few thousands to celebrate fittingly the event was obviously necessary; so $38,000 (of the taxpayers' money) was spent upon August 5, the day the Quistconck was launched. The "Quistconck," however, was prematurely launched, and later had to be towed to a station for repairs!

"In other words, the American people paid at least $50,000,000 for one 7,500-ton badly constructed ship!

"It is hardly necessary to continue. The administration at Hog Island changed hands several times, and the Department of Justice says there is nothing which should be prosecuted. We are faced, just the same, with the disconcerting knowledge that a job originally estimated to cost $21,000,000 has cost three times as much. We are faced, in other words, with a bill in which appears an item of $30,000,000 extra, and evidently the only thing we can do is to grin and pay. But who got the $30,000,000? How was it divided?"

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask that the italics that I have marked be reproduced just as I have prepared the article for the RECORD, together with other annotations that I may have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution authorizing the clerk in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, to strike out the word "twenty" where it appears in the last line of section 11 of the bill as agreed upon in conference, and insert in lieu thereof the word "nineteen," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also anounced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5236. An act to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 9897. An act to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11984. An act to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses;

H. R. 15979. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16136. An act to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes.

DISCHARGED SICK AND DISABLED SOLDIERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13026) entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "twenty," where it appears in the last line of section eleven of the bill as agreed upon in conference, and insert in lieu thereof the word "nineteen."

LANDS FOR RETURNED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5652) providing for cooperation between the United States and State Governments in the rural settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to promote the reclamation of lands, and for other purposes. This is the bill to enact into legislation Secretary Lane's project to reclaim lands for homes for returned soldiers and sailors.

I suppose this motion will not be pleasing to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, but, nevertheless, I feel it my duty to make and press the motion.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I understand that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. MYERS. I claim it is debatable. The Senate recessed from yesterday until to-day. This is not the morning hour. There is no morning hour to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I was mistaken; it is debatable. It is debatable after 2 o'clock on the legislative day.

Mr. MYERS. If not debatable, I would not want to proceed; but there can be no doubt that it is debatable.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I withdraw my objection. It is debatable.

Mr. MYERS. I shall then take a few minutes to state the reasons why I make this motion and think it should be adopted. It may not be agreeable to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, but I feel it my duty nevertheless to bring the matter before the Senate. I promised Secretary Lane that I would make an effort to get the bill before the Senate and secure its passage at this session, and I intend to be loyal to him and to my promise. I earnestly favor this bill and want to see it enacted at this session of Congress. I can see no opportunity for making this motion or making an effort to get the bill before the Senate at this session other than right now. This is the last chance. This session must soon end.

I feel sure that appropriation bills will claim the right of way before the Senate from now until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, and will occupy all the remaining time unless the Senate will take up this bill, the bill I have moved to take up, and dispose of it right now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator briefly state what is the bill proposed?

Mr. MYERS. I will in a few seconds, and I will be brief about it. I do not believe it would take the Senate over half an hour to dispose of the bill. This is a bill of tremendous importance. It means a great deal to our returning soldiers and sailors, men to whom we owe so much, to whom we owe more than we will ever be able to pay. This bill has been carefully framed. It is the result of much thought and deep study. It is more important than many appropriation bills, important as they are to the Government. The object of the bill is to put to work thousands of returned soldiers and sailors, now unemployed, and to enable them to make farm homes for themselves on land now useless and unproductive.

It was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands by a unanimous vote of all members present, and there was a good attendance at the meeting. I believe every member of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate is in favor of the bill. I believe a large majority of the Members of the Senate are in favor of the bill, and if given an opportunity I believe a large majority of them would vote for it. I know many of them think favorably of it. It has pretty generally been brought to their attention, and I believe is generally understood.

We can not possibly pass all the appropriation bills at this session. It is apparent some must fail of passage. I think it is certain that we shall have to have a special session of Congress in June, before the expiration of the fiscal year, to make appropriations for some departments of the Government. The appropriations can wait until July, but this matter can not wait, if we are to do justice to our returned soldiers and sailors.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the provisions of the bill, but the Senator made the statement that it will not take over half an hour. I assure the Senator that it will take a good many hours before the bill can be passed. The Senator, of course, says that this is done in the interest of the soldiers. I am going to take issue with the Senator on that question, and I think the Senator will find that a number of Senators will take issue with him on that. It is not in the interest of soldiers as much as it is for those who want to reclaim the dismal swamps of the country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that it is opening up a great quantity of land upon which soldiers can settle and giving them a particular privilege under the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator recognizes that I would be the last man who would want to see my boy made a pauper, sent out on that waste, and then have the Government advance him a few thousand dollars, when he would be without horses, without machinery, without anything to go on with his farming operations. If I want my boy to farm, I will say to the Senator, I will send him to the New England States and have him buy an abandoned farm, where there is a hope for him to establish a home for himself, rather than make a pauper out of him for all time to come.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am sure the Senator does not understand this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator does understand it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The appropriation is for the very purpose of lending money to the soldier to be used by him in purchasing machinery for the farm and giving him other advantages. It is proposed to give him the very best quality of land by redeeming the land from the condition of swamp land or for the purposes of irrigation. By reason of that a quantity of land will be given to the soldiers, and they will be given special advantages—the very opposite of the conditions which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has stated.

Mr. GRONNA. Ah, Mr. President, we have had too much of that. We have been passing bills here all the time in support of which it has been claimed that they were in the interest of the soldier. It has become the custom to claim that everything is in the interest of the soldier, if only the Treasury can be looted. We are deceiving ourselves if we think that the public is going to be satisfied.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator will not be able to get this bill passed, I will say to him, in the course of 1 hour or 2 hours or 10 hours.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I decline to yield further. I want to proceed. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], however, wishes to ask me a question, I will yield for a question only.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I want to ask a question. The question is a simple one. Is it not a fact that on the land now under cultivation in the United States we produce a surplus of everything that the farmer raises? Is it not also a fact that producing that surplus even now we are attempting to hold up the production of some of the farm products in order that the farmer may receive a living price for them? Now, I want to ask the Senator from Montana, under those conditions, whereas there is not a surplus of clothing and there is a surplus of farm products, why we should not advance the soldiers money to start more clothing stores in order that we may cheapen the price of clothing to the American public?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there is not a surplus of farm products in the world to-day. There will be more wheat needed in Europe, we are informed by official authority, than was needed last year. For several years the United States will have to feed a large part of Europe.

Now, I decline to yield further. I want to keep my statement to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] that I would be brief. I am anxious to get this matter before the Senate and let the Senate vote on it. Then I shall, of course, abide by whatever the Senate may do and try to be satisfied with whatever its decision may be. I promised to make the effort, and I am going to make it. Now is my only chance. I would be very glad to see the bill taken up and disposed of now, without delay, and hope it may be. I appeal to the Senate to let this bill be voted on.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I want to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] a question. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado if this bill appropriates only money to make farmers out of the soldiers? Is it limited to that alone, or will it also appropriate money to build banks, start the soldiers in the banking business, and appropriate money for that, and appropriate money to construct manufactories and to put soldiers into the manufacturing business, and also appropriate money to build stores and to provide them with stocks of goods, and put them into the mercantile business? Is the bill to be limited to farming alone?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us have some order about this matter. If we start into the discussion in this way at 10 o'clock, there will be a riot by midnight.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In answer to the question of the Senator from Oklahoma——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has not yet asked the Senator from Colorado a question.

Mr. GORE. Yes; I asked the Senator from Colorado a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the confusion the Chair was unable to hear it.

Mr. MYERS. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado for a brief answer, and then I shall decline to yield further to any other Senator, until I get through.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], I will say that the Government has a vast quantity of land which it owns, and by reason of that fact it is being put into a condition in which it can be irrigated, which will make it the most excellent and the most valuable of all lands in the United States. It prescribes a limited quantity of land, not as much as 160 acres, to be taken up by the soldier who will go upon the land. It also provides for a loan by which the soldiers can get enough money to be secured upon their property, and secured upon the property which they buy, with which they can start upon this desert land, to which the Senator from North Dakota has referred.

It seems to me, if we are going to give an opportunity to these men who come back from Europe, we shall have to do it on this bill. It will be worth an infinite amount of money and be of great value to the men themselves.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I decline to yield any further.

Mr. GORE. I should like to be allowed to ask one further question, but I will not trespass.

Mr. MYERS. I decline to yield any further. The Senator may take the floor in his own right and in his own time.

Mr. President, this bill, as has been partly explained by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], makes an appropriation of a revolving fund with which to reclaim arid, cut-over, and swamp lands, so as to provide farms and homes thereon for returning soldiers and sailors, to give them employment in reclaiming such lands, to prepare the lands for settlement; then giving the soldiers and sailors opportunity to purchase the lands from the Government on easy terms, making long-time payments, and providing them with money with which to buy live stock, machinery, and implements for the purpose of starting into the business of farming.

The latest official estimates indicate that there are about 1,000,000 unemployed men in the United States. That number will be augmented. Unemployment on a large scale will not exist in this country without serious trouble. People are not going to go hungry and without employment when they want honest labor without making trouble. Our returning soldiers and sailors, who offered their lives and limbs in defense of our country and liberty, are not going to return here and go hungry and without employment without making trouble.

Here is an opportunity to give employment to a large proportion of the unemployed people in this country in a beneficial work and most commendable undertaking and doing it in a wise way. The plan has met with the approval of committees both of the House and of the Senate and is strongly recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the President of the United States. The President has urged Congress to enact the legislation at this session.

Unless this measure is enacted at this session, it may be too late to do any good. By July there will be probably a million more of our troops who will have returned to this country. Already more than 1,000,000 have returned. By July it will probably be too late to get these people together and get them interested in this plan and get the plan into operation. In my opinion it must be done now, if done at all.

The appropriation bills can wait until July; the fiscal year does not expire until the 1st of July, and I think we will undoubtedly have a special session of Congress in June. Then the appropriation bills can be taken care of. With this bill it is different. I should very much like to see this bill given a chance for enactment at this session of Congress—right now, to-day. There has been no program for the remainder of this session formulated, so far as I know, by a caucus or the steering committee of the majority party of the Senate. Therefore it is the privilege of any Senator to make a motion to take up any bill for consideration. I feel that this bill can be enacted within a reasonable time. I would not want more than a reasonable time spent on it. Then, I feel sure the Senate will have plenty of time to enact the pending appropriation bill and any other that may be absolutely necessary. We all know that there are some appropriation bills that will go over. Without further argument, I submit the matter to the Senate and ask for a vote on my motion.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to present the credentials of my successor, the Senator elect from Michigan, Hon. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY, and I ask that they be filed in the usual and customary way.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest to the Senator to ask that the credentials be read.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let the Secretary read them. I should like to have them read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Lansing.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Michigan a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness his excellency our governor, Albert E. Sleeper, and our seal hereto affixed at Lansing, this 26th day of November, A. D. 1918.

ALBERT E. SLEEPER,
Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]
COLEMAN C. VAUGHAN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not rise in any way to object to the credentials; they should be filed; there is no question, legally, about that; but I do rise to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections what has become of the resolution unanimously adopted, I think, by that committee looking to the preservation of the evidence and of the ballots in the Michigan senatorial election contest?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I desire to give very briefly the history of this subject as it appears of record in the Senate.

Shortly after the primary election in Michigan the committee having charge of the campaign for Mr. Newberry presented a report, under the Michigan statute, showing collections of $178,000 and disbursements of $176,000 in that campaign. Certain information came to the committee to the effect that these expenditures were made with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Newberry. The situation was such that I believed I was justified in presenting a resolution asking for an investigation to ascertain whether or not expenditures had been made in violation of law, both Federal and State, and what, if any, additional legislation might be necessary to meet this serious evil.

The committee was of the opinion that that investigation could not be had prior to the election, and it was adjourned over until, I think, November 15, on which date a meeting of the committee was called. There were several meetings had, and more attempts to get meetings of the committee, but we failed to secure quorums on different occasions.

Later, prior to the holidays, a memorial was presented by some one, whose name I have now forgotten, but who was the chairman or an official of the Ford nonpartisan campaign committee. Still later Mr. Ford presented a memorial insisting that there should be a recount and charging violations of the law in connection with the primaries. As a result of these two memorials, on the calendar day of January 17 I presented a resolution looking to an investigation. On January 27, 1919, a favorable report was ordered by the committee, all of the Democrats and one Republican joining in it. Certain other Republicans refused to vote upon the question, because they said the meeting of the committee was illegally held in that the vote was taken while the Senate was in session. Apparently they had overlooked the fact that there was a general resolution authorizing the committee to sit while the Senate was in session.

As a result of the debate on the floor of the Senate a compromise resolution was presented. That resolution represented the unanimous vote of all Senators belonging to that committee, save one Democrat, who was not in the city, and one Republican, who was not able to be here. I felt that that resolution ought to be passed. The resolution provided for the taking possession of the ballots in order that they might be preserved; also for taking possession of certain other documentary evidence which it was feared might be lost or dissipated, and for taking such oral testimony as the committee upon showing might feel it was necessary to take.

At no time during the history of this case did any member of the committee contend that this Senate should pass upon the merits of the case. Most of us were of the opinion that a very serious issue had been joined, and that the sooner the evidence could be taken the better for all parties concerned.

I had every reason to believe that when this unanimous report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was presented it would not meet with any opposition whatsoever, and, in my humble judgment, there ought not to have been any opposition to it. My feeling is that when the right of any Senator to a seat is challenged that Senator ought to be the very first one to insist upon an investigation, and, instead of trying to block an investigation, if he had a proper appreciation of his relations to his colleagues, he would be the one who would insist upon an investigation. But objections were made, and in the closing days of the Congress it looked as if a filibuster would be inaugurated.

The Senate has witnessed the repeated efforts I have made to bring this matter to a conclusion on the floor of the Senate, but what I did on the floor of the Senate by no means measures the efforts which I have made in conferences with Senators on both sides of the Chamber to have all opposition withdrawn, so that the resolution might be passed. However, I have not succeeded in those efforts.

The day after this matter was up and discussed before the Senate, possibly the second day, I intended to bring it up again, but because of very unfortunate illness in the family of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], he could not be here, and requested that the matter should not be brought up. It is out of deference to that request that I have not since that time made an effort to bring the matter to a conclusion. Suffice it to say that I am very much disappointed that there should be any opposition to the gathering of this testimony now in order that it might be before the Senate for its consideration at the next session.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. I join in the opinion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I think it is unfortunate that this resolution has been blocked, if that is the proper word to use concerning it. I think there was a general understanding that this resolution would pass and that the evidence was to be preserved. I hope, when the Republicans come into control, that there will be a full and complete investigation of the Michigan election on both sides. I am inclined to believe that the friends of Mr. Ford have spent fully as much money as the friends of Mr. Newberry, but I do not believe that any party or any group of men can stand in the way of a complete investigation under such facts as have been presented to the Senate, and I believe there is no intention of so doing on this side of the Chamber. I hope there is none.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to say a word in addition, before this substitute resolution was agreed to I suggested, informally, in the presence of such Senators as were in the committee room, Republicans and Democrats alike, that if an investigation were to be made by a subcommittee that subcommittee should be composed of equal numbers of Republicans and Democrats, so that it could not be said that any attempt was made to do any injustice to anyone. I am not concerned about the final result of this matter. I am concerned that the Senate shall know what the facts are.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I want to say that before presenting these credentials I conferred with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON.] This is the customary manner of disposing of credentials—to receive them and file them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had intended to say, but overlooked it when on my feet before, that I am not making any objection to the filing of these credentials. I did at one time ask that they be referred to the committee. I felt at that time that the committee should consider them, not with a view to excluding them, but with a view to determining on a course of action. My own judgment is that under the circumstances these credentials should be filed, and that on the present state of the case Mr. Newberry should be qualified at the beginning of the next session, and the Senate can then take such action as under all the circumstances may seem proper.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Inasmuch as my name has been mentioned, I wish to be heard a moment.

It is true that the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] asked me—and I appreciate his courtesy—if I intended to object to the presentation of the credentials of Mr. Newberry. I apprehend that I was asked that question for a twofold reason: First, because I objected some months ago when the credentials were presented; secondly, because I happen to be an humble, a very humble, member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is true that I objected upon a former occasion; and I regret that the Senator's colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] can not be here now so that he may hear my confession of error in regard to my position at that time.

I have examined all the precedents of the Senate, and have examined the rules, and I am going to read a part of Rule VI, in regard to the presentation of credentials:

> The presentation of the credentials of Senators elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of.

My attitude in trying to bring about an investigation of the alleged unlawful expenditures of money in the Truman H. Newberry case has aroused considerable unfavorable criticism from one or two newspapers. I do not resent criticism. The only injustice the newspapers in the United States have ever done me was overpraise me—to give me credit where I was not entitled to credit.

I have never met Mr. Newberry. I have never had the pleasure of greeting him. I have no doubt that in public life and in private life he is a most estimable gentleman. I could not be and have not been actuated by the smallest consideration of prejudice or of partisan bias in this case. My activity in this matter has been prompted solely and only by the desire to assist the Senate in maintaining its ancient and historic standards—a true Senate. I want to see a Senate to which a rich man may be chosen or a poor man may be chosen upon merit and attainment only. I desire to see men chosen as Senators without regard to their wealth or their poverty. I felt that the evidence submitted to the committee disclosed that huge sums of money had been poured into the Michigan election; and in vindication of myself and my attitude I have nothing to retract. I stand on my original ground and again assert that the Senate should conduct an investigation, that we should spring at once to our duty and be active in the matter of investigating—no matter who may be the man who presents credentials—where it is alleged by responsible persons that large sums of money have been spent in bringing about an election. In a free Republic, where the ballot is in every hand, if men with large sums of money can go about and corrupt voters and spend large sums in influencing the elections, the free Republic will not exist very much longer. In saying this I do not assert that Mr. Newberry has violated any law: I simply say that evidence has been adduced before the Committee on Elections tending to show that large sums of money were spent in Mr. Newberry's behalf in the Michigan election. The Senate will be false to itself and false to the American people if it fails carefully and patiently, and without any bias, to investigate the matter; and if Mr. Ford's agents have spent any money illegally I would be just as active to pass a resolution of investigation.

Mr. President, in presenting these credentials the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has done the proper thing. He has presented the credentials of Mr. Newberry, Senator elect. They are regular on their face. They give the Senator elect, Mr. Newberry, the right to participate in the organization of the Senate of the Sixty-sixth Congress. His credentials on their face are as regular as the credentials of myself or any other Senator here, and I am glad to say that I have no objection whatever to their presentation. At a later time the question of investigation can be discussed, and a resolution can be presented and passed. These credentials are presented by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. He is within his rights. He is doing what is proper under the Senate rules.

The senior Senator from Michigan, Mr. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, in 25 hours more will no longer be a Senator of the United States. He leaves us, much to our regret. He leaves the public service after 25 years of work as devoted to our institutions of civil liberty as has been known in the history of any public servant. No tainted breath, no suspicion of scandal, has ever dimmed the bright mirror of his character and reputation; and in these closing hours, precious as time is, let me say that when the great contest for statehood for Arizona was on—statehood for Arizona and New Mexico—here stood my learned and beloved friend, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], battling for the right of Arizona to be admitted; there was my learned and beloved friend, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the Committee on the Territories, asserting that a vote must be had, and the rights of these Territories must be considered. So I may be pardoned when I say that I have deep affection and much respect for the Senator from Michigan, who so soon will leave us. He served term after term in the House, and two terms in the Senate. About his elections there was never a suspicion of anything improper. He is a partisan Republican—I think too partisan a Republican, one of the most relentless Republicans we have here—but he has at all times been an American. The public service will lose an able and conscientious Senator when he retires, and I embrace this opportunity to say it to him now, while he is alive, rather than say it in the long future, perhaps when he may be dead. I wish him happiness and length of days.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, for six years the Senate committees have had under consideration a corrupt-practices prevention act. I want to place in the RECORD the fact that from time to time I have done everything in my power to promote it and to bring it into statute form. It is too late now to hope for its enactment by this Congress; but I do hope that when the new Congress comes into being the Republicans will take the responsibility of putting on the statute books provisions which will make it impossible to corrupt the electorate of this country by the use of money; and certainly I hope, and I expect, that from this side of the Chamber they will receive the cooperation of those who appreciate the importance of this reform.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I desire to know what question is now before the Senate. Is it a motion to take up the reclamation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be no objection to the reception of the credentials of Truman H. Newberry as a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. REED. I want to say a word before they are received, and it is on that point that I desire to address the Senate. Just a word.

Mr. President, perhaps this question has been stated with sufficient fullness. Nevertheless, I want to put into the RECORD, before these credentials are received, a statement of my position.

There was an attempt made to investigate the expenditures in the Michigan election before the election in November. It seems that the question then brought forward was the expenditures alleged to have been made in the primary election. When that question was advanced, I took the position that the Senate ought not to investigate at that time, because, while it had the right, it seemed to me that to investigate would have too much the appearance of seeking to influence the result at the November election, and that an investigation called and in process would amount in a sense to a challenge of the conduct of one of the candidates. After the election was held the question came forward whether there should then be an investigation and also the question whether the credentials of a man elected to the Senate could be received pending a challenge. I took the position then that if the credentials were in proper order they must be received, and the person holding them would be entitled to his seat and to keep his seat until ousted by proper proceedings. Later, when the matter was again pressed, I took the position that it was within the privilege of the Senate, of this present body, to investigate into all the facts and circumstances relating to the election, and to preserve and keep the evidence for action by the Senate as it would be constituted after the 4th of March.

I thought we had the right to make that investigation under our general power to investigate anything relating to the elections of men who would sit as Members of the Congress. I thought we had a right to do it under the general power so often exercised, but I believed in addition to that it was a right inherent in this body to take and preserve the evidence relating to any election, but that it would be unfair for the present Senate to pass upon the question as to the right to a seat, that being a matter to be determined after the 4th of March.

Now, Mr. President, the regrettable thing is that there has been a consistent and a determined effort to prevent the taking and the preserving of evidence. It is absolutely useless to deny the fact that almost every device conceivable has been employed to prevent the taking and the preserving of this evidence. Upon what ground can gentlemen object? It was even proposed that the subcommittee appointed to gather the evidence should be composed of two Republicans and two Democrats, so that there would not be a political majority upon either hand. Do these gentlemen claim that because the majority of the Senate is at the present moment Democratic it implies a dishonest investigation and a dishonest gathering of the evidence? If such a claim as that is advanced then unless somebody can demonstrate that Republicans are inherently more virtuous than Democrats the Democrats might well say there could be no honest investigation after the 4th of March. No one who is a Member of this body would make that charge as against either the Republicans or the Democrats, and it is not true as to either of them. That men may naturally have an inclination for a member of their own party may be true, but that that inclination would interfere with an honest gathering and preservation of this evidence no Member of this body will assert.

When a man seeking a seat in this body through his attorneys and through his representatives undertakes to prevent such an investigation and such a preservation of evidence he places himself in a very unenviable position. He, in fact, challenges the honesty and integrity of the body of Senators who will gather the evidence or he confesses his fear of an honest investigation. I have had some experience in the courts, and it is very seldom that I have ever seen an honest man with a good case refuse to have evidence taken and refuse to allow the full light to be turned upon the situation.

I regret that this condition of affairs has developed. When I see the attorneys for a prospective Senator standing in the corridors of this building and protesting against steps being taken to preserve evidence or to take testimony it impresses me too much as conduct similar to that which sometimes transpires when you find interested parties haunting the doors of a grand jury room.

Personally, I do not care a whit from the political standpoint between these two men who ran for office. Mr. Ford has publicly stated that he is not a Democrat. I believe he has added that he is not a Republican, and, personally, I always prefer a Republican to a nondescript. I am a little bit like the Scriptural expression, which perhaps I can quote, which was said of a certain church, "I would that ye were either cold or hot. Because ye are neither cold nor hot, therefore will I spew you out of my mouth." I like to have a man either a Democrat or a Republican or something else. I simply say that now, not to criticize Mr. Ford, but to emphasize the fact that I have not any political preference as between these men, or if I do have, it is for the Republican, because he has taken his position and we know where to find him.

Mr. President, the fact that Mr. Newberry sends his attorneys here to prevent the taking of testimony is very significant. It is utterly useless to hide behind the old dodge that every lawyer has worked, saying, "Put your finger on the paper you want, and we will perhaps produce that paper. Tell us the particular set of books you want to investigate and we will perhaps produce the books." Every man who has tried lawsuits knows that in cases like this, that in all cases where fraud is charged or where there are many ramifications of corruptions charged, you have to start perhaps with a small fact, and tracing that fact through its various connections you develop other facts, and finally you are able to expose the whole warp and woof of an enormous fraud and a widespread conspiracy. It is the only way cases of this kind can be developed. If all the evidence was known in advance nobody would need an investigation.

The thing that would be done if this investigation was allowed to proceed is this: The members of the committee who conducted the campaign of Mr. Newberry and also the members of the committee who conducted the campaign of Mr. Ford, would be put under oath. They would be put upon the witness stand. They would be inquired of as to their organization and the members of it. They would be asked to produce their books of accounts. They would be asked in what bank they kept their money. They would be asked who were their agents in various counties and various precincts. Having produced that sort of a basis and acquired that kind of knowledge, the investigation would proceed to the banks, to the check books, to the agents, to the correspondence, to all the letters and everything that had passed between them, and when you got through you would know something about it.

Now, for an attorney to stand around on his hind legs and say, "Tell us in advance what we have been doing," when everything has been done in secret, is simply for that attorney to certify to the people and to the country and to everybody else who knows the facts that he wants concealment.

I have reached a point in this matter where my patience is exhausted. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is not here. He is kept away because of a very serious family bereavement or trouble, in which he has my utmost sympathy, and in his absence, notwithstanding the great public importance of this question, I would not insist upon calling up the resolution for action, unless he himself would give his consent.

I suppose this resolution will not pass. I say now that whoever comes here with a credential and at the same time with an attempt to prevent an investigation files a credential that, in my opinion, is tainted. That opinion I will retain until the gentleman presenting it shall lay his books and lay his correspondence and lay his facts—and all the facts—before a committee of this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I understand, practically, it is not controverted that the credential as presented will be filed. The disposition of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio will be attended to either at this session or hereafter. The question of the filing of the credentials I do not understand to be seriously controverted. What the question is before the Senate at this time I am not fully advised. There is no motion to file. It is not required on the presentation of the credentials of a Senator. I make the parliamentary inquiry if the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been trying to find out for 25 minutes whether anyone was going to object to the filing of the credentials of the Senator elect from Michigan or to move anything with reference thereto. There is discussion of the question, but there seems to be nothing doing. Therefore, if no one wants to raise any question, the credentials will be received and filed with the Secretary, and the pending question is the motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of the alleged rehabilitation of farms bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I will take the floor, and, in pursuance of the immemorial custom, I will proceed to talk about something else.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. If it will not lose me the floor, I will yield.

Mr. POMERENE. No. I simply want to say, in view of what was said a moment ago by the Senator from Illinois, if the resolution asking for this investigation in its modified form is not passed—and I do not see any possibility of passing it under the circumstances—the very first day the Senate meets in the next Congress I shall file another motion asking for the investigation of the subject both as it relates to the contestant and the contestee.

ADDRESS BY JUSTICE STAFFORD ON LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. If it will not lose me the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. There appeared in yesterday morning's Post from Mr. Justice Wendell Phillips Stafford a legal discussion of the treaty-making power of the United States in connection with the proposed league of nations. It is one of the ablest and most exhaustive discussions of a legal proposition that it has been my pleasure to read for a long time, and inasmuch as it bears upon the very important subject soon to occupy the attention of the Senate officially, I ask unanimous consent for the printing of this address in the CONGESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

The address referred to is as follows:

AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE VERMONT STATE BAR ASSOCIATION JANUARY 7, 1919, BY WENDELL PHILLIPS STAFFORD, JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

"May the United States join the proposed league of nations by an exercise of the treaty-making power?

"The precise question to which I invite your attention is this: What limitations, if any, are to be found in the Constitution of the United States touching the power of this Government to join a so-called league of nations?

"Before approaching the question itself it may be useful to lay down a few definitions in the language of accepted authorities.

"Sovereignty, as applied to a nation, imports the supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power by which it is governed. A nation is sovereign when this power resides within itself.

"The American Constitution is that written instrument agreed upon by the people of the Union as the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments and officers of the Government, in respect to all the points covered by it, which must control until it shall be changed by the authority which established it, and in opposition to which any act or regulation of any such department or officer, or even of the people themselves, will be altogether void. The will of the people as declared in the Constitution is the final law; and the will of the legislature is law only when it is in harmony with, or at least is not opposed to, that controlling instrument.

"The foregoing definitions are taken from Cooley's introductory chapter to his 'Constitutional Limitations,' with some condensation for the present purpose.

"'The Government of the United States,' said Chief Justice Marshall, 'can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers granted must be such as are expressly given or given by necessary implication.' (1 Wheat., 304, 326.)

"By the tenth amendment 'the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.'

"A few other provisions of the Constitution itself should be noted.

"Article I, section 1: 'All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives.' This provision, however, must be read in connection with Article II, section 2: 'He (the President) shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur'; and with Article VI: 'This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.'

"Article I, section 10: 'No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation * * * nor enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power, or engage in war unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.'

"Article I, section 8: 'The Congress shall have power (inter alia)—

"'To regulate commerce with foreign nations;

"'To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court;

"'To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations;

"'To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;

"'To raise and support armies;

"'To provide and maintain a navy;

"'To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces * * * and

"'To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.'

"Article II, section 1: 'The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.'

"Section 2. 'The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.'

"Article III, section 1: 'The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.'

"Section 2: 'The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority.'

"Next, I invite your attention to a few decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States touching the treaty-making power, from which, I think, it will appear—

"1. That, generally speaking, a treaty is a contract between independent sovereignties and not properly a law.

"2. That by virtue of the constitutional provision already quoted a treaty made by the United States is not only a contract but is also, in some instances, a law.

"3. That, so far as it rests in the promise of something to be done by our Government, it is a contract only, to be fulfilled or not as the political departments of the Government may decide and is not to be interfered with by the courts.

"4. That, so far as it is by its terms operative without the aid of legislation, and in so far as it affects personal or property rights, it is a law and to be dealt with as such by the courts.

"5. That, as a law, it stands on the same footing with an act of Congress and is, equally with an act of Congress, subject to be modified or repealed by a later act of Congress as well as by a later treaty.

"6. That, as a law, it is, equally with an act of Congress, vulnerable to constitutional objection—with the qualification that that may be done by a treaty which can not be done by an act of Congress—and if it is inconsistent with the Constitution is consequently null and void; in other words, that it can not be made the means of working an amendment of the Constitution.

"7. That, even when operating as a contract only and not as a law within the meaning just given, it must still be consistent with the Constitution, as all departments of the Government are bound to observe and obey the fundamental law.

"8. That the treaty power, if it keeps clear of constitutional objections, is in its scope unlimited and may deal with any situation or question which may properly be the subject of negotiation and contract between independent powers.

"Turning now to the cases—

"In Foster v. Neilson (2 Pet., 253) it was held that a treaty which declared that certain titles should be ratified and confirmed was ineffectual to confirm the titles, but that it was for Congress, if and when it saw fit, to fulfill the promise of the treaty by appropriate legislation, as in certain instances Congress, in pursuance of the treaty, had already done, but not in the instance then before the court. Chief Justice Marshall there said, at page 314: 'A treaty is, in its nature, a contract between two nations, not a legislative act. It does not generally effect, of itself, the object to be accomplished, especially so far as its operation is infraterritorial; but it is carried into execution by the sovereign power of the respective parties to the instrument. In the United States a different principle is established. Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is, consequently, to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the legislature whenever it operates of itself, without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not the judicial, department; and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court.'

"Whitney v. Robertson (124 U. S., 190) was an action against the collector of customs at the port of New York to recover back duties that had been collected under an act of Congress which was alleged to be in conflict with a treaty between the United States and the country from which the goods had been imported. It was held that even if the act was in conflict with the treaty, yet, being a later expression of the sovereign will, it was binding on the courts. 'By the Constitution,' said Mr. Justice Field, 'a treaty is placed on the same footing and made of like obligation with an act of legislation. Both are declared by that instrument to be supreme law of the land, and no superior efficacy is given to either over the other; * * * if the two are inconsistent, the one last in date will control the other, provided the stipulation of the treaty upon the subject is self-executing.' If not self-executing, he says, as Chief Justice Marshall had already said in Foster v. Neilson, the courts can not treat it as law, but only as a promise of the political departments, to be fulfilled, if at all, by them. In closing the opinion of the court Mr. Justice Field says: 'It follows, therefore, that when a law is clear in its provisions its validity can not be assailed before the courts for want of conformity to stipulations of a previous treaty not already executed. Considerations of that character belong to another department of the Government. The duty of the courts is to construe and give effect to the latest expression of the sovereign will.' Mr. Justice Field continues: 'In Head Money cases (112 U. S., 580) it was objected to an act of Congress that it violated provisions contained in treaties with foreign nations; but the court replied that so far as the provisions of the act were in conflict with any treaty they must prevail in all the courts of the country; and after a full and elaborate consideration of the subject it was held that "so far as a treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation can be the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal."'

"In the Head Money cases thus referred to with approval, Mr. Justice Miller had expressed the opinion of the court in the following language: 'A treaty is a law of the land, as an act of Congress is, whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined. But even in this aspect of the cases there is nothing in this law (the treaty) which makes it irrepealable or unchangeable. The Constitution gives it no superiority over an act of Congress in this respect, which may be repealed or modified by an act of a later date. Nor is there anything in its essential character, or in the branches of the Government by which the treaty is made, which gives it this superior sanctity. A treaty is made by the President and the Senate. Statutes are made by the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives. The addition of the latter body to the other two in making a law certainly does not render it less entitled to respect in the matter of its repeal or modification than a treaty made by the other two. If there be any differences in this regard, it would seem to be in favor of an act in which all three of the bodies participate. And such is in fact the case in a declaration of war, which must be made by Congress and which when made usually suspends or destroys existing treaties between the nations thus at war.'

"It would be strange reasoning, indeed, to say that a treaty could not be unconstitutional and therefore void, although it could be repealed by act of Congress, while acts themselves are subject to objection on the ground of being unconstitutional.

"That the treaty-making power is incompetent to part with any portion of the sovereignty of the Nation under the Constitution is the basis of the decision in Fong Yue Ting v. United States (149 U. S., 698), in which it was held that the right to exclude or expel aliens in war or peace is 'an inherent and inalienable right of every sovereign and independent nation,' and consequently that the hands of Congress were not tied by a treaty giving to Chinamen the right to remain here; and that Chinamen who had come and remainded here for many years under the provisions of such a treaty had acquired no vested right to remain. Said the court, through Mr. Justice Gray: 'Jurisdiction over its own territory to that extent is an incident of every independent nation. It is a part of its independence. If it could not exclude aliens, it would be to that extent subject to the control of another power.' In further illustration of powers conferred upon Congress and not to be curtailed by the treaty-making power, the learned justice refers to 'the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, including the entrance of ships, the importation of goods, and the bringing of persons into the ports of the United States; to establish a uniform rule of naturalization; to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations; to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water; to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; and to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution these powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.' Whatever treaty, then, may be made in reference to any of these matters must be subject to the power of Congress to alter or repeal at its pleasure; for, as he continues, 'In our jurisprudence, it is well settled that the provisions of an act of Congress, passed in the exercise of its constitutional authority, on this as on any other subject, if clear and explicit, must be upheld by the courts, even in contravention of express stipulations in an earlier treaty.' Quoting from Chae Chan Ping's case, One hundred and thirtieth United States, page 581, he makes this weighty observation: 'The powers of government are delegated in trust to the United States and are incapable of transfer to any other parties. They can not be abandoned or surrendered. * * * The execution of these public trusts is not the subject of barter or contract.'

"The obligation of the treaty-making power to keep within the limits of the Constitution and the otherwise unlimited field it may occupy have been clearly recognized in various opinions of the same court. Thus, by Field, J., in Geoffrey v. Rigg (133 U. S., 258, 266): 'The treaty power as expressed in the Constitution is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the nature of the Government or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter without its consent. (Fort Leavenworth Railroad Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525, 541.) But, with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country. (Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall., 199; Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat., 259; Houenstein v. Lynhan, 100 U. S., 433.)'

"It should never be forgotten that the question of constitutionality as applied to a treaty, or any other act of governmental power, is not the same thing with the question whether the constitutionality could ever be brought before a judicial tribunal for decision. The executive and the legislative departments are bound, equally with the judicial department, to obey the fundamental law. Their oaths to support and defend the Constitution are equally sacred and binding whether their acts can or can not be drawn in question in a court of justice.

"When the President and the Senate have concluded a treaty calling for the appropriation of money, a bill for which can originate only in the House of Representatives, it has generally been considered a political and moral duty on the part of the House to make the appropriation, since otherwise the good faith of the Nation would be broken. Yet, even in that contingency, it has been maintained by eminent leaders of the House that appropriations would be justifiably refused if the treaty were incompatible 'with the fundamental principles, purposes, or interests of the Constitution.' (Report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives in regard to the purchase of Alaska. See Devlin on Treaty Power, sec. 83.)

"The House has undoubted power to refuse to appropriate the funds required for the fulfillment of treaty obligations, just as the legislative branch as a whole has power to abolish all courts of the United States inferior to the Supreme Court. But the right to do either is an altogether different question.

"Out of abundant caution and to make sure of the cooperation of the House in the passage of necessary legislation, our treaties have sometimes provided that they should not become effective until approved by act of Congress. But even if this were done, it would not remove the question of constitutionality if the treaty should amount to an overthrow of the Constitution itself. (See Treaty with Cuba, referred to in Devlin on Treaty Power, secs. 88 to 90.)

"When the question of the ratification of our present Constitution was pending it was objected on the part of its opponents that by its terms the treaty power was unlimited. In reply Mr. Madison said: 'In the existing Confederacy, Congress is authorized indefinitely to make treaties. * * * Does it follow because the power is given to Congress that it is absolute and unlimited? I do not believe that power is given to the President and Senate to dismember the empire or to alienate any great essential right. I do not think the whole legislative authority have this power. The exercise of the power must be consistent with the object of the delegation.' And he proceeded to show that as it would be impossible to enumerate all the cases in which the power might be exercised, it was safest to leave the grant in general terms.

"Duer, in his lectures on Constitutional Jurisprudence, takes the same ground, and adds: 'In order to ascertain whether the execution of the treaty-making power can be supported in any given case, those principles of the Constitution from which the power proceeds should be carefully applied to it. The power must indeed be construed in subordination to the Constitution; and however in its operation it may qualify, it can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions, nor can it ever be so interpreted as to destroy other powers granted by that instrument. A treaty to change the organization of the Government, or annihilate its sovereignty, or overthrow the republican form, or to deprive it of any of its constitutional powers would be void, because it would defeat the will of the people, which it was designed to fulfill.' (2d ed., p. 228.)

"The treatment of the question by John C. Calhoun (2 Works, 132, 135), quoted at length in Devlin's work, is marked by the iron logic of the great reasoner. In its reference to the power of a treaty to change State boundaries or cede any portion of the territory of a State we note his inflexible adherence to the doctrine of State rights and find him in conflict with Chancellor Kent, but otherwise his exposition agrees with that of the jurists and statesmen already cited. I quote a part: 'It—the treaty power—is limited by all the provisions of the Constitution which inhibit certain acts from being done by the Government or any of its departments, of which description there are many. It is also limited by such provisions of the Constitution as direct acts to be done in a particular way and which prohibit the contrary, of which a striking example is to be found in that which declares that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations to be made by law." This not only imposes an important restriction on the powers, but it gives to Congress as the lawmaking power, and to the House of Representatives as a portion of the Congress, the right to withhold the appropriations, and thereby an important control over the treaty-making power whenever money is required to carry a treaty into effect, which is usually the case, especially in regard to those of much importance. There still remains another and more important limitation, but of a more general and indefinite character. It can enter into no stipulation calculated to change the character of the Government or to do that which can only be done by the constitution-making power, or which is inconsistent with the nature and structure of the Government or the objects for which it was formed.'

"Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, has little to say upon our subject, for that work deals strictly with the limitations upon the powers of the States; but in his Constitutional Law he sums up the matter with characteristic comprehensiveness and brevity, as follows: 'The Constitution imposes no restriction upon this power, but it is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a department of the Government or any of the States of its constitutional authority.' (3d ed., p. 177.)

"That a treaty may be unconstitutional and void as violating the fundamental principles and the distribution of powers in that instrument has been affirmed also in opinions delivered by Jay, Story, Taney, Clifford, Daniel, Swayne, MacLean, and White, as well as in solemn declarations by Hamilton, Jefferson, Clay, Tucker, Rawle, Pomeroy, Wharton, Root. See Tucker's work, 'Limitations on the Treaty-Making Power,' chapters 1 and 2.

"In favor of an unlimited treaty power under the Constitution an argument has been drawn from the fact that the Constitution, while it declares that acts of Congress shall be the supreme law of the land when made 'pursuant to the Constitution,' uses, in conferring the treaty power, no such language, but uses instead this language: 'Treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States.' But the answer is obvious. A sufficient reason for this difference is to be found in the fact that treaties made before this Constitution, as well as those which should be made after its adoption, are declared to be the supreme law of the land. For example, the treaty of peace with Great Britain, made in 1783, was by this clause made the law of the land as much as if it had been signed after the Constitution had been adopted. (Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall., 199.)

"Equally important with an observance of constitutional limitations upon the treaty power is the absolute freedom of that power within such limitations. Nothing should ever be done or said or written to cast doubt upon it. This consideration has led some writers to declare the treaty power to be absolutely or practically unlimited, but such, as we have seen, it can hardly be held to be. The weakness and insufficiency of the treaty power under the Continental Congress and the old Articles of Confederation were, as we all know, one of the moving causes to the forming of a more perfect union in the Constitution of 1787. The free and unhampered exercise of this august power may be all that can save us in time of national peril, in grave crises which no man can foresee. To preserve the life of the Nation in time of war it may be necessary to surrender, and surrender instantly, what in ordinary times we might think should never be surrendered. As Butler observes in his elaborate and able work on the treaty-making power of the United States, when such an emergency arises the burning question will not be one of legal power to cede territory, but of physical power to retain it. (Sec. 400.) All that we have a right to ask is that those who are intrusted with power under the Constitution should look to the Constitution itself for the limit of power, and should not attempt to pass to others the trusts that are reposed solely and explicitly in them.

"Let us consider now in the light of these principles and authorities what kind of a league might be joined by the United States consistently with the Constitution.

"By Article III, section 2, the judicial power of the United States, vested in the Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish, is declared to extend, among other things, to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States. This power is definitely lodged. Can it be delegated to any other judicial power, with the result that a court of the nations shall have jurisdiction and authority finally to determine for the United States the construction and meaning of the very treaty by which the international court itself has been created, to determine the duty and obligation of the people of the United States under that treaty, and to render a judgment enforcable by the power of the league against the United States or its citizens?

"By Article II, section 2, clause 2, the President is given power to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointment is not therein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law, although the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they may think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. The duty, as well as the power, of appointing to all offices, from the highest to the lowest, is thus carefully and explicitly prescribed and bestowed. How can that duty be disregarded, or that power delegated, in favor of any other body, with the result that officers exercising authority over the people of the United States or wielding its power can be appointed by a league or combination of foreign powers, even though the United States is represented in that league?

"The power to declare war is vested exclusively in the Congress. Can a treaty vest it in a league of nations? Can the Congress itself delegate this power? Can it leave to a league of nations to determine when we shall be at war with our neighbors?

"Apparently it would be competent for the United States to become a party to a league that should have a council of conciliation, and to agree that any controversies between this country and other members of the league should be submitted to such a council for its review and recommendation before any hostile action should be taken. Such an arrangement could last only during the life of the treaty creating the league, which, of course, might be ended at any time if the emergency justified such action in the conscience of the withdrawing nation. But to provide that the nation could not withdraw would be to take away the sovereignty of the nation and vest it in the league itself.

"Apparently there could be no constitutional objection to this country entering a league of nations which should agree, as our States did under the old confederation, that during the life of the treaty no two or more of them should enter into any treaty or alliance whatever between them without the consent of the other members of the league. They might enter into an agreement concerning their commercial relations with each other, concerning their respective armaments, and concerning the means that should be taken to defend their common interests and meet any new menace to free institutions, as well as to unite in assistance to the newly arisen free states which are to stand as a bulwark against German aggression toward the east. But for the continuance of such an agreement it may be necessary to rely upon a continuance of the present determination among free peoples to stand together, rather than upon a hard and fast authority vested in a central body to enforce obedience against the parties to the agreement. If we are to have the latter, is it not reasonably certain that we must get it by direct grant from the people themselves in the manner prescribed by the Constitution for its own amendment, and not by the action of officers or departments whose authority is limited by the purposes for which our present Constitution was framed?

"We must not forget the teachings of our own history. If we do form a league of nations which is at all analogous to the loose leagues that preceded our own Constitution we must expect to meet the same questions that the fathers met. There will be found to be the same weakness in a central body that can not enforce its mandates, but can only make requests. There will arise the same confusion touching the interpretation of the league's organic law, requiring a supreme court of the nations to interpret the meaning of the instrument for all; and eventually the same necessity will be found to exist for an executive power to carry out the decisions that are reached. If we enter upon that road, history shows us plainly that it must either end abruptly or else run onward toward something on a world scale comparable to the national Republic under which we live. Whether the nations of the earth, or any sufficient number of them, have yet reached a point where they hold in common the ideals of government, of liberty, of morals, and of law that are necessary to form the cement of any real and lasting union is a question for the statesman, not for the lawyer as such. Upon that subject you would not expect me to enter here. The pertinency of these observations lies in the fact that if under our present Constitution such a union as would eventually be found necessary can be formed by the exercise of the treaty power, then it follows that by the treaty power the United States may be brought to occupy in a world league such a position as one of its States now occupies in this Union. Can such an end be reached through the treaty power? Does the Constitution of the United States authorize its officers or departments, either by one treaty or by a succession of treaties, to make this Nation a state in a world union as one of its own States is now a member of its own Union? If that is to be done, must it not be done by the exercise of the power which by the tenth amendment is still reserved to the people?

"You will understand, of course, that in this effort to outline the constitutional limitations upon the treaty power in respect to the formation of a league of nations I am speaking as a lawyer and am confining myself to the question proposed. I am not discussing the question of the desirability of a league of nations either as a condition to the present peace settlement or as a step to be taken at a later time. There can be no doubt, it seems to me, that certain limitations do exist, and must be recognized now or later; and certainly if they do exist, the sooner they are recognized the better. Even for a peace treaty formed with the best intentions in the endeavor to safeguard free institutions and secure the peace of the world we should be paying a price too dear if we should find that we had involved ourselves in an unconstitutional situation by attempting that which the delegation of powers from the people had never contemplated or authorized, and consequently that our labor had been wasted. It may be that nothing of this character will be attempted or proposed in the treaty to be formulated at the present conference, but the wide range the discussion has taken in deliberative assemblies and in the public press, the large and vague language that has sometimes been used, and the general confusion of thought that continues to exist even after all that we have been told upon the subject, no less than the recent definite proposal of the league for peace, to which I am soon to call your attention, has seemed to justify an examination of the question at this time.

"Before giving our attention to this definite proposal, let us summarize briefly, even at the expense of some repetition. Lord Bacon said that no time was ever wasted that was spent in stating the question with clearness and precision.

"A treaty is a contract between nations. For us, a treaty is a contract between the United States and a foreign nation or nations. So far as it is an engagement on the part of the United States to do certain things, it is a contract only, and with it the courts have nothing to do. So far as it is self-executing it is a law. As a law it is of the same force as an act of Congress. As a law it is subject to alteration or repeal by an act of Congress. As a law it must, equally with an act of Congress, be consistent with the Constitution. Neither as a law nor as a contract can it work an amendment to the Constitution; although, if it operate only as a contract, the question of its constitutionality might possibly never be the subject of judicial consideration. Yet he would be a bold man who should say, under any treaty, that no question of personal or property rights could by any possibility become the subject of litigation. But whether the treaty be the subject of judicial cognizance or not, the President and the Senate are, equally with the courts, bound to act only within the limits of the Constitution, and if they should overpass the limits the House would be under no obligation to carry it into execution by legislation.

"The Constitution vests the executive power of the United States in the President; and this power can not be delegated to a foreign nation, body, or officer. The Constitution vests the legislative power of the United States in the Congress. Neither a treaty nor an act of Congress can delegate this power to a foreign nation, body, or officer. Consequently the United States can not under its present Constitution, either by treaty or by act of Congress, make itself a party to a league of nations in such wise that the league shall exercise either the executive or the legislative power of the United States. Neither of the three departments of our Government can trespass upon the domain of either of the other two as fixed by the Constitution, or delegate any of its powers to either. How much less can any or all delegate any of their powers to a foreign body. The people of the United States have never consented to live under the authority of a league of nations or of any foreign power, and they have never delegated to any officer or department of their Government the power to subject them to the executive and legislative acts of any foreign power or combination of powers.

"What shall be said of the judicial power of the United States? That does not extend to the determination of controversies between the United States and foreign nations, although it does extend to the interpretation of treaties for the people of the United States. Each foreign nation is, equally with the United States, sovereign and independent, and such controversies must be settled by agreement, by arbitration, or by force. Any question or controversy which might constitutionally be made the subject of a treaty would seem to be equally a question or controversy which might be submitted to arbitration.

"If the decision might deprive the United States of its independence or essentially impair its sovereignty, it would probably not be the proper subject of a constitutional provision in a treaty. Whether the President and the Senate may constitutionally bind the United States by a treaty to submit to arbitrators thereafter to be chosen or to an already established international tribunal all questions or all questions of a given character that may arise, or whether, on the other hand, the President and the Senate must deal with such cases as and when they arise, is a subject that has been much discussed in former years in the Senate and elsewhere, and may be left aside. It does, however, fall within the scope of our inquiry to consider whether it would be consistent with the Constitution to make a treaty by which the United States would bind itself to submit to a permanent international court all controversies that should or could arise between itself and any other party or parties to the league if the judgments of such a court are to be enforcible by the physical power of the league. We are not considering at this moment whether the American people might be willing to bind themselves so to submit all their controversies, but whether by the Constitution they have already empowered the President and Senate to do so. That, it seems to me, presents a question of a very grave character. And the wider the class of questions proposed to be submitted the graver the question. Have the people of the United States ever yet consented to abide by the judgment of a foreign tribunal touching all the questions that can possibly arise between their Government and foreign Governments? Have they by the Constitution authorized any department or officer to subject them to such authority and judgment?

"We have heard and read much of a proposed league of nations which is to have a world police force—that is to say, an army and a navy of its own. That implies, does it not, the exercise of the executive power for and on behalf of each member of the league in the interest of the whole? Can the President and the Senate—can the President, the Senate, and the House make the United States a party to such a league without attempting to vest therein a portion, and a not inconsiderable portion, of the executive power of this Government, which by the Constitution is vested solely in the President? It is proposed by some that the German colonies be disposed of by passing them over to the league. If that be done, will not the league become thereby a separate territorial sovereignty? And if so, must it not have the necessary powers of government—executive, legislative, and judicial? And is that sovereignty to be made up in part by a cession of sovereignty from the United States, to wit, a portion of its power to make and execute laws? Is the proposed league to have the usual powers of government—legislative, executive, and judicial—or is it to have only the power to recommend and request action on the part of its members? This question is answered by the distinct and definite proposal of the head of the League to Enforce Peace, in an article appearing in the newspapers under date of January 3, 1919, as follows:

"'The functions of the league may conveniently be divided into the legislative, the judicial, the mediating, and the executive. The congress of all the world powers, great and small, will consider and determine general principles of international law and policy for the guidance of the judicial and executive branches. It may well codify international law and give it that definite legislative sanction the absence of which has led some jurists to deny that it is law at all. * * * The judicial branch or court of the league should not be a representative body at all. It should be a tribunal made up of great international jurists. * * * They should be permanent judges, made independent in tenure and compensation. Citizenship in countries party to the controversy should disqualify members of the court in a particular case. They should have jurisdiction to hear only pure questions of law and fact. No political question should come before them. They should interpret treaties and declare and apply the international law as now established or as qualified and enacted by the congress of the powers. * * * In its practical workings the great powers will furnish the police force of the league and their representatives should exercise the executive function. The safety and security of the lesser nations, who can not be expected to share the burden of military contribution, will be found in the judgment of the impartial international court, in the recommendation of the commission of conciliation, and in the principles of international justice ordained in a congress of the world nations.'

"The question naturally arises whether those who join this league will be at liberty to withdraw from it at pleasure. That question was put to Mr. Taft by a woman in a New York audience not long ago, and he is reported to have answered with a laugh: 'Well, you know what happened here in the Civil War.' The proposal is, then, on the part of a considerable body of opinion, to form a union analogous to our own federation, from which the members can not withdraw except by fighting their way out. The question I submit is this:

"Is there any power under our Constitution, vested in any or all of the departments of this Government, to make the United States a party to a league of that character? If that is to be done, must it not be done by a submission of the plan to the people themselves, and was a more solemn and momentous question ever proposed for the deliberation and action of men?"

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Illinois for a moment about the consent which has just been given? This address of Judge Stafford was delivered to the Vermont Bar Association, and I presented it to the Senate on Saturday, asking that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, with the request that they report it out to be printed as a public document. I also presented with it another address of Judge Stafford, which was also referred to the committee. I hope the committee will act on the matter and report out a resolution for printing the addresses as a public document.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the President and his appointees on the peace conference have no instructions from the American people to bind them in a perpetual alliance with the several nations of the earth. The Senate has no popular mandate to ratify such a proposed treaty. Neither the President nor the Senate nor both jointly has power to abrogate the Constitution that created them or transfer the sovereignty of the United States nor any of its essential attributes to any other human authority exercising or attempting to exercise that sovereignty over our Government or our citizens.

The qualified voters of this country and the indestructible States are the source of sovereignty. From them sprang the Federal Government, dual in nature and national in character. This mechanism so framed operates by the power transmitted through frequent elections and regulated by constitutional grants and limitations. Nowhere is the Government, its Congress, its Executive, or its courts given authority to surrender or transfer its powers to any alien creation. They may exercise those powers but they can not abdicate and vest them elsewhere. That can be done only by the creative sovereign that gave them political life. Our lives and resources to the last man and dollar are given by this amazing document into the keeping of a few men. Wise and patriotic they may be, but our ancestors refused to risk such an agency with our public rights and private security.

This peace conference will be a body of men from many nations, languages, customs, standards of conduct, races, habits, and religions. Their hopes, purposes, and national ideals develop under widely varying impulses. They may or may not excel ours and surpass us in the several fields of human achievement.

That is not the issue. What must be steadily seen is committing our country and our lives and our posterity irrevocably to an invisible and unknown power. If we cut the cables of constitutional government here we are caught in the irresistible tides that sweep us into the maelstrom of the Old World's bloody currents flowing from every shore. The feuds and spoliations of a thousand years become our daily chart of action. It is not do they threaten or menace us. All we can know is a few men in some hidden chamber, known as the executive council, wield over us powers of life and death.

An oligarchy is the worst possible form of government. The executive council is the worst possible form of an oligarchy. It orders Congress to-day to send half a million of our young men into central Asia to be hacked to pieces on the plateau of Tibet. To-morrow Egypt is assailed by desert hordes and more levies are sent to slaughter in a struggle that does not remotely concern our peace.

We are not colonizers. We have not sought to sound our morning drumbeats around the world. From the day the first settler landed on the James River in the Old Dominion and the Pilgrim's prayer rose in the primeval forest of the old Bay State we have been content to cultivate and develop this our portion of the continent, and point the way for the industrious God-fearing immigrant to make a new home from across the sea. The great labor-saving machines, the communication of thought, the secrets of nature's processes seized and adapted to human use, the greatest of world discoveries have been our contribution to mankind.

While nations fought for supremacy and territory around the globe, we labored with what we had to make the most of our blessings. They desolated the earth for glory and for gold. We tilled the earth and sailed the seas in peace. In turn the Dane, the Spaniard, the Briton, the Frank, and the Hun has stripped the confines of every land of its gold. The American has dug it from the mine and washed it from the sands. We created it from our fertile soil and inexhaustible resources. From commerce the calm pulse of nations showed no poison of ignoble conquest in our veins, no stains to sully an honorable ambition for bloodless gain.

While Europe, Asia, and Africa robbed and murdered, we farmed and manufactured, built railroads, and annexed nobody's territory. The Old World simply harvested the destruction she sowed. Her heritage has been war and ours peace. We are asked to abandon our own and adopt another's.

Now, having helped put the German where he belongs, and being willing in like circumstances to help do so again, we are asked to lend our lives and treasures to every feud that blazes out in three continents, whether it concerns or menaces our interests or safety or not. We are invited to become the knight-errant of the world. A nation's first duty is to its own people. Its government is for them.

Nearly four months ago the belligerent nations signed the armistice that saved Germany from a destructive atonement for her crimes. In that time the responsible agents of the United States of America have not occupied themselves in ending the war and writing terms of peace upon which Germany shall pay the penalty of acknowledged defeat in her attempts against civilized mankind. They have busied themselves with an effort to create a superstate above the governments and peoples of nations to exercise supersovereignty over both nations and their individual citizens and subjects.

Advantage is taken of a wish for universal and permanent peace to present this device as a certain instrumentality to that desired end. Much grievous misunderstanding and some self-deception result from misleading labels that assure the public the contents are of a designated character. A certain number of people habitually assume things are actually what they are said to be in the descriptive words attached, because it is always easier to accept names than examine facts. Many good men have parted with valuable possessions owing to this disposition, receiving in exchange something of indifferent worth.

The constitution of the league of nations must be submitted to that scrutiny which will assay its service as a charter prescribing a rule of conduct among nations and whether obedience can be secured. It must be tested by the peoples grouped under sovereign governments to ascertain how it will affect them and what burdens are likely to be assumed; what measure of relief is practicable. Does this document give it, or if not, what can be written reasonably calculated to accomplish that measure of relief? These are inquiries which merit the highest effort of which this Senate and the American Nation are capable. Such a momentous issue seldom challenges free people for decision.

The nations now occupying the earth came from a remote past. Whatever others may think of history, I am compelled at times to have recourse to the history of the various governments and nations that have occupied the earth in order to obtain light on the present. Their governments descended from ancient thrones, sprang from revolution, or are the heritage of development and accumulated experience. Their customs, usages, and laws vary. They comprise many religions and ethics and standards of morals. Their ethnology embraces the entire human family with their several languages. History is the philosophic chain that binds the past with the living present and its deep, pulsating currents of action.

All nations with organic government sufficient to be dealt with as responsible powers can be assembled by their voluntary act under a code of international law. Twenty-six nations so obligated themselves in 1899 in the first Hague convention. Forty-four nations were signatory in 1907 to the second Hague convention. When the armistice was signed November 11, 1918, all the warring nations were contracting parties agreeing in 1907 to arbitrate differences as a substitute for war. Every outrage perpetrated by Germany she had bound herself not to commit. Her deliberate policy of frightfulness she had solemnly covenanted should never be pursued. The indispensable end to be sought, therefore, is not to multiply international agreements, but to discover means of compelling or persuading nations to keep them when made.

I am skeptical on moral suasion as a coercive agency on some governments. It is idle to appeal to the people ruled by such governments for an improved or higher sense of right or wrong. Independent nations having their own governments generally have as good ones as they are capable of operating. Not as good as they desire often, but as good as they can get and keep in the long run. It is a considerable journey from despotism to free government. It is a ceaseless task to prevent free government from degenerating into a dissolution of just restraints. At one extreme is arbitrary power in a king; at the other, arbitrary power in a class or multitude, and there is no difference in the intrinsic evils of either.

What Germany or Russia may develop lies in the realm of conjecture. What their established relations may be with the rest of the world is uncharted diplomacy. Who knows whether they will emerge from their civil chaos and bloody tumults with a sense of national honor and obligation that will make them keep their faith when pledged or be merely predatory freebooters, to be restrained only by armies and navies?

Europe contains many independent sovereign nations. Some submerged nationalities, overwhelmed by wars reaching back some centuries, will undoubtedly rise to reassumed sovereignty. With the latter we may be concerned. They might be converted into warlike forces against us if subject to a dominant government, our enemy. Much European bloodshed has had its origin in commercial rivalry resulting in territorial aggression. It may be repeated. Most wars of modern times have begun in Europe. Kings have fought to gain thrones for their kin and subordinates. Ancient feuds of reigning families have sent armies into many a disastrous field. Ambitious men have risen to shake continents with their struggles for power.

That is all to end, however, because we now hear that kings are no more and the people will administer all future governments. We fervently pray it may be so. Yet some of the people we are asked by this league to invest with sovereign power over us may well engage our concern.

Russia is the fountainhead of bloody chaos and the attempted dissolution of every civil and domestic tie dear to the Anglo-Saxon race. Germany may be passing from despotic rule to class government founded on Marxian socialism.

The restless elements of Europe, inured to violence and disliking the monotony of private industry, are always explosive material: Erecting them into states does not insure tranquillity. To all such people, if they have not wisdom and virtue, self-restraint and justice to the minority, liberty is the greatest of all possible evils, not only to them but to the world.

If we ratify this league in its present form, we invest such people with equal power over us. Their vices and misfortunes react upon us. Their follies and crimes become in turn a menace, because we have given them an equal vote in the league with our own country. It may become not a means of removing a menace but of creating one beyond our power either to abate or to remove.

The constitution of the league of nations is a Pandora's box of evil to empty upon the American people the aggregated calamities of the world, and only time is the infallible test even of our own institutions.

What is our internal strength, and what burdens can we safely carry from the Old World? Are we the governmental Ajax upon whose shoulders rest the calamities and the burdens of the earth? This document assumes it. It was this wholesome solicitude that woke the wise counsels of those who hewed with sturdy stroke and laid deep and strong the great foundation stones of civil liberty and self-government.

Not doctrinaires nor dreamers floating serenely in the cloudlands of speculative philosophy were the men who wrote our charters and forged the mighty instruments of freedom in the Western Hemisphere. They were not novices. They had fought battles. They had felt the depression of defeat. Victory had not relaxed their unceasing vigilance. With peace they returned to their homes and families and the cares of private life. They assumed the task of framing a Government to save in peace what they had gained in war. We are asked to ratify and create something that will lose in peace what we won in war. They did not find it necessary to become Bolshevists and murder all who were suspected of having any sense in order to divide their property. They left names that shine with an undimmed luster in the infancy of nations. When they fought England, the shadow of the scaffold ever fell across the way of the unsuccessful rebel against the mother country's authority, for England then punished rebellion without mercy. Behind the ermined judge of the English courts ever stood the executioner with the headsman's ax.

The great adopted son of Massachusetts in the old Senate Chamber near us portrayed the power of their ancestors' enemy in unrivaled eloquence:

> They raised their flag against a power to which, for purposes of foreign conquest and subjugation, Rome in the height of her glory is not to be compared; a power which has dotted over the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, and whose morning drumbeats following the sun and, keeping company with the hours, circle the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.

Our forefathers warred with such a power with their lives and fortunes at stake. They left us the heritage of their sacrifice and their solemn admonitions summed up in the Farewell Address read annually in this Chamber. Against their wisdom and experience now rise the dreamer and the bookman, the Socialist, and the mere haberdasher in phrases which intoxicate and mislead; sincere men some whose zeal for the millenium made by human hands blinds them to mere human faults and limitations. Many, too, are abroad of whom Paul wrote to Timothy:

> From which some having swerved have turned aside unto jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law, understanding neither what they say nor whereof they affirm.

The founders of this Government had a working knowledge of the great headlands of civil liberty. They had known the elemental struggles to safeguard human rights, to curb the great and raise the low. They knew Europe, its quicksands, its bloody pitfalls in which their ancestors had died for a thousand years. They hated its kings, its nobles, its mobs, its revolutions, its heartless caste, its cruelty, and its crimes. They left their solemn warning to posterity to let Europe settle her own quarrels, and they wrote in our great charter that no gifts, no titles of nobility, no blazing stars or brilliant ribbons should be granted by any of the elements from which we had severed ourselves, unless by consent of Congress. Still, two carloads of them have come to this Capital. We are drifting, only God in His omniscience knows where.

With all this there is but little concern here. We are deluged with advice from many sources to ratify what has been returned to us and not to lay profane and sacrilegious hands upon it. Let us remember the warnings of some of the men who at least had as much at stake as any who ever fought or risked their all on the field. With those admonitions we must have concern. God grant that they may blaze from the heights of the continent until it kindles a responsive sentiment in every American heart. Why shall we forget their caution and bind ourselves to spill our blood and pay taxes in every quarrel on the three continents and seas of the Old World? Shall academic conjecture yield to demonstrated experience?

This proposed constitution becomes international law to its members at least. Laws are successful only when they conform to the sentiments and practices of men familiar and charged with the actual responsibilities and methods of successful performance. Such men devise the means to face emergencies and insure safety.

This document is sought to be made the constitution of nations and the Senate in due time will be asked to ratify or approve it. It can not become more than a treaty pledging the Nation's faith for its performance. It merely gathers into one document what might be deemed wise rules to regulate the conduct of nations. If it be valuable, it is because it has knit into a positive declaration of international law whatever it contains of worth. If this attempt succeed as a remedy for the evils in view, it is prudent to follow human experience in devising that remedy.

When the United States by joint resolution of Congress entered the war April 6, 1917, we signed no pact with the Governments arrayed against the central powers. The American felt in his heart Germany was a menace to the free governments of the world. There was an instinctive horror at Germany's methods of making war and her avowed policy of frightfulness. It was known she aimed at world dominion. Those in authority at this Capitol knew we must fight the danger alone or jointly with the allies.

We chose to make common cause against a common danger. To do so we abdicated no sovereign power. We bound ourselves in no perpetual alliance to draw the sword whenever and so long as a majority of European governments voted it upon us. Our practical expression in this crisis was to reserve for ourselves the power to decide when and how long a controversy between two or more nations in some quarter of the globe was of such magnitude as to warrant our interference even to the extremity of war.

A working status was in fact established between our Government and the allies. Under it the war was fought successfully to the armistice of November 11, 1918. No nation surrendered its sovereignty. They voluntarily combined their strength against the common peril. It was a union of equals, and each was in an equally common self-defense bound to give all it had if the struggle demanded it. This is the key to any league of nations that will survive the ephemeral theories and impossible yearnings of the alleged friends of humanity who are more fertile in phrase making than successful in the practical affairs of men.

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], December 18, 1918, in a compact and impressive address to the Senate announced the way of safety, both foreign and domestic. He stated:

> If a situation should arise in which any power or combination of powers should directly or indirectly menace the freedom and peace of Europe the United States would regard such situation with grave concern as a menace to its own freedom and peace, and would consult with other powers affected with a view to concerted action for the removal of such menace.

The Senator continued:

> If this had been the avowed and understood policy of the United States before July, 1914, it is, in my judgment, very improbable the war would have occurred.

The actual working alliance between our Government and Germany's European enemies was and is now one founded on this principle, recognized and stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania. It is evolved from conditions. It implies no loss of sovcreignty and no violence to national sentiment. It is a cooperative expression of the law of self-defense, an American doctrine on which every patriot can join his fellow man. It impairs no constitutional power of Congress. It invades no executive domain, and it leaves our Government the responsible instrumentality to direct the will of our people. We escape the perils of surrendering our country to the mandates of a majority of the Governments of the Old World by this course.

The same public opinion in a free government that would unite our people under the proposed league would lead to concerted action under a treaty whose obligation rests in good faith. If public opinion does not support the league, it can not send armies into the field. America will not sacrifice her lives and her treasure unless her heart is in the war. No mere language written on parchment can in practice make any compact between sovereign nations more binding than a treaty unless some supersovereign force be contemplated as a coercive agent upon the American Government and its people. Force converts such a league into a tyranny and international oppressor. Such a compact becomes the source of universal war, not the means of permanent peace.

Interests purely American or general articles to arbitrate any controversy must not be permitted. Questions vital to the honor, integrity, or independence of our country can not be bargained away under the illusory hope of peace. A league so guarded can be approved by this country. It will, however, be a treaty, and its performance will rest in good faith, not in the creation over us of a sovereign coercive, compulsive power.

Remarking on the constitution of the league of nations, President Wilson said, explaining that parchment produced at the Paris conference:

> The simplicity of the document seems to me to be one of its chief virtues.

With this anodyne to lull us into confiding acceptance, we approach the aforesaid document feeling that any wayfarer, even though he be a Senator, may, like Eliphaz, the Temanite, in the days of Job, assay to commune with it.

It creates in article 1 a body of delegates representing member nations, each of which has one vote, without regard to its population, development, area, race, standards of conduct, or other evidences of civilization. It is provided in article 3 that the body of delegates shall select as they think fit the four other States to be with the five named the permanent executive council.

Article 4 declares all matters of procedure at meetings of the body of delegates may be decided by a majority of the States represented at the meeting. In practice what would it do? Holland and Montenegro would outvote the United States. Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Roumania, and Montenegro would outvote Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States.

Article 7 requires two-thirds of the States represented in the body of delegates to assent to the admission of new States into the league, which shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies.

Article 15 provides unarbitrated disputes likely to lead to rupture between States, members of the league, shall be referred to the executive council, which may in any case refer it to the body of delegates, and shall do so on request of either party to the dispute. This, therefore, permits such a majority vote to rule.

Article 24 gives the body of delegates the right to advise States being members of the league to reconsider obsolete treaties and conditions the continuance of which may endanger the world. If the State advised ignores it, nothing remains but to give it more advice.

Article 26 requires a three-fourths vote of the body of delegates to amend the league constitution. With these duties the body of delegates as a visible instrument of the constituent nations disappears from view. It is difficult to resist the impression that it is lugged in to give the document an appearance of simplicity. It is the bulk or gross body to give lodgment and habitation to the mind and craft that really dominate. The brains of this simple document lie in the dim chambers of the executive council, far removed from pitiless publicity.

Article 3 creates the executive council and names the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, five of the nine nations to be the permanent council, the remaining four to be named by the body of delegates. The executive council, when completed, is permanent. No method of changing its membership or power is possible to any human agency save by article 26 by amendatory process. It possesses plenary power over any matter in the league's sphere of action or any matter affecting the peace of the world, a tolerably comprehensive jurisdiction.

Authority is given the executive council to invite any nation to appear before it when matters affecting its interest are to be discussed. The invitation is a species of international process or summons to bring any nation before a meeting of the executive council. When so cited, it is covertly assumed jurisdiction is acquired by providing "no decision taken at any meeting will be binding on such powers unless so invited."

Articles 5 and 6 authorize the executive council to choose the secretary general, who in turn appoints all the other staff of secretaries, clerks, messengers, spies, and eyes and ears of the executive council to reach in every nook and corner of private or public life and give such officers or agents of the league diplomatic privileges and make them immune from process in many cases.

The executive council is given in article 8 power to formulate plans to reduce national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety. It shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what is a reasonable armament. Such limits when adopted shall not be exceeded unless by permission of the council.

The powers given are vague. Plans may be formulated by the executive council, but it can not compel obedience. It may determine what is a reasonable armament for a nation but has no power of itself save to propose it for the consideration and action of the Government concerned. If that Government refuses to heed the council, an impasse results. The manufacture of war munitions and the status of industries capable of warlike purposes are merely matters of advice by the council, whose responsibility is mitigated by delegating it to a commission that is to be created under article 9 to take all of article 8 in hand. No method of creating this commission is outlined. I shall assume the executive council will attend to this.

In article 10 the members of the league bind themselves to preserve each other, and the executive council is required to advise upon the means by which all the league members shall be protected against external aggression which will impair their territorial integrity and political independence. If this article avails anything it binds our Government, its Army, its Navy, its people, and its Treasury to defend Great Britain's colonial dependencies any place in the world. A like obligation attends us for France, Italy, and every other league member. England's territorial possessions are in every part of the globe. Russia is a vast area with 180,000,000 people, and Germany with 70,000,000. The United Kingdom of Great Britain has in Europe fewer than 50,000,000 population. More than 300,000,000 souls acknowledge the supremacy of England's flag in Asia. Great Britain feels, as seldom before, the need of help to maintain her territorial integrity.

As the Britain, so are many nations of Europe. I recognize the issues, and I accept the joining of those issues in an appeal to the American people. I decline to vote to bind the American people to maintain the boundary lines and political independence of every nation that may be a league member. It ought to be done only when the question menaces our peace and safety. It must be a treaty uniting our associated nations in the mutual and common bonds of self-defense. It becomes, then a league of sovereigns acting with the common purpose of self-preservation. The law of nations is like the law of individuals. Self-defense is the first law and is justified before every tribunal known to civilized man.

Article 11 declares any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting league members or not, is made a matter of concern, and action such as may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations shall be taken. This, considered with article 16, subjecting any league member violating its covenants to have thereby committed an act of war and making it liable to economic pressure and ultimate war in effect involves the United States in war by the mere fact of our membership in the league. An ex-President of the United States wishes to have pointed out what powers in the league conflict with or impair, if effective, our Constitution. His curiosity can be gratified.

Article 10 obliges our Government to protect any or all league members against territorial aggression from external powers. The language is the "contracting parties undertake to preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and political independence of all States members of the league." This is a positive covenant. We agree to defend the political independence, for instance, of Portugal if attacked by Spain, or Denmark by Sweden. By what instrument are these positive obligations imposed, the Constitution of the United States or the constitution of the league of nations?

Article 16 denounces a breach of the league's covenants by a member State as ipso facto an act of war against all the other members. What declares an act of war, the constitution of the league of nations or the Constitution of the United States? The United States Government binds itself on such ipso facto act of war immediately to sever all trade or financial relations, to prohibit all intercourse, financial or commercial, with the offending power.

Under what is this embargo laid, the constitution of the league or the Constitution of this Republic? What authority now regulates foreign commerce? The Congress of the United States. Congress lays an embargo or suspends commercial relations, stops credits and remittances; Congress denies nationals intercourse, suspends immigration and travel. If the Executive exercise such power, it is a delegated one, not an original constitutional grant. In either case it is a power derived from and exercised by virtue of our Constitution, not the league of nations. Territory or independence can not be preserved for league members against external aggression save by war.

Article 16 expressly stipulates the executive council shall recommend what military and naval forces we shall contribute to be used to defend the league. Defend it against what? Loss of territory in article 10, war declared in article 16, and we undertake there not merely on the recommendation of the executive council but in the document positively bind ourselves unconditionally to preserve another nation's territory and its political independence.

That covenant, coupled with the ipso facto act of war in article 16, calls our Army and Navy into action without a declaration of war by Congress.

The constitutional power of Congress is abrogated in the essential sovereign acts named or those powers of the league's constitution are of no binding force. Such articles must be stricken from the instrument or amended and made merely precatory in terms to Congress. Again, territory can not be defended without waging war.

The President says, "Armed force is in the background in this program."

We are bound positively in this document to contribute armed forces that remain in the background. There is much in this document that remains in the background, and it is a part of the essential publicity attending this discussion that it all be blazoned to the world and understood by the sovereign authority of this country.

War is inseparable from tax levies and bond issues. An unconditional covenant to defend territory of a league member is in necessary effect a covenant to lay taxes and contract debts. These are constitutional powers, vested solely in the House of Representatives.

No President and no peace league, no conference, no treaty, and no act of ratification in this Senate can impair or abrogate this constitutional power of the House of Representatives, which lies at the foundation of free government in all English-speaking races in the world. I quote:

> We are unalterably opposed to seizing distant islands, to be governed outside the Constitution and whose people can never become citizens.

How far has our beloved President departed from a paramount creed of his party! The Democratic platform of 1900 sounds like a voice in the wilderness of the unattainable.

Have we forgotten John Locke's Grand Model? Locke was the wisest man of his century. His essay on the Human Understanding is read with instruction and pleasure by this generation. He framed a charter for the government of South Carolina. The Grand Model, of which I have an original edition, was the last word in intellectual, scientific wisdom. It makes Col. House's various schemes to regenerate the world look like nursery tales. It provided in one article it should last forever. It did not last at all. It is a mere politico-literary curiosity. Somehow its buoyant certainty, its solution of every disputed question, and its monopoly of eternity remind me of the constitution of the league of nations. Both settled everything, and both were written by Englishmen.

Article 19 unloads the guardianship of Great Britain's far-flung empire upon the United States. This article smells loudly of the professors. It sounds like a lecture on ethnology, blended with an appeal to subscribe liberally for foreign missions. Great Britain and other European powers find increasing need for concentrating their forces near home. Additional territory in a distant part of the world is an undesirable burden at this time.

From President Wilson before he returned to the jurisdiction of his own country not long ago came a message for $750,000,000 to expand our Navy. He says in cryptic generalities, like all his demands for delegated powers, he will be embarrassed in his negotiations so he will hardly know what to do if he be denied. We can not be the trustee of every territory and people and spill our blood and scatter our treasure in every mad crusade even to relieve him or promote fresh documents like the one before us.

We are to be a mandatory Nation to relieve Europe of caring for "peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenous conditions of the modern world." We are a trustee of modern civilization. In executing that alleged trust this tremendous addition to our Navy becomes indispensable. Our battleships must police East Africa, our American boys die of jungle fever in the interior of the Dark Continent. Others must wear out their lives and perish in the snows of northern Russia or in garrison duty in Asia.

An appropriation of $750,000,000 for the Navy is the first visible result of article 19.

This league, Mr. President, sends the angel of death to every American home. In every voice to ratify it we can hear the beating of his wing. There will be none to help; no decrees from omniscience will direct us to sprinkle with blood the lintel of every American home. If this supersovereignty be created, conscription will take from all, and we will bear the white man's burden in every quarter of the world.

On this issue I challenge the President and his administration and the sympathizers with this constitution to appeal to the great jury of the American people. I will be content with no less, whatever the Senate may do. I am willing to take that responsibility. I invite the President to remove the limitations upon a censored press and censored free speech that we may combat with him in an open forum and on equal terms. If he is not a political and governmental coward, he will give us that right. An honorable antagonist would do no less, and if he has the fighting blood he boasts, he will do even more.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to remind the Senator from Illinois that the Members of this body who accept the policies suggested to them by the administration will not accept the challenge, because, as I stated the other evening, they have even refused to give us the privilege of voting to repeal the act which makes possible that censorship both of the press and of free speech. They do not dare to let the American people discuss this subject or to know the facts concerning it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is why there will be no removal of the censorship under the espionage law either concerning free speech or a free press. That is why there will be no Senate and no House in session during the formative period of public opinion on the constitution of the league of nations. It is that there may be no authority permitted to have open free speech save that of the Executive. That is why I believed it the duty of the Senate and of the House so to have arranged the legislative program as to have compelled a session now or to have reduced the Government by lack of funds into that position.

I have no apology to make for, and I will accept responsibility for my belief. I challenge those who hold the contrary to appeal to the American people for their verdict, for I intend to do so. If I can not find that freedom, if I can not find that concentrated opinion of my fellow men inside of my own party, I will go some place else where I can find it, for this question will not be bound upon me by the mere chains of party discipline or formal party creed.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. FRANCE. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that, if he finds no support in the Democratic Party and if he finds no support in the Republican Party for the reestablishment in this Republic of free speech, he will find ample support among all the millions of people in this country, who will have free speech even though the United States Senate, through its committee, refuses to allow the Senate to have a vote "yes" or "no" upon the question as to whether free speech shall or shall not be reestablished in this country.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in that event—although in his lifetime we often did not agree, for I thought sometimes he hardly did me justice in my smaller activity—I now invoke on this great issue the spirit of Theodore Roosevelt, that yet abides on this earth, though his mortal dust be in its final resting place. For on this vital issue, which called from his lips some of his last words on public questions, we agreed.

Under article 19 we are invested with potential duties of grave consequence in administering foreign territory.

None of this territory comes to us as a result of military operations. It is seized under this league. It is administered under civil powers, if any such exist. Our Constitution gives no authority to take such burdens unless as an act of war and administer them as a part of the civil government of the country under the limitations imposed.

Does not this explain why the President wishes this league ratified before the treaty of peace is concluded? We are still in war, and whatever the war powers of the President may be, he has them now; whatever the war powers of the Government may be, the Government has them now; and it is indispensable in this program that this constitution be ratified while the vast mass of undefined war powers are in existence. If the treaty of peace were concluded, we would instantly fall into a civil status, and only the enumerated powers of the Constitution or those that are fairly to be implied could attach to any of the great governmental departments.

We supply the men and money only to obey the orders of the executive council. Our degree of authority is subject to the directions of that council. Congress and the Executive have no discretion. Obedience to the executive council's decrees make our Government a mere passive trustee in actual control and an active one only in contributing the necessary service and expense.

This can not be justified nor authorized by any enumerated power in the Constitution that created the Government. If not granted, it is denied. No such tremendous power can be implied either in peace or in war. It is imposed by the superstate sought to be set above our country and exercise its authority over the American people as a government heretofore unknown, whose dominant power is in the Old World, and whose interests are not always allied with our own.

This step once taken can not be retraced. Nothing but the sword can ever cut its bonds if once we are entangled in its fatal meshes. We deliver future generations, bound hand, foot, and voice to the nations of Europe members of the league. The ties burst by revolution, the independence won on the field, and preserved by the genius of self-government are the idle reminiscence of yesterday. We are swept into endless feuds and ambitions of the Old World, whether they concern us or not. We condemn the young men of future years to pay the penalty of our alliance with the struggles of every nation everywhere. It lowers our flag and floats above it the symbol of an alien power.

Professing peace, eternal peace, it is the signal fire of perpetual war to this Republic. In the name of international law and the security of our country it passes us under the yoke of foreign decrees, and in the name of international justice it destroys the free government of the United States.

It is the death knell of the American Republic; its ideals, traditions, laws, and usages yield to a fantastic idealism, a polyglot philanthropy as vain in the realms of world philosophy and morals as it is impossible in peaceable execution. As the road to hell is paved with good intentions, so the way to national ruin is smoothed and lighted by this false pretense of perpetual peace.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be through in a short time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Just a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not yield now, but if the Senator from Colorado, after I am through, wishes to ask me any question I shall be glad to say whatever I am able to in response.

Sincere men may have deceived themselves in their great hope for a perfect world, but no delusion, however sincere, will excuse this Senate from its duty to interpose its power against this universal Utopia promised by the President. It is the fabled apple of a great hope but to turn to ashes on a trusting people's lips.

I know the course of campaigns. I am prepared to see men's adherents fall away in their opposition to this league. Certain portions of the press will support it. Even now organizations are formed and are sending out their multitudinous literature. A crusade has been begun for it. It is named "universal peace." The crusaders, some of them, will be sincere, and as fiery in their zeal as were the multitudes who followed Peter the Hermit and Walter the Penniless when they journeyed into Asia many centuries ago. Their practical results will be as disastrous to the crusaders and to our common country as to the multitudes who suffered and died to accomplish their ideals.

The Senate never faced a greater task nor a nobler duty. It was created to stay the tide of excitement, to examine in deliberation, and to decide in reason. Against the challenge of Executives it has raised its senatorial powers and prerogatives to restore and maintain the well-ordered columns of constitutional government. It will do so again. It will execute the powers of a joint treaty-making authority. It will not ratify an emotion nor translate an impossible idealism into a weapon of national suicide.

Some men can change their minds about a principle but can never change their minds about a name. Without their misguided activities the coroner's office would lose much of its excitement and life insurance would cost less. They are constantly drinking out of the wrong bottle and are the predestined and chronic victims of misbranded goods. To them death is preferable to a loss of faith in the label.

Others suffer from the autointoxication of excess in phrase making. The world to them is yet a grammar school. Alliteration's seductions baffle their senses and lead them astray. Their orbit is described about a movable center of attraction. Charts projected from a fixed subject of belief show the last variety of men have occupied nearly the whole political firmament in their diversified revolutions during the perihelion and aphelion of public elections.

I have in mind a prominent example of each variety, but I forbear to depart from the text by commenting on that subject specifically. They are both in life and action, both following the same impulses, and are both destined to do the same irreparable injury to this Republic and unless met and checked in their headlong course, to plunge it into the same gulf of destruction. As for them, let them go. All I wish to do is to guard the public against their misguided activities. Others will examine this question in due time.

Busy tongues hasten to call it the peace league, not merely the league of nations, thereby seeking to appropriate the name, because many will accept the name that is suggested rather than examine the quality of the league lying behind that name. War has taken its toll from the American home. The empty chair cries to the heart. Peace fell like a benediction from heaven. The wish rises father to the thought that the scourge of war may never sweep again the sons of men in its withering blast.

Three short years ago neutrality was enjoined as the first great duty of the Nation. Neutrality was the stepping-stone to continued peace. Peace was declared the momentous issue poised in the balance of a great national struggle. The murder of our people and the destruction of our property must be endured. A military despotism threw its sinister shadow across the Atlantic and the Executive bid us be unmoved. He sang the song of peace. He appealed to the mothers and drew graphic portraits of grim-visaged war—the maimed and the living, the aftermath of war—and counted the unreturning dead that the testimony of their blood might sink deep into our understanding and turn us to peace.

The outrages of the German continued after November, 1916. They were as atrocious before November, 1916, as they were after November, 1916. Before that date we were asked to keep the peace and stand it all. After it we heard the Executive's war cry to arms. Two million men were conscripted and sent to camp or field. The created debt will endure to remote generations.

To a blood-washed, war-wearied Nation the President now displays his vision and promise of universal and permanent peace. He adroitly maneuvers himself into the spot light as the fountain of peace perpetual and the guardian of mankind. As he kept us out of war in 1916, so he will keep us out of impending war conjured up to serve the issues of 1920 and keep us at peace forever if we but accept him again. With him as the drum major of civilization, eternal peace belting the earth and brooding like a gentle spirit o'er a still and credulous world proclaims the millenium is here.

Splendid panorama! threatening fateful silence; how soon may we see it broken again by the death grapple of nations and cries of the innocent caught by the pitiless squadrons of destruction? In 3,000 years of recorded authenticated history but 60 years of universal peace have blessed the erring sons of men.

The President returns to us not with a peace treaty but a contrivance he assures us will make peace treaties useless. It is, he reiterates, a very simple document, and in nothing is it so simple as in the instrumentalities by which it achieves its marvelous results. We bind ourselves to fight the battles of every nation and every war in the world. They may none of them affect or menace our welfare in any degree, but yet we bind ourselves to bear the burden. This is as simple as the unction the son of the slain Polonius bought of a mountebank, as described by the dramatist:

> So mortal that, but dip a knife in it,
> Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,
> Collected from all simples that have virtue
> Under the moon, can save the thing from death
> That is but scratch'd withal.

Like his neutrality device that was a prelude itself to unprepared war, his peace league engages us not in one war but, in an overwhelming sweep of authority, in all wars that scourge the earth. It is simple but deadly. Apparently an open covenant of peace, it is a masked charter of unceasing war; the voice of Mars, but the hand of Woodrow.

I am a citizen of the United States first. My allegiance is to my own country, the Republic founded by my ancestors and defended by their successors to the present day. Its flag represents to me my highest duty to any human authority. I am an American. I am not an internationalist. I will obey the Government of the United States, not an aggregation of nations of the Old World.

I will not obey an aggregation of nations endowed with the supersovereignty of the whole world. I owe them no allegiance. Whether this treaty is ratified by the Senate or not, I will approach it in a spirit of challenge and revolution.

I believe the Constitution of this Republic imposes on our people and on me obligations which are paramount to any document ever written by human hands. It is superior in its jurisdiction to anything emanating from the Paris peace conference, even if it be ratified by two-thirds of the Senate.

I recognize no right and no authority in any officer of this Government to create or attempt to create an international power to sit in judgment upon my country. What supersovereign shall assume to become the lawgiver of our people?

We may recognize a treaty that rests in good faith and honor, but we can not impose a sovereignty upon those from whom we derive our authority in this Chamber.

We recognize a new and larger patriotism born of the battle fields of the great war. It reaches from every grave and hospital in Europe to the homes and hearts of this continent. It will find apt expression here in due time. The spirit of the American people has not been transplanted to alien lands, whatever its temporary agents may say or do. It still lives on its native soil and is present in the Nation's Senate. It has neither been expatriated nor denatured by other nations nor extinguished by misguided men who have erred both in interpreting their powers and their understanding.

The new patriotism will take form in America, and it will be a treaty reserving our rights vital to our integrity and independence, not a new sovereignty set up to rule over us. It will rest in honor and conscience. Its binding obligation will and must be the Nation's faith pledged to its scrupulous performance.

The creation of a nameless thing to sit in star-chamber judgment and decree implicit obedience to its mandates can not be borne by a race of free men. By a ukase it will embargo our commerce, close our exchanges, destroy our credits, leave our merchandise rotting on the piers, shut the Isthmian Canal, order Congress to declare war, levy taxes, appropriate money, raise and support armies and navies, and dispatch our men to any quarter of the globe to fight and die because an alien executive council has so willed. The executive council is the brains of this unhallowed creation. What it decides in the mysterious depths of the silent unrevealed caverns of European intrigue will dominate the body of delegates.

Who authorized the President to rear above the Republic an autocratic power? Is it another plunge in the bottomless abyss of undefined implied war powers? Search the Executive powers enumerated in the only instrument that gives him official being. Scan the Constitution's every line in peace, and no warrant vests in him such a wide reach of power. What war authority as Commander in Chief does he wield to join with foreign governments to make this Republic the servant of alien and distant powers? Is the authority to erect over us and our Government a dominant rule of assembled nations to be implied from the sword?

If the power is not found in our Federal Constitution the President's acts are usurpation. If it depend alone upon his will and sword as Commander in Chief it is revolution. He is a usurper in one case and a dictator in the other.

Indeed, shall we not ask, with the great dramatist, "Now, in the names of all the gods at once, upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed that he has grown so great"?

It is a rule of practice followed by every prudent lawyer, when two contracting parties sit in the council room of his office to draft a contract, that it is first reduced to a tentative form, and read to the parties whose signatures are to be attached. It is an equally binding rule of every prudent lawyer, if, on being read, the parties who are to sign immediately begin a controversy upon what the draft of the contract means, to waste basket the contract and write it over again until at least, when the parties are trying to have a meeting of their minds, they understand what the contract as drafted contains and agree upon the interpretation and meaning of its various parts. That is the rule in private business; and, if so, it is found to be an equally good rule in public business.

I have heard on both sides of this Chamber arguments concerning the Monroe doctrine. Some say, with great energy and conviction, that it is not impaired. Some who favor the adoption or ratification of the proposed constitution of the league say that is only extends and vivifies and re-creates this necessary doctrine of the Western Hemisphere. Others say that it is abrogated, or that as a policy we are compelled to abandon it. Why not, if there be on the floor of this Chamber a difference of opnion on this vital creed of the American people, write it into the constitution of the league; and why did not the conference write it in before they sent by our Executive the draft to this country for our consideration?

This is not the first peace league humanity has seen. In the first Hague convention the United States Senate added, before they gave their consent by the necessary two-thirds vote, the following:

> Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign State; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

That, like the action of the prudent lawyer in private practice, was written in in order not only that the American people and the authorities might understand it but that all the signatory nations to this league, 26 in number, might understand it as we understood it.

Then, again, after eight years had passed, the representatives of the various nations interested in the same problem met again at The Hague, almost on the street where once resounded the footsteps of the great Grotius, the father of international law. Not far from where his pulseless clay still sleeps as a place of pilgrimage by all the civilized nations of the earth, this great league, with its beneficent purposes for the betterment of the world, again met. It framed again a convention. It was brought to this country. It was placed before this body for ratification. Again the question arose, as will be found by recurrence to the debates of that period, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, whether it interfered with the traditional policy of this country known as the Monroe doctrine. Again, out of an abundance of caution, following the same prudent rules as any private lawyer, rather than leave it to argument, we wrote in the ratification a reservation that put it beyond the peradventure of a doubt. I read from that action of April 2, 1908, ratifying The Hague Convention of 1907:

> Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of a convention signed by the delegates of the United States to the Second International Peace Conference held at The Hague from June 16 to October 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, subject to the declaration made by the delegates of the United States before signing said convention, namely:
>
> "Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in any of the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign State, nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions."

Here, then, it was kept beyond question by an express reservation not only by the delegates in the convention, but in the action taken by the Senate.

This constitution of the league of nations has been pronounced by precise thinkers as obscure in its meaning, as loose in its wording, as indefinite in its relation of parts, as being improperly constructed and knit together; and Senators on the floor of this Chamber in whose professional character I have the greatest of confidence, who have been known among the courts and their brother lawyers as men of abounding ability, also make the same criticism. Therefore, with it in that condition, with the question as to what it means, why shall we be called upon by the Executive to ratify it without amendment and to declare that his handiwork as placed before us is perfect and that we shall forthwith ratify it?

GILA RIVER FLOOD CONTROL (S. DOC. 436).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report made by Frank H. Olmsted on the flood control of the Gila River in Graham County, Ariz., made pursuant to the act of Congress approved May 16, 1916, which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, in connection with the communication from the Secretary of the Interior just laid before the Senate, I report from the Committee on Printing an original resolution, which I send to the desk, with the statement that this is merely a report transmitted under an act of Congress, and I am asking that the usual number of copies be printed. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read.

The resolution (S. Res. 487) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report on the Gila River flood control in Graham County, Ariz, by Frank H. Olmsted, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior March 3, 1919, pursuant to an act of Congress approved May 18, 1916, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a Senate document a portion of a very able address delivered by Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, as the honorary chancellor of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1915.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the printing in the RECORD of a short address by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] at the convention of the League to Enforce Peace, San Francisco, Cal. The Senator from California has been unable to be present and express himself with regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR JAMES D. PHELAN AT THE CONVENTION OF THE LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE, SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 20, 1919.

"Mr. TAFT. Ladies and gentlemen, my friend Mr. Moore says he has been making apologies for me, and I thank him. He perhaps may have made a better case, without knowing the facts, than he would if I had prompted him. But your life here is so rapid that my pulse is not adapted to the number of engagements that have to be compressed into two days, and therefore I ask your leniency in the sentence that you pronounce upon me.

"We are met here to-night to consider the question of labor's demand for a league. And we have what seems important in this issue, and exactly what we are shooting at—we have a real, live United States Senator here, and a Senator who is right on this subject. [Applause.] It gives me, therefore, the greatest pleasure, because he has one vote—we need 64 of them, but that reduces our efforts to 63. I have the honor and the great pleasure of introducing your Senator, Senator PHELAN. [Applause.]"

ADDRESS OF SENATOR JAMES D. PHELAN.

"Mr. President and fellow citizens, I was very courteously invited by the committee of the League to Enforce Peace to be on the program, but I declined, because I did not expect to be here to-night. My visit to California was unexpected, and I had intended to speedily return, but was unavoidably detained.

"I have observed that our worthy former President Taft has cast his shafts against the Senate of the United States. What he really intended was to direct his persuasive argument against a few Members of the Senate.

"To-day I received a letter from Palo Alto, saying, 'You had better declare yourself on this subject. It has been observed that you have been in San Francisco and have remained silent.' I suppose that is the common fate of all men in public life, that they are neither heard nor even understood. When Senator REED, three months ago or more, made an assault in the Senate upon the principle of the league of nations, a position to which he still adheres, I had the opportunity then to express myself, and introduced a resolution committing my colleagues to the support of the principle of the league of peace, for the purpose of averting war. [Applause.]

"Now, I should think that all men of good will would support the principle of the league of nations. We may differ as to the details of the power which might be granted to the league. But as to the essential principle, to organize to avert the horrors of war, if possible, in this world, there can be no question. Of course, we are going to get a compromise. We can not all get what we want. You have heard that story of the negro who, in the olden days, was invited by his master to indulge in a little liquid refreshment known in the South as Bourbon whisky, and when the master said to him, 'Rastus, what do you think of it?' he said 'It is jes right.' 'Well, what do you mean by saying it is just right?' 'I mean,' he said, 'that if it were better you would not have given it to me, and if it were worse, boss, I could not have drank it.' [Laughter.]

"The President has come back—is on the way—with the skeleton of a league of nations; and while it does not in whole satisfy, perhaps, the League to Enforce Peace nor the gentlemen in the Senate who are loud in opposition, yet it is manifestly a working scheme, and the great thing at this time is to make a beginning. [Applause.]

"My very learned and distinguished colleague, Senator BORAH, of Idaho, has seen fit to decline the invitation of the President to meet at the White House conference. That is the very spirit which the league seeks to mitigate—a refusal to confer. He said that he was so committed to the opposition that he could learn nothing from the President, and, on the other hand, he believed that the President was so committed to the league that he would not consider the objections of his opponents. There is no palliation for that. He was invited to a conference for the purpose not of taking dictation, but of exchanging views. And he was invited by the man who is the best informed on the subject in the world to-day. [Applause.] So my learned colleague has shown an intolerant spirit. No man should refuse to confer. No man should, under the circumstances, decline the invitation of the President.

"There is no partisanship involved in this. As President Taft said the other day, 'In matters international, Woodrow Wilson and myself stand together.' [Applause.] And the gentlemen who are so fond these days of quoting George Washington must have forgotten that in the Farewell Address there is a condemnation of partisan spirit. It was one of the things against which he warned his countrymen. And now they are suffering the partisan spirit to influence their sober judgment.

"Woodrow Wilson declared long ago that the object of this war—and, I remember, he declared it at the tomb of Washington at Mount Vernon—was to establish 'a reign of law with the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind.' [Applause.] The organized opinion of mankind means nothing less than a league of nations, because it is only through the nations, unless you are ready to destroy all international barriers, that the opinion of mankind can be organized. And he has been busy ever since in making good his word.

"But those Senators—and you see I am not in accord with their utterances, and they represent, I am glad to assure the league, a very small minority, I believe, of that body [applause]—are fond of quoting Washington, who warned us also against international entanglements. That sounds very good. But Washington also said in a letter to one of his contemporaries that we can not participate in European affairs for at least 20 years, because we have not the power to treat with them on terms of equality, and we might endanger our hard-won independence. But 120 years have passed, and the United States is the most powerful Nation in the world. [Applause.] So what Washington said at that time, modified by his own words in private correspondence, certainly does not apply to the United States to-day. And, as the object of this war was to give democracy to the small nations, and to the large ones as well, and to destroy autocracy and tyranny, George Washington, undoubtedly, if consulted, would say, "Those are the very purposes to which I have dedicated my word and my sword," and he would speed us on that road.

"If we were acting contrary to the principles of Washington and the Fathers, it might be well to call a halt and say that we are traveling upon forbidden ground. But we have gone to Europe, and our boys have given the decisive blow to autocracy [applause], and this is merely a question in the organization of a league, of something to sustain them in their work. And I feel that there should be as much enthusiasm in this cause as there was in that other cause when we believed that our national rights at home and abroad, aye, our national existence, perhaps, was involved in the issue of the conflict; because we can not sit down now and serenely regard Europe. On the contrary, the situation is full of misgivings. I will not enlarge upon the argument, which has been so elaborately set forth by our worthy President. But he has told you again and again that a large number of small countries have been set up and given democrary, and if they be abandoned to their fate we will have, within a very short time, the most horrible war in history in its ferocity, outclassing and distancing the conflict through which we have just passed. Because racial animosities would be aroused, and the old order, often sleeping but never dying, in clashes like this will reassert itself, and the little countries will make a futile resistance and be again amalgamated in the great nations over which tyrants will rule.

"So, unless this league is established, there is absolutely no hope for democratic Europe; there will be no hope for the men, women, and children; there will be no hope for the workers, because their protection is in the establishment and in the maintenance of democracy, in which their voices are so tremendously potent. They are rudely expressing themselves in some of the countries to-day. But looking back upon history, we must not be alarmed, because it is only through revolution that order comes. That is the world's history. That must not discourage us. But when they return to reason and know that in this world there must be responsible government, without which there will be neither labor nor wages, then and in that event they will, I am convinced, yield to the arguments which have been advanced in their interests.

"It has been said that a league of nations is impossible. When the American Engineers went to Europe, and when we shipped over two millions of men, with all the accessories of war, and built railroads and built great warehouses and provided the food not only for our own men but for the men of other lands, it was an achievement of great magnitude. And somebody said, and I believe it has clung as a sentiment to the American Engineers, 'It can not be done, but here it is!' A league can not be formed, but here it is. [Applause.] The President is on the ocean bearing the first draft, adopted unanimously, under pressure which I believe he exerted, as the one thing that he desired of all others to bring back to his countrymen as the reward of the war—not captives, not lands and territory, but peace for all the world. What greater ideal could there be? What greater achievement could he have won? And that is a thing accomplished by unanimous vote. The nations in conference have approved of the idea of the league, and their committee has drafted this measure, which will very soon, probably, be presented in an authoritative way by the President himself to the American people. And then he will go back, having consulted public sentiment—and, by the way, that is the work we are doing here, creating a public sentiment, without which there can be no government, and without which the President unsustained would be a mere pawn upon the European chessboard. He must have it, and he knows it, because his democracy is pure. He knows that without the people he can not succeed, and he always appeals over the heads of Senators and editors, even, to the great body of the people. [Applause.]

"And I think, Mr. President, that it is more important for the audiences which you address throughout the land to respond to this call than it is for individual Senators, because the Senators, I must say in their defense, feel that after all they are representatives of the people. It is not the body that it was in the olden time—now your Senators come from the people, elected by popular vote, and not puppets set up by legislatures to serve private interests. They are amenable to your demands. They respond to your call. And I am glad to see here an audience so great to-night, because every man and woman of you must feel that you are rendering a substantial aid in the settlement of this question. If you show apathy, your representatives will show apathy. If you show interest, they will show interest. If you are for it, they are for it. [Applause.]

"One word more, Mr. President. I suppose the argument has often been made; but it seems to me that in its simplest form a league of nations bears a close analogy to civil society. Democracy is a league of men, banded together for mutual protection. And they yield certain of their natural rights for the purpose of establishing this democracy as ordered government. In a league of nations the nations must necessarily yield some of the exclusive rights which they now hold for the same purpose—their mutual protection. Is there anything wrong with that? Is the right of the individual more sacred than the right of the nation? But grant for the moment that it is. It is yielded willingly in the interest of organized government, organized democracies, where all have a voice and where all thrive; it is their self-determination, freely given, and all abide by the result of the expression of that voice, and the minorities are given protection. They are not destroyed, as in the old days of the Crusaders. And you may recall in this connection the story of the Crusader, who was told on his deathbed that he had to repent and forgive his enemies, and he naïvely responded, 'Why, I have no enemies; I have killed them all.' But a democracy respects the minority which does not quite agree with the majority government, and that is a little sacrifice they must make in order to preserve the peace of society.

"Now, the United States, going into a compact of this kind will, let us concede to the objecting Senators, yield a part of what they regard as their exclusive rights about which they are very tender. But is not the prize worth the game? Is not the peace of the world worth the sacrifice? [Applause.] Is there anything more terrible than unleashed human beings destroying each other under circumstances of greatest cruelty? War, we are told, burdens a people with debt to go down from one generation to another, like the curse of original sin. It wipes the people from the earth as though Heaven had repented the making of man. Its evils can not be written, even in human blood. And our campaign is against war. And in that campaign every man is enlisted as a patriot, just as much as every man was enlisted in our recent campaign, where his loyalty was never questioned, to carry the Stars and Stripes, standing for equal rights and justice throughout the benighted countries of Europe and bringing hope and succor to those who for centuries have been the victims of oppression.

"But we are disloyal to our ideals if we refuse to let our country enlist in this cause. We are all, by sacrifice and concession, working for a perfect State at home. The league is working for a more perfect world. And, my friends, just as the organization of society has abolished violence in the settlement of disputes and set up legislatures and courts, so this league of nations, if it carries its purpose through to the finish by creating international tribunals, will abolish war, which is only violence on a broader scale. Let us not dismiss this question by saying it belongs only to the sentimental. Sentiment is the best thing in the world, and the difficulty is in living up to it. Human nature is the meanest thing about us, and we are always trying to keep it down. That is the function of society; it is as well the function of the league. So these United States, young, measured by the lives of nations, should take to themselves that sentiment and forecast of the poet:

> "Oh, young men, dream bravely and well,
> And your dreams shall be prophets."

"[Applause.]"

SPEECHES ON LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to offer a Senate resolution similar to the one offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and I ask its immediate consideration, adding at the end, just before the speech of President Wilson, the names of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I should like to reserve the right, if the resolution is agreed to, to add any other speeches to this compilation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers a resolution, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 486) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the following be printed as one public document and that as large a number be printed as the Senate is authorized to order under existing law:

The constitution of the league of nations.

The address of President Wilson at Boston.

The article by Theodore Roosevelt in the Metropolitan Magazine of February, 1917, entitled "The league to enforce peace."

The speech of W. H. Taft before the National Geographic Society.

Recent speeches on the subject by Senators BORAH, HITCHCOCK, REED, LEWIS, LODGE, KNOX, OWEN, SHERMAN, and McCUMBER.

The speeches of Senators POINDEXTER, CUMMINS, LENROOT, FRELINGHUYSEN, and HARDWICK.

The speech of the President to be delivered at New York on March 4.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I, for one, object at the present time to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is raised, and the resolution goes over under the rule.

THE MILK INDUSTRY.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not wish to take the Senator from North Dakota off the floor, but I have a resolution on the table directing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and report the facts to the Senate with reference to the milk industry, especially the condensed-milk industry. I would like to ask unanimous consent for its consideration and passage at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there will be no debate on the resolution, I certainly shall not object.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the request of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On January 31 I offered a resolution, Senate resolution 431, and it was ordered to lie on the table. It directed the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the milk industry, especially the condensed-milk industry, and to report the facts to the Senate. I wanted to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senate will adopt the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, directed, under the authority of the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its purposes and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, to investigate, ascertain, and report to the Senate the facts relating to the production, manufacture, profits upon, and sale of milk products in the United States since January 1, 1914, with particular reference to the condensed-milk industry, its methods, practices, profits, and interlocking interests, and submit its recommendations to the Senate for the prevention of fraudulent and discriminatory practices and unreasonable profits connected therewith, and also to investigate and report to the Senate to what extent the Food Administration fixed the price of milk and milk products, the fairness of such prices to the producers of the milk and to the consumers of the finished products, and what effect the prices fixed or the action taken by the Food Administration had upon the producers of the milk and the prices paid by the consumer for the manufactured products; and what relation to or interest in any particular line of the industry was held by any and all of the officials of the Food Administration who had to do with the price fixing of milk or milk products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who wish to present various matters which will take but a short time. I appreciate that this is the lunch hour, and they would like to get in some of these resolutions, and so forth, just at this time; and, as I have no objection whatever to their taking advantage of this moment, when it is the lunch hour, I consent to yield; but then I wish to go on for a short time and discuss the subject that has been so ably discussed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN].

EXPORTATION OF WHEAT TO BELGIUM.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, a few days ago I submitted a Senate resolution, which went over under the rule, providing for an investigation of certain charges regarding the export of wheat to Belgium. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I want to inform the Senator that the general deficiency appropriation bill is now before the Senate, and it is vitally important that it should be passed.

Mr. CALDER. If the consideration of this resolution takes more than two or three minutes, I shall not ask that it be considered at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield, with that understanding.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Senate resolution 480.

Whereas in sworn testimony taken before Chief City Magistrate McAdoo, in New York County, State of New York, in a John Doe inquiry on February 13, 1919, it was stated as facts:

First. That a large quantity of moldy, musty, and immature American wheat was shipped from the United States to Belgium in 1917 for the purpose of Belgian relief, and that this wheat was milled into flour and distributed among the Belgian sufferers, causing the death of more than a thousand of such persons;

Second. That one George W. Moench, of Logan, Utah, admitted that he "sold a large quantity of rotten wheat, some 240,000 bushels, at a pretty good price to the buyers, who shipped to the Belgian relief," and that he sold "17,000 bushels of that wheat, getting a good price for it, although it was not fit for poultry food;

Third. That certain St. Louis mills had ground a quantity of rotten wheat and sent the flour to Belgium direct, which was distributed among the Belgian sufferers with disastrous results;

Whereas these sworn statements and charges have been printed repeatedly in the public press, and have not been officially denied; and

Whereas if the statements and charges above made are true they constitute a reflection on the United States Government and make it appear possible that wholesale quantities of food unfit for human consumption was dumped into Belgium and there given to sufferers who had no choice but to eat or perish: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the said charges, to ascertain whether unwholesome food was shipped to Belgium; and if so, by whom and the profits made by each and every shipper of moldy wheat or flour made from moldy wheat; and to investigate any other charges and allegations made concerning the Commission for Relief in Belgium, and to make a report of the result of such investigation to the Senate.

POST FIELD, FORT SILL, OKLA.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I wish to offer a Senate resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The resolution (S. Res. 485) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of the quotations, proposals, contracts, and awards made through the Secretary of War, Purchase and Storage Branch, Raw Materials Division of the War Department, for the furnishing of aviation naphtha, motor gasoline, and fuel oil upon Government requirements to and for use at Post Field, Fort Sill, Okla., for the second quarter—October, November, and December, 1918—by the Lawton Refining Co., of Lawton, Okla., together with copies of any and all records, letters, or telegrams relating to any extension of such contracts and awards.

That the Secretary of War be also directed to furnish to the Senate copies of all quotations, proposals, contracts, and awards for the furnishing of the same commodities upon Government requirements to and for use at Post Field, Fort Sill, Okla., for the third quarter, during January, February, and March, 1919, by whomsoever furnished or contracted to be furnished.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask leave to present a report from a committee, and ask that the joint resolution go on the calendar.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to know what the report is before I consent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is the woman-suffrage resolution.

Mr. WEEKS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is raised.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota pardon me a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator does not ask to have the joint resolution considered at this time?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; I ask that it may go on the calendar. I have not asked for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he objects to that course?

Mr. WEEKS. I object to the report going upon the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been raised.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I withdraw the report for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report is withdrawn.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it had been my intention to discuss at some length the proposed league of nations. It was my intention to do so because I feared that the country, after reading the arguments that have been made upon this side of the Chamber against any league of nations, might be misled into the belief that the Republicans of the United States as a party were opposed to any character of a league or agreement between nations to maintain the peace of the world.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the arguments and criticisms that have been made upon this side of the Chamber, I think it but fair to say that there are a large number of Republicans who favor a league of nations to maintain the peace of the world. I recognize the fact that there are some on this side of the Chamber who would never vote for any kind of an agreement to maintain the peace of the world; that there are those who take the position that inasmuch as we are big enough to take care of ourselves, we do not need to enter into any contract or agreement with any nation or number of nations to assist in maintaining world peace.

Mr. President, as I look over four years of devastation, of brutality, of savagery which at one time I believed had almost been eliminated from human nature; as I look upon the bloody fields of Europe, where more than seven million brave boys, the flower of the world, have gone down to death; as I look upon the maimed and the destroyed, the blind and the helpless, numbering altogether in casualties about 27,000,000 people; as I recall during four years, in the heat of the contest, how from three to ten brave vessels went down to the bottom of the ocean daily; as I beheld the struggle of the brave sailor boys in the clasp of the relentless waves; as I saw mothers clasping their innocent babes to their breasts, and praying to God to save their little ones; as I looked upon the murder of helpless infants, the bayoneting of women and children, the clubbing to death of old men, the outrage committed upon thousands and thousands of pure young girls; as I thought of the right of every one of these young boys born into the world to live, to breathe the air and joy in the sunlight of life, the right to be husband and father; as I saw the blighted ambitions of 27,000,000 boys of our own race, and of our own blood, who have been deprived of this God-given right; as I look upon 27,000,000 young girls, created to reign queen of the home, deprived of the right of husband, compelled to walk down life's struggling road in a land devasted by war, without the stronger arm of man to support, or the gentle hand of child to caress when the night of age comes on; as I look upon all of these damnable atrocities committed against man, woman, and child, I can not, as an American citizen, representing the heart and conscience of the American people, say, in the phrase of a great financier, "Oh, let the world be damned. We can take care of ourselves, and we are going to do it; and we will decide, when the time comes, what steps we may take in any war or threat of war."

Ah, Mr. President, we lost 56,000 boys in this great war, France lost about one and one-half millions of her sons, Great Britain about one million of her sons, and, Mr. President, as I recall how her brave sailor lads went down in the struggling waves, and as I recall how those who were rescued responded to the next call to man the ships in their death voyages across the Atlantic, I can not but feel that there is some obligation resting upon the American people to extend the helping hand in any just and honorable compact to maintain the peace of the world. Let us remember it was not those of alien blood who suffered most in this war. This war took as its toll the best men of the best nations of all the world, and in some portions of the world it seems to have preserved the worst.

Mr. President, as an American I believe we can look beyond the confines of our own country and determine whether or not there is any obligation resting upon the United States to help maintain the peace of the world. The nations that have suffered most, the nations who have been bankrupted by this awful slaughter, reach their hands to the United States, the greatest, the most powerful nation of the world, and say to the United States, "We know that you are not bound to help us; we know that you can stand aloof and say there is no obligation upon you to assist us, but we appeal to you in the name of manhood, we appeal to you in the name of womanhood, we appeal to you in the name of humanity. Will you not extend the helping hand to us that we, acting jointly, may prevent another such calamity overtaking the world?" Senators stand here and claim that we should fold our strong arms and with unmoved and austere countenance declare that there is no obligation upon us to assist in the prevention of war in Europe.

Mr. President, I listened to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] here at my right, as he proclaimed as a good doctrine for nations and for individuals the injunction, "Mind your own business'; that this should be proclaimed as a proper American doctrine. I could picture the Senator from Washington following this injunction, as he would behold some giant beating to death a 10-year-old child. I could picture him folding his arms and saying, "That is no concern of mine. Of course it is brutal, but there is no reason why I should join in it. It is not my child." I dare say, if the Senator from Washington would behold an act of that kind, he would be the very first one to respond to the call, and he would be the last one to announce that a policy of "mind your own business" is always a good policy both for the individual and for the Nation.

Mr. President, we all admit that there is no obligation legally upon the United States to enter into this compact. We can declare that it is no concern of ours, that we will meet any situation when that situation arises. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] the other day, in the strongest language, so highly complimented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr SHERMAN], declared that the United States entered this war for the protection of civilization, and whenever the occasion should arise again the United States could be depended upon to reenter another war for the same purpose. The facts do not bear out that statement.

I am free to say that I want to put the United States in a position in which she can stand upon her agreement with the nations of the world to prevent another such holocaust of blood and murder. We all know that we did not enter the war in defense of civilization. We all know that we entered the war in defense of the American right to sail the seas without any further molestation of our citizens and our commerce than the necessities of war demanded, and while we agreed that Germany had the right to hold up our ships, we denied that she had the right to sink them without notice and without proper care of the crew and the passengers upon the ships. And because Germany would not accede to our contention, but declared that she would continue her relentless U-boat campaign, is what we went to war for. Suppose when we put up to Germany the alternative of withdrawing her submarine policy or adding another nation to her enemies she would have said to us, "Very well, I will no longer carry on the undersea destruction of passenger ships as I have in the past, I will not sink them until I have taken care of the passengers and the crew, and I will take the questionable cases into a prize court to determine whether or not the goods carried are contraband."

If Germany had said that and lived up to such a declaration, is there anyone here who will claim that we would have gone to war with Germany? We would not have declared war against Germany. We would have said, "There is now no real cause for war, and we will allow Germany and the central powers to inflict upon Belgium, upon France, upon Britain, whatever they have the power to inflict." Suppose Germany had been successful, and suppose she had committed no overt act against our commerce or the lives of our people, we would not have gotten into the war, and all this talk we are now making about our fighting this war for world civilization would have to be postponed.

I repeat, Mr. President, I want to put this country in a position by which she can, when a case of that kind arises in the future, say, "Here is my agreement." This country now has no authority to defend Belgium if attacked by Germany, but if she signs the bond of agreement that she will defend Belgium or France against an aggression by Germany or any other greater power in the world which seeks to destroy her and rob her of her territory, then I have no fear but that we will make good our contract and will assist in maintaining the peace of the world.

Mr. President, I would have been highly gratified if any one of the Senators who have so vigorously criticized the constitution of the league of nations would have placed into the RECORD something to take its place. It is useless for any Senator merely to say, "I am in favor of a league of nations to maintain the peace of the world, but I am opposed to this particular kind." If a Senator is in favor of a league of nations to maintain the peace of the world, then I insist it is his moral duty to place upon the record what he believes should be the proper steps to be taken to accomplish that end.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] did that, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] also stated what he believed to be the proper kind of a league of nations, of course without going into details; but others have simply attacked without giving the President, without giving our conferees in Europe, the slightest idea of what should be done in order to maintain the peace of the world.

Mr. President, I must say that to me some of these criticisms are very far-fetched. I do not think we have the best league of nations proposition before us. I am absolutely certain that when our delegates in France receive and read the arguments that have been lodged against it they will reconsider some of the matters, make clear that which is now indefinite, and make it certain that no nation by entering into this compact surrenders its individual sovereignty or, so far as the United States is concerned, surrenders our Monroe doctrine.

I have listened, Mr. President, to the orations that have been made against this proposed league of nations. I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is altogether too modest when he accuses the President of the United States of being the greatest phrase maker upon the face of the earth. I think if the Senate were allowed to pass its judgment upon who is the greatest phrase maker to-day in the United States the Senator from Illinois would receive the unanimous verdict of his colleagues on the floor of the Senate.

But much of this oratory with all its beauty and brilliancy mystifies me a trifle. Therefore I want to read this constitution of the league of nations and as a plain American citizen I want to present to the other plain reading American public just exactly what it reads and that it does not mean what has been read into it by those who are overzealous lest we might surrender some of our inherent national powers.

I wish to call the attention of the people of the United States to the preamble of this constitution of the league of nations. I know we often declare that we do not care very much about preambles, that we must look to the body of the instrument itself to get its purport. But, Mr. President, the preamble of an instrument is the soul of the instrument that is to guide us in our construction of every article which follows it.

Let us see what this preamble is. It reads:

> In order to promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war—

Is there any objection to that? Is there any objection to a declaration just after the close of the bloodiest war in the whole world that these nations should attempt to get together and secure peace by the acceptance of obligations not to go to war? What else?

> By the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations—

Can there be any possible objection to this? Again:

> By the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice—

Is there objection to our entering into an agreement with the other nations of the world for the maintenance of justice throughout the world? Again:

> and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized people with one another.

Mr. President, these are the purposes of the league. Every article in this constitution must be construed in the light of the declaration of its purposes.

From article 1 up to article 9, inclusive, we deal mostly with the matters of organization, and, therefore, I come immediately to article 10, that article which has received more condemnation than all the others in the instrument. That article is the very foundation stone in the structure of a world agreement for peace. Let us see whether it is open to the criticism that has been urged against it. It reads:

The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league.

What is the meaning of that? We are to enter into an agreement to preserve peace. I should like to have any Senator give me a clearer and more concise declaration of how we are to enter into it than the agreement that we will not go to war for an unlawful purpose. What does it read again?

The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression—

Not internal but external aggression. In other words, the very object and the very purpose and the only purpose of the proposed league of nations is to prevent one great powerful nation from making a war of aggression, a war to seize territory, or to annex another nation.

Mr. President, if we can not have that kind of an agreement, of course we can not have any agreement to insure peace. If we do not agree that we will not make a war of aggression against another nation, then what is all this peace talk about? Again, the agreement is to protect "the territorial integrity and existing political independence." What does "political independence" mean? It simply means the sovereignty, the absolute sovereign power of the nation to conduct itself politically as a complete, independent entity. That is all. If we protect the territory of a nation from aggression, we must necessarily protect its independence, its political sovereignty, and that is the whole purpose of this compact. Every war of aggression is a war to acquire territory that does not belong to you, and all we agree to in article 10 is that the principle "Thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not murder," should be applicable to States as well as to individuals, that it should be just as applicable to 100,000,000 individuals constituting a State as it is applicable to individuals in their relations with each other.

Again:

In case of any such aggression—

What kind of aggression?

We have been led to believe by the arguments that have been made upon the floor of the Senate that this pertains to any kind of a complaint. It is not true. It says:

In case of any such aggression—

That is, an external aggression against any other nation, a party to the league—

Or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

Every argument that has been made upon the floor of the Senate so far would indicate to the American people that the council would have the right to determine when we should go to war and when we should not go to war. The council does nothing but advise upon the means by which the obligation not to make a war of aggression shall be enforced. It goes right back to the nations themselves for the enforcing power. It puts us just exactly in the same position that we would have been placed in had we agreed before this world war that we would prevent Germany from destroying France and annexing her territory; nothing more, nothing less.

I come now to article 11:

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league.

Does anyone disagree with that declaration?

Can there be a war to-day in the world that does not concern every nation of the world? That is all it is. It is our concern, although the parties to it are not parties to the league. Why? Because it affects our commerce, because the flame of war lighted in the Balkan States may extend to the great powers of Europe and finally take in, as it has taken in, the United States and Japan and all the world within its conflagration. Certainly it is a matter of concern to the league of nations and to the high contracting parties. Then, what do the high contracting parties do in a case where this is made their concern?

The high contracting parties reserve the right—

We do not have to go to war if we do not wish to. They reserve the right—

To take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

This is not to be done by the council. The high contracting parties, the individual nations, must take the action.

They may use force; they may secure peace by an agreement entered into between the contending nations. But in each instance it is determined not by the council but by the individual countries acting within their own sovereign authority.

I come to the second paragraph of article 11, which is criticized. It simply provides that—

It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the executive council to any circumstances affecting international intercourse which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

Which threaten to disturb the peace of the world. Certainly no one can object to our using our influence for that purpose. I think we can all remember that the United States joined the other nations of the world in an agreement at Algeciras whereby we were to revive and protect Morocco. No one said we were surrendering our constitutional rights by acting in harmony with the other nations of the world on that occasion.

No one has stated that we strained our constitutional rights when we served notice upon the world that Liberia, over in Africa, because of its peculiar relation to the United States, was so situated that we could not look with unconcern upon the attempts of any nation to destroy it or to seize its territory.

Again, Mr. President, article 12:

The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy, they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved—

Not necessarily to arbitration—either to arbitration or to inquiry—

This is criticized, on the assumption that we are compelled to submit internal relations, our domestic affairs, to every nation in the world which questions the propriety or the justice of any regulation which we may make in reference to such affairs.

Ah, Mr. President, one must be led far afield, indeed, by his prejudices to draw a conclusion of that character. Let us see:

They will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council; and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators.

Not as against those who refuse to arbitrate but against those who simply submit the question to inquiry. Let us remember that there are two methods here to deal with those international disputes. If the complaint is such that it involves our own domestic affairs, of course we will not submit it to arbitration, and there is nothing in the whole range of this agreement that compels us to submit one single domestic matter to arbitration; there is not a sentence that will bear such a construction.

Let us turn now to article 13:

The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy they will submit the whole matter to arbitration.

I have listened to arguments by the hour on the floor of the Senate to establish the proposition that under the provisions of this instrument we are compelled to submit everything to arbitration, including our own domestic affairs. What we agree to do is one of two things—that we will submit to arbitration those things which we agree can properly be submitted to arbitration. Is there any nation upon the face of the earth capable of self-government or sufficiently intelligent to be entitled to exist as a self-government that would ever submit its purely local affairs to the arbitration of any number of powers?

Has it ever been done in the past? Not once. Will it ever be done in the future? Never, so long as we are dealing with intelligent nations.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has just introduced a bill the purpose of which is to open swamp lands up to settlement by drainage. Is that an external question? Could Japan come before the league and say, "The United States is about to open up a lot more of her agricultural acres, upon which she can produce rice, and that will destroy the value of Japanese rice; and, therefore, I propose to make a complaint and to lodge that complaint with this council of the league of nations"? Why, she would be a laughingstock of every nation if she should do a thing of that kind. No one would seriously contend that any nation in the world would propose such a thing; and yet she would have just as much right to complain against us because we opened swamp land in Florida for the purpose of the production of rice as she would have because we determine that Japanese goods shall not come into this country or that Japanese citizens shall not be eligible to citizenship in the United States.

Why, Mr. President, so far in the history of the world no one has ever claimed that any independent nation ought not to have the sovereign right to protect the blood and character of its citizenship.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have a concrete case that I think might well be used for illustration, and I should like to have the Senator's opinion upon it. I ask, in view of what he has said, that as we have already passed legislation prohibiting the employment of Asiatics, or, we might as well say, Japanese labor, upon certain public works—for instance, on reclamation work—could Japan make any issue out of that under this compact?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly she could not. We have provided by law that a certain percentage of our sailors upon the American merchant ships shall be citizens of the United States. Would China have a right to say that we ought to change that provision and allow three-fifths of our ship personnel to be Chinese? Has any nation in the world ever claimed a legal right to interfere with the purely domestic affairs of another nation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably I am anticipating as to another article, but I merely want to ask the Senator whether, under the proposition of inquiry, any question could be submitted with reference to that? We are required to submit questions to inquiry under the next article.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think any nation could submit any question to inquiry under the article. An inquiry for what? Not for arbitration, but merely a matter of inquiry into its merits. It is very difficult to always point out what is justiciable and what is not justiciable; it is impossible to make the statement clear and definite in an instrument; yet every one of us fully understands what national sovereignty means and what goes with national sovereignty. We have the whole history of the world, all of the diplomacy of all the ages, to guide us in determining what are domestic rights and what are international rights. Nowhere can we ever find any authority that would question the right of any nation to determine its purely domestic affairs. Of course, we may have a treaty whereby we hold in abeyance our sovereign powers during the existence of that treaty, whereby we may withhold some of our national rights; but we have not surrendered them in the sense that we have permanently surrendered our sovereignty.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want the Senator to explain—and I am not asking these questions in any controversial spirit or in any spirit of opposition to his suggestion, but I am asking them simply to get his opinion with reference to them—in his opinion is there any question that could be forced to an inquiry under the terms of this instrument?

Mr. McCUMBER. I suppose, Mr. President, as I have stated before, that a nation has under this instrument the possible power, the possible right, to present any question, no matter how unfounded or how foolish it may be, just the same as though five individuals should come together and agree that they should settle their differences without resort to clubs or guns, or that they would present their differences to a committee of three or four. Each one might present a claim against the other that would be worse than foolish; each one might claim that he would have the right to enslave the other or to take from him his individual property; but the others would not listen to such a claim; and I do not think that any civilized nation to-day would, under any theory or possibility, present a matter so idiotic as to bring into question the well-recognized sovereign rights of any other nation of the world.

Mr. President, I want again to call attention to article 13. Instead of submitting everything to arbitration, on which Senators have based their argument that we would be outvoted, there is not a word for the submission of purely domestic questions to be arbitrated about, but only those which each individual nation recognizes to be suitable for submission to arbitration; and no nation, as I have stated, will submit nonjusticiable questions to arbitration.

But suppose they do arbitrate—and they can only arbitrate disputes that do not affect their vital or national integrity—suppose they submit to arbitration some of these other questions, such as the fisheries, such as the seal disputes, such as the question of whether a certain portion of the sea is closed or whether it is the open sea—those they can submit to arbitration. When they do submit them, then what is the binding obligation under the provisions of this proposed treaty? It is this:

> In the event of any failure to carry out the award—

That does not mean in the event of any failure to disregard advice, but the award means a case where a question has been submitted to arbitration. When once a nation submits a question to arbitration, the executive council shall do what? They can not even enforce it. They simply shall propose what steps can best be taken to give effect to it. They advise the steps that may be taken—what they think ought to be done—in order to compel a nation which has submitted a proposition to arbitration to comply with the award.

Let us suppose that we had had this in force just after the close of our Civil War and we had submitted to the Geneva Council the question of the damages by the Alabama, the claims growing out of a violation of international law, and that the council had given their award of some $8,000,000 against the British Government, and the British Government had said, "That is a wrong award, and I will not conform to it." In a case like that we could have called upon the other nations of the world who were parties to the compact to join with us to compel Great Britain to conform to that award. We would not even have to go to war. We could find other means, such as a commercial boycott, if we saw fit, which would injure Great Britain probably more than any war would injure her.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think one can get the impression from what the Senator says that there are certain questions which, under the terms of this compact, could not be submitted to arbitration. I understand that any question can be submitted to arbitration that the nations agree to arbitrate.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the sovereign right of a nation to agree to submit any question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I thought.

Mr. McCUMBER. We could agree to submit to arbitration whether we shall continue to be an American nation or whether we shall be under the suzerainty of Japan.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I thought.

Mr. McCUMBER. We can do it if we want to; but we can do it without this compact as well as we can with it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is not anything with reference to arbitration in the compact that we can not now submit just as well as after the compact is made, as I understand?

Mr. McCUMBER. I see that the Senator agrees with me. There is nothing that takes from us our sovereign power to submit or not to submit to arbitration any question which we may see fit; but, of course, we would not submit to arbitration our sovereignty.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have had no question about that with reference to this compact, and I have not construed the arguments which I have heard—and I have heard a great many of them—as contending that we would be required to submit any of these questions to arbitration, because it has seemed to me that, if this instrument is clear in any one thing, it is clear with reference to the matter of arbitration.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is for us to decide what we may submit to arbitration and what we may decline to submit to arbitration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It rests entirely with ourselves.

Mr. McCUMBER. What we should in honor be bound to submit to inquiry would rest with us. I consider the question of submitting to inquiry one of the most valuable propositions in the whole text of this agreement.

Now, let us follow further. Article 15 provides:

> If there should arise between States, members of the league, any dispute likely to lead to rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration as above—

Not that "which is submitted," but that "which is not submitted to arbitration as above"— > the high contracting parties agree that they will refer the matter to the executive council.

That answers the question whether it is our duty to refer almost any complaint to the executive council. I think that it is strong enough. It compels us to submit it for inquiry and there is no reason why we should not. But that is all we do. We submit it so that all the nations of the world, and especially the two nations that are vitally concerned, may understand the attitude and the claim of the other nation. If it is a foolish claim, it would be ruled out of court.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think probably the Senator has already answered this question; but, as I understand, under that article any question can be put into a state of inquiry, it does not make any difference what it is?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Whether the question be domestic or otherwise, it can be put into inquiry?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; they agree, if it is one that tends to create such trouble as will bring on war; that is, if it is liable to bring on war, they will submit to this council their claims and the claims of the complainant, in order that publicity may be given, not for decision but for publicity.

Now, let us follow the same article——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator let me ask him another question right there, to get his opinion?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Who will determine whether this or that question is liable to lead to war?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is just one way of determining it. That must be determined by the individual nations themselves. There is nothing compelling the council to pass judgment upon what particular things are liable to tend to war. The nation itself agrees, and it binds its honor that if an occasion arises that threatens the peace of the world, even though it be a nonjusticiable question, it will nevertheless submit it to inquiry. It does that in order to maintain the peace of the world.

Now, following on—

For this purpose the parties agree to communicate to the secretary general, as promptly as possible, statements of their case with all the relevant facts and papers, and the executive council may forthwith direct the publication thereof.

That is what is done. They present their cases to this council for the purpose of having publicity given to their claims. The people of the world are sufficiently intelligent in this age that if they thoroughly understand a question and the injustice of a proposed war they will not back the war. I do not believe for a single moment that Germany would have gone to war if the Germans had understood that it was to be a war of aggression only and for the purpose of robbing France of a portion of her territory. Perhaps I am mistaken; but certainly it would have been a mighty check upon German military morale, and it would have taken the heart out of the German soldiery had they thought that they were fighting a war of aggression and injustice and not fighting a battle to defend their fatherland as they had been led to believe they were doing. Again:

Where the efforts of the council lead to the settlement of the dispute, a statement shall be published indicating the nature of the dispute and the terms of settlement, together with such explanations as may be appropriate.

The whole of that portion of this article is for the purpose of enlightening the people of the contesting nations.

If the dispute has not been settled, a report by the council shall be published, setting forth, with all necessary facts and explanations, the recommendation which the council thinks just and proper for the settlement of the dispute. If the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the parties to the dispute, the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendations, and that if any party shall refuse so to comply the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the reason.

We have heard that construed to mean that a nation can not defend itself. All this instrument does is to declare and to present the means necessary to prevent one nation from making a war of aggression against another. There is not a syllable in it that prevents a nation against which war has been made from defending itself then and there; and it not only allows the nation against which war has been made to defend itself, but in honor it requires all the other nations to come to its defense. How, then, can it be argued that this compact renders us helpless when it calls to our assistance every nation of the world if we are attacked from an outside source for an unjust purpose? I will speak later of the provision relating to armaments.

If no such unanimous report can be made, it shall be the duty of the majority and the privilege of the minority to issue statements indicating what they believe to be the facts and containing the reasons which they consider to be just and proper.

All of that is published, so that the nationals of each government will fully comprehend what the nationals of the other government claim, and they will be able to pass judgment upon the justice or injustice of each proposition.

Now I return to article 10——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the Senator leaves the subject he has been discussing, will he permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator a question based upon a concrete proposition under that article. Suppose that a controversy with reference to immigration should arise between this country and Japan and should be taken before the council, or, under the provisions of the document, should be taken before the body of delegates, and suppose that body should be unanimous against our contention—that may be, and I think probably is, a violent assumption, but it is possible under this compact—what would be the effect? What would we be required to do, and how could we be compelled to do it, or what obligation really—and this is what I want to get at—what obligation would rest upon us under this compact?

Mr. McCUMBER. In the first place, I will answer that we never would submit such a question to arbitration; we could not submit it to arbitration——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Any more than we could surrender the entire United States to another power.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that. I am making no question now with regard to the arbitration features.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to follow it out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is the inquiry provision that I have in mind, although it has seemed to me that the Senator puts some in an attitude with reference to arbitration that they really do not assume.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I understand the force of the Senator's inquiry, and I will try to answer it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can see nothing that is uncertain about the matter of arbitration. I do not believe that we are compelled under this compact to submit any question of any kind or character to arbitration.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; we are not so compelled.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But we can submit any question to arbitration if we want to do so, but in regard to submitting questions to inquiry the Senator agrees with me that under the terms of the instrument any question can be forced to an inquiry. Now, suppose the immigration matter should go to inquiry, the body of delegates—suppose it is taken to the body of delegates, as this document provides—the body of delegates outside of those of Japan and ourselves may be unanimous against us. In that event what would be the obligation upon us by this compact, and what steps could be taken to compel us to do what the other nations thought we ought to do?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is proposing what to me is an inconceivable case; nevertheless I will answer it, and I will answer it in this way: Suppose that the Senator from Washington, the Senator from Minnesota, and myself should agree that we would submit to each other, or to the agents of each other, questions that would affect our friendly relations, and that one of us would, under that pretext, submit the question whether or not two of the parties to the agreement should take the life of the third party.

That is exactly as conceivable to my mind as the proposition which the Senator suggests on which to base my answer. I would reply: "That is my life; I will never agree to submit my life and my liberty to you; I never authorized you, and could not authorize you under my agreement with you, to consider the question of the right of either one of you to destroy me. On the contrary, the only agreement that I have made with you is that you will respect my life, independence, and liberty, and, therefore, instead of making an agreement to slaughter me, instead of making an agreement to take away my life and my liberty, I can call upon you to defend me, not only as against yourselves but against anyone else." Everything in this instrument is based upon that which I have read in the preamble and article 16, namely, to protect the territorial and political integrity of each nation; and, therefore, if all of them should unite in deciding such a question, if that were possible, we would refuse to abide by the decision, because every one of them that united against us would have grossly violated the agreement, and that violation would relieve us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not believe I can look at it quite as the Senator does. It seems to me, when we enter into this compact, we agree by that very act to permit every question to be submitted to inquiry, and we also agree that if, upon that inquiry, the body of delegates, outside of the two contesting parties, is unanimous in the decision upon the inquiry against one of the parties——

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the position of the Senator, and I will answer it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That the executive council "shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the reason." It seems to me that we are in honor bound to abide by the decision reached and that we consent that the other nations can take whatever action they deem proper and best to enforce their decision.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator has taken merely part of the clause and is construing it as though there were nothing else left in the instrument. Every part of the instrument must be given force and effect; we must construe its provisions together; and we must construe them as intended to carry out the main purpose enunciated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment; let me make that clear to the Senator. We get right back to article 10, which provides that—

> The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league.

That is the gist of the whole proposition, namely, to protect political independence—and that means the sovereign independence—and territorial integrity. If you should give it a construction that any number of the nations could agree to destroy the political and territorial integrity of another nation, you would give it a construction that is opposed to the basic proposition of the whole scheme.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the Senator that in construing this instrument I want to take everything into consideration, and I want to consider it in a spirit of hoping and attempting to reach some conclusion that will give us some organization or body that will keep the world at peace and prevent war. I think I am approaching this compact in about the same spirit as the Senator from North Dakota is approaching it, and I merely wish to get his views with reference to these matters. Does not the Senator think that it would be in the interest of peace and in the interest of avoiding controversy if we would expressly provide that domestic questions shall be excluded not necessarily from arbitration, for they are already excluded from that, but excluded from inquiry?

Mr. McCUMBER. I would not only put that in, but, in order to take it out of the realm of cavil and senseless objections, I would also put in the declaration that this shall not be construed to interfere with the policy of the United States, as heretofore enunciated, under the Monroe doctrine. I would have both of them in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All right. I will not bother the Senator with any more questions on that subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. The point I am making is that there is nothing in it that is inconsistent; but, in order to prevent useless cavil, I would have those provisions inserted in the instrument itself.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the Senator agrees with the contention that this instrument, important as it is, perpetual as it seems to be, should be made clear, definite, and certain?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and I agree that in some respects it is not as clear and not as definite and not as lucid and certain as it could be made. What I am contending is that it is not subject to the criticism that has been urged against it and the construction that has been given to it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I gather from the reply of the Senator from North Dakota to the Senator from Washington that he has a strong faith and belief in the efficacy of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I construe the Monroe doctrine; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, the Senator of course must construe it to mean that attempted interference by European powers with the affairs of the Western Hemisphere would not be looked upon with favor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to comment upon the Monroe doctrine, so at this time I will not attempt to go into just what it means.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. All right. I will leave this suggestion with the Senator: How can the Senator hope to maintain the efficacy of the Monroe doctrine when controversies between States of the Western Hemisphere may be referred to this council of the nations? There may come a time when the attempt to interfere would provoke the withdrawal of the United States from the league of nations; but the United States might withdraw from the league of nations and leave the States of South America with a controversy for the solution of which they might depend absolutely upon the league of nations. Now, certainly if the United States of America is out of the league, and the States of Brazil and the Argentine and Mexico are a part of it, ready to submit their controversies to it, we have not only lost our power to control affairs in this hemisphere, but we have arrayed every State of the Western Hemisphere, perhaps—at least, every State that is a member of the league—against us in our attempt to do it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, Mr. President, if we are out of the league we are bound by nothing that is provided in the league constitution.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but we have lost our allies. Heretofore we have said that European States must keep their hands off the States of this hemisphere; and yet we are opening the way for them to make alliances with the European States against ourselves.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at all, Mr. President. On the contrary, every nation that agrees to this compact says that not only shall the Monroe doctrine of "Keep your hands off" apply to each South American State, but it shall apply to the whole world. "Keep your hands off" will become a universal doctrine, and not a doctrine that is enforced only by the United States; but I want to say to the Senator that I shall reach the Monroe doctrine in a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Take the case of Mexico, with which the Senator is very familiar. I do not want to impose myself upon him against his will; but every other first-class country, every other country signatory to this league of nations, recognized the government of Huerta as a constitutional government, while ours did not. Suppose we had been members of the league of nations and the question of the bona fides of Huerta's title and his acts as the head of a neighboring State had been taken before that European tribunal. I should like to ask the Senator what would have been the likely attitude of those States, when every one of them had recognized the Huerta government and was in favor of impressing that recognition upon the world?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator. The recognition of any government by any other government does not impose upon the latter the necessity of maintaining the former.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but——

Mr. McCUMBER. It has nothing to do with it. It does not make any difference whom we recognize as being President. Every European power under this compact must say, "We will keep hands off of Mexico." Now, that is all that it agrees to do, and then we say that we have got to keep our hands off.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If that is true, then it opens up the way for war by our Government upon Mexico, does it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. Opens up the way?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not understand the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If we have any controversy there, and the world has no controversy with us about it, then, if our controversy is of such a character that it can not be settled by peaceable means it will be settled by war. Now, the Senator knows as well as I do that we have had serious differences with Mexico. We even went to war with Mexico. Our fleet was sent to Vera Cruz—sent there by the President without the consent of Congress, because the fleet was on its way before Congress was invited to take part. Suppose that question had been taken to this high court and had gone into cold storage with our American rights for at least three months. During all that time the bandits who caused the differences between us could have roamed at will over the American border and no one could have raised a hand against it. If that kind of a situation is to exist, it means misunderstanding instead of understanding.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator raises two questions, and I will answer them both.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to have the Senator do so, because I know he is familiar with them, and I know he is frank and honest and fair and able and patriotic.

Mr. McCUMBER. I propose to answer both of them.

The first question is whether or not we bind ourselves not to make an aggressive war against Mexico. I am perfectly candid in saying that we bind ourselves by just what the other nations bind themselves by.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But they have not a grievance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a minute; I am speaking of this agreement. This agreement says that no nation shall conduct a war of aggression against another nation. This agreement says that each nation must respect the territorial and political integrity of every other nation that is a party to the league. I am not sure that it does bind us, even with reference to Mexico, unless Mexico becomes a party to the league; but I will assume that she is a party to the league. Then it binds us to let Mexico alone, if Mexico lets us alone.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. All right, but——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a minute; but it does not bind us not to conduct a war of self-defense. When Villa, commanding or having charge of a large portion of Mexico, invaded the United States, Mexico, or that portion of Mexico, committed an act of war against the United States. Then, when another nation makes war against us, and when they commit an act of war, we have a right to "call their hand" immediately.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But——

Mr. McCUMBER. A mere dispute, a mere breaking over of a little gang, and perhaps murdering some American citizens, would not be necessarily a cause of war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It would depend upon who was President of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, it would depend upon the President of the United States, together with the Congress of the United States. We can defend ourselves. Any nation against whom war is made can defend itself. It only agrees not to make a war of aggression, a war of conquest, against another nation. Now, I might admit that it would be very nice for us if we could enter into an agreement with all of the great nations of the world that they should not make an unjust war against any other nation, but that we should have that privilege. But, of course, we can not make any such agreement, and we ought not to make any exception in our favor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator permit an inquiry concerning the article under consideration?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In the case of a controversy such as would fall under the provisions of article 15, if it should be submitted to the council, no action would be taken unless the decision of the council were unanimous.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. If it were not unanimous, the respective contentions of the parties would be placed before the world. Any party to the controversy, however, may demand that the matter be determined by the league as a whole under a subsequent clause:

The executive council may in any case under this article——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator inform me from what portion he is reading, so that I may turn to it and understand it?

Mr. WALSH. I am reading from the last paragraph of article 15:

The executive council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the body of delegates. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request must be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute.

What I want to inquire of the Senator is, If a dispute should thus be referred—a dispute which would ordinarily come before the council for determination, but which is referred to the league upon the demand of either party to the dispute—would it require a unanimous decision by the league in order to have any action, as unanimous decision is required by the members of the council, or would the majority of the league be sufficient to make a determination that would be enforced as provided in the article?

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that if the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the parties to the dispute, the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendation, and that if any such parties shall refuse so to comply the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the decision; and if no such unanimous report can be made it shall be the duty of the majority and the privilege of the minority to issue statements—well, I think that that, of course, is a majority and the minority of the council—to issue statements indicating what they believe to be the facts and containing the reasons which they consider to be just and proper.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. If there is a unanimous decision, and one of the parties does not comply with the decision, then the council considers and proposes measures for the enforcement of the decision. If it is not unanimous, then they do not propose any measures for enforcement at all, but the majority states its views and the minority states its views. But, now, under the succeeding section either party to the dispute may ask a determination of the controversy by the league itself instead of by the council, the Senator will observe.

The Japanese immigration question has been suggested. Let us assume, for the purpose of the discussion, that this is a matter which may come under consideration by the league. It is submitted, we will say, by Japan, and it would come under this clause. If there were a unanimous decision, and either party declined to observe the decision, then the council would propose measures for the enforcement of the decision; but we will say that we ask, under the last paragraph of article 15, that the controversy or the dispute be determined not by the council but by the league itself; that is, by the body of delegates. What kind of a vote in the body of delegates would determine it? In order to get action at all there must be a unanimous vote in the council; but we take it away from the council, and we leave it now to the league.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should think, Mr. President, that with the league itself probably they would require the same unanimous consent, and I take it from the reading of the whole instrument itself; but, as I have stated before, there are sections that are not clear, not as definite as they should be made.

I am not contending that we have here a perfect instrument. I admit that it is loosely drawn in some respects, and that it is not clear and as definite as it should be made. The only contention I am making is that much of the criticism, and most of it, is without foundation under the terms of the agreement.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I merely desire to add that there is some obvious obscurity there. I rather agree with the intimation of the Senator that it is presumable, at least, that unanimous decision would be required from the members of the league in a case of that kind as a prerequisite to action, inasmuch as unanimous agreement on the part of the council is necessary. If that is the case, then action would never be taken against us on the immigration problem so long as one nation agreed with our contention.

Mr. McCUMBER. I go further than that and say that no action will ever be taken against us upon an immigration question, because that is a part of the political integrity of this Nation to govern its own domestic affairs, and that is protected by the declarations of article 10 and can never be questioned.

Now, Mr. President, I want to consider article 16, which has been so violently criticized on the ground that it forces us into a war whether Congress declares war or not. Let us see if that is its meaning.

Article 16 reads:

Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under article 12, it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league.

Now, what is article 12, whose abrogation would make the nation guilty of abrogating it subject to war by the other contracting parties? You turn right back to article 12, and it is simply this:

The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry.

Of course, if one country immediately begins a war without offering to submit to arbitration or without offering to submit even to inquiry the question in difference between it and another country, it has broken the obligations of its contract; and having entered into a war contrary to its agreement, of course it has put itself in an attitude of war against all the others, and they may unite or they may not unite in order to prevent the accomplishment of its purpose.

But even then you do not have to go to war. Let us see what follows:

And that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

This is a case where the award has been made. If you once submit the question to arbitration and the arbitrators declare that you should pay, say, a given sum, and the other nation says that the arbitrators have not awarded a sufficient sum, nevertheless it will not go to war against the other nation if that nation offers to pay the award allowed. Now, that is just what every nation which submits a controversy to arbitration ought always to do, namely, be satisfied with the decision.

Coming again to article 16—

The high contracting parties agree further that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which may be taken under this article in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures, and that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State, and that they will afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the high contracting parties who are cooperating to protect the covenants of the league.

Well, that is nothing more than what our present agreement is. We divided the responsibility, we assisted our cobelligerents of this war financially and in many other ways. We agree under this compact that we will do just what we did in this war. If we once enter into war we will proportion the obligations; but it does not allow the council to determine that question. It puts it back, after all, to the nation making the war to do its just part in bringing to a successful termination the war into which it enters.

Mr. President, I do not care to read any more of these particular articles, but I want to just refer to two or three objections that have been made to-day and at other times in the discussion of this compact.

Great complaint has been made because they say that we would be outvoted in this league. Then nine Senators never could safely agree to submit their individual differences to the combination of all of them, because eight of them might be against a single one. Therefore, you never can make any kind of an international agreement that will take in more than your nation and one other nation, because if you take in three nations, of course, two will be a majority. Therefore, inasmuch as you are placed in the position whereby you may be outvoted, you never should enter into an agreement with more than one nation, in order that you might have an equal vote. Well, Mr. President, if that is our attitude, if our attitude is that we must always have the controlling vote or an equal vote as against all the world, then, for Heaven's sake, let us rid ourselves of this proposition and not spend time on it, for we could not seriously ask other nations to submit themselves to be outvoted, while we decline to submit ourselves to the same condition. Outvoted? Of course we are outvoted in all our relations with each other. Every State that entered the Union entered with but two votes in the Senate. Therefore, it might be outvoted by the other 47 States, and, therefore, it ought never to have gone into the Union, because it subjects itself to such a dangerous situation.

Mr. President, when we entered into the obligation which created us a Nation, the States were jealous of each other, They were fearful that the big States might obtain an advantage over the little States. Therefore, they provided that at least in one branch of the Government the vote of each State should be equal to the vote of any other one State. Had we not agreed to that proposition we never would have had any Union, we never would have had the United States. If we enter into a combination with Greece as one of the component nations of the compact, certainly we have to give Greece a vote the same as the United States; we have to give France, which is only one-half as large in population as the United States, an equal vote; and we have to give Britain and we have to give every other self-governing nation an equal right. If we are so everlastingly suspicious, so fearful in this great State, which is ten times more powerful than the average State in the world, that some of the others will get the advantage of us, why, of course, we do not want to enter into any compact.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator how many votes we have in the executive council? We have one vote in the council?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many do we have in the league? I mean, now, in the general legislative body of the league? One.

Mr. McCUMBER. Each has one vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many votes has Great Britain?

Mr. McCUMBER. Great Britain has one vote. Canada would have a vote as an independent, self-governing power. Greece would have a vote——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But let us finish up with England.

Mr. McCUMBER. Greece would have a vote although she has not half the importance of Canada. Serbia might have a vote, although she would not be half as important as some other dominion.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many votes has Great Britain in the general body?

Mr. McCUMBER. Great Britain and Ireland and Scotland and Wales have one vote. The separate dominions would have another vote apiece.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have five votes in the final analysis, do they not?

Mr. McCUMBER. All right, go ahead.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to have the Senator admit it or deny it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated that each one of those Dominions has a vote. Then why does the Senator from Michigan ask me again to admit it or deny it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I asked for this reason——

Mr. McCUMBER. Have I not made myself clear?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is a well-known fact that while Canada, with an empire as large as our own, has practically an independent autonomy, it has no independence when it comes to foreign affairs. Canada can not ratify a treaty with the United States. If we were to pass a treaty here this afternoon, we would pass it with Britain concerning Canada, and Canada would not even necessarily be consulted about it. The King on his throne in England can exchange ratifications without a word from the Canadian Parliament. Then I say in the final analysis they have five votes to our one.

But I want to go one step further. If Japan seeks to have a review of the controversy with this country over any question, that moment the United States has no vote. Is that an advantage or a disadvantage? We give to the great Empire of Britain 5 votes, and on that theory any controversy with Britain would only deprive her of 1 vote. She would still have 4 votes in the council. She would still have from her self-governing colonies earnest and active representation there. But with us, whether the controversy be with our neighbor at the north or with our neighbor at the south, or whether it be with the dominant power of the Far East, we are absolutely deprived of a voice.

I have always had my view that when the Senate of the United States was created and made a part of the treaty-making power of the Government every State in the Federal Union was protected by its representation upon this floor, and to enter a union of nations and empires where you must submit controversies without a vote is to submit this people to a very strange form of government which may become tyrannical and oppressive and harmful to our people.

I do not want to engage with the Senator. I know he is a patient man, but I can not help feeling a sense of the highest admiration for the skilled diplomacy of Great Britain, which for hundreds of years has followed with perfect continuity each retiring administration of its foreign affairs until they have the most perfect diplomacy in the world.

A controversy over the Panama Canal or the Nicaragua Canal, a controversy over the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, a controversy over the Rush-Bagot arrangement could be instituted upon any excuse, and instantly our mouths would be closed and we must leave to strangers the question of the protection of our rights. I think that is going far afield of the purposes of the founders of this Republic. If we have reached such a stage, we are much more impotent than it was ever intended we should be, because in our controversies with foreign States it has always been the pleasure of the President to initiate proceedings, and it has always been the duty of the Senators of every State in the Union to pass upon the merits of any controversy involving our relations with others.

I look with intensest apprehension upon farming out our rights, and I think the Senator from North Dakota is not quite as easy in his mind as he would like to be. I think if he were to have his way there is scarcely an article in this constitution of internationalism that he would not like to see a little more specific and plain. He is going to be here when this instrument arrives all wrapped up in tin foil and tied with a blue ribbon, perhaps having received the approval of Britain and France and Italy and these other States. He is going to be here, and I hope that his virile Americanism, which has asserted itself upon every occasion hitherto, will assert itself in favor of the maintenance of our sovereignty and our independence and our right to exist, notwithstanding the whims or the ipse dixits of other nations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have heard the Senator from Michigan express himself so often and so forcibly against this country every entering into any kind of a treaty with any other nation upon the face of the earth to provide means to maintain the peace of the world that I know, while the Senator and I may agree upon what constitutes true Americanism, we do not agree upon what constitutes the attitude of the United States to the rest of the world.

The Senator from Michigan would have this country always on this side of the ocean, living in its splendid isolation, so that we could not interfere with what is being done across the ocean, and they could not interfere with us in respect to American question. I think that the world has been advancing. It has been advancing in the last 100 years, and it has been advancing more rapidly in the last 100 years than it advanced during the previous century, when Washington and Adams and others broke loose from the mother country and declared certain principles applicable to our relation to European countries. They took an advanced step. They took a step that was in conformity with their ideas at that time; but all progress did not die with that period of the earth's history.

We had at that time, Mr. President, no telegraph wires, we had no telephones, we did not even have a steamship upon the ocean; we had no way of communicating with any other country except through the slow ships that took from three to nine months to cross the ocean. To-day neighbor talks with neighbor from San Francisco to New York. To-day nation talks to nation across the ocean. To-day we know everything that was going on in the world yesterday. To-day our ships sail to every section on the face of the earth. To-day we cross the ocean in from five to six days. To-day Great Britain and France and Belgium are far nearer to us than was Yucatan or any South American State during the days of Washington.

Principles have not changed, but all I claim is that conditions have changed and in such a manner and to such an extent that we ought to adapt our American policies to the world as it now exists. We suffered little when there was a war between Spain and Great Britain, or between Great Britain and France, or between Prussia and Austria a hundred years ago; but to-day we suffer whenever there is a war between any of the great nations of the world. It is our concern. Above all humanity, humanity is the concern of the American people. I deny the application of that splendid isolation theory of which the Senator talks when it takes us from out the family of nations. I deny that we have no interest in the bloody conflicts that are destroying peoples who are just as noble as we are, people of our own blood and kin.

All my ancestors were from Britain; they were from Scotland and England and Ireland. I do not think we have so changed our nature that we can now claim that we are so superior to the nations from which we sprang. They have the same ideals, they have the same impulses. The mothers love their boys whom they send to the cannon's mouth as much in Britain and France and Belgium as do mothers in the United States.

If war is necessary for the world's progress, if it is necessary to murder 20,000,000 people of the globe in order that the world may progress, Senators who hold that view ought to vote against any means to prevent a repetition of this war. I do not believe war is necessary for the world's progress or happiness, and therefore I want to do what I can to stop it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if I do not interrupt the Senator, I wish simply to say to him that I am not out of accord with the Senator about a desire to prevent war. I am not at all out of accord with the Senator in my desire to be friendly with other people. I glory in the advancement and progress of civilization. I simply object to an international marriage by Columbia with four or five European States, with irreconcilable differences, aims, and tendencies, unless such antinuptial agreement is made assuring our domestic freedom, at least. I simply object to our marrying France and England and Italy and Japan all at one time. I do not believe it is necessary for us to make common cause with them for all time and under all circumstances. We have a strong, powerful influence in the world, and to pledge the balance of power which we hold in advance of every controversy that may arise between the nations of the earth is going too far; to pledge this balance of power in advance to every controversy that may arise anywhere on the surface of the earth is too much for us to undertake.

The German Emperor once said to me in his palace that America held the balance of power in the world. It made my heart beat with pride; it made me happy in the thought that in every just controversy concerning our people we were able to take care of ourselves. We have proven to the world that we hold the balance of power, and we should hold it unpledged.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Kaiser was just tickling the vanity of the Senator along that line.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Kaiser was not tickling my vanity, but I think the King of England is tickling the Senator's vanity and the vanity of the American peace delegates.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Kaiser never thought that we were a greater power than he was. He has always taken the position that he was the great and only thing on the face of the earth.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. President, he has been disabused of that error.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wants to draw any pleasure from the Kaiser's little statement in the palace that this was a great country——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. President, I will withdraw that, as it is of little importance now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall get such pleasure as he sees fit out of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Events have proven his statement to have been true.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to continue with this argument.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want the Senator to continue.

Mr. McCUMBER. As you know, we have to adjourn to-morrow at noon.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want the Senator to continue, of course; I am not going to interrupt him any more. I hope he will extract all the pleasure he can out of the intimate personal friendship which the ruling powers of the world have for the United States at the present time. He is welcome to all that. If it does not concern our welfare to scrutinize each act of the Paris conference, then I mistake the function of the American Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Ah, Mr. President, we want to scrutinize each act, but the Senator is not in favor of any kind of treaty, as he has suggested time and time again, to maintain the peace of the world.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator does me wrong.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when we listened to the cry of Cuba in 1898, and went to the relief of Cuba, we did not marry the Cubans.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; we did not; neither did we marry Spain.

Mr. McCUMBER. When we freed 3,000,000 slaves we did not marry the slaves, but we did an act of justice toward an enslaved people.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When we went to war with Spain on the Cuban situation we did listen to the cry of humanity and we went to their relief, and I was one of the men who voted in favor of it. I helped send this Government to the relief of the starving people of Cuba; I have always rejoiced in it; but it was not necessary that we should remove our Capital from Washington to Habana in order to accomplish any good for those people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the Senator take that up with the President about removing the Capital. I am neither defending nor am I in any way approving of the action of the President. I am simply giving my own views of the construction of this article which is being discussed.

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator for a question, though I want to get through.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not want to ask the Senator a question, but I desire to notify the Senator that, under the rule, if he yields for any more Senators to indulge in debate I shall invoke the rule, and he will lose the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope Senators will take notice of the statement of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, this instrument has been criticized because it provides for a reduction of armaments, and Senators declare that we are not only surrendering our sovereignty, but are depriving ourselves of our means of defense when we shall be attacked by the entire world. Mr. President, everyone on this floor has expressed himself in favor of devising some possible means to stop this insane determination of each nation of the world to outdo the other in armaments. We have seen the nations for years groaning under the mighty load of armaments and the taxation which is necessary to sustain them, and we have been asking ourselves where will it all end? There was but one answer.

The biggest nation, the richest nation, the most populous nation will in the end bankrupt every other nation. Then that nation, of course, will be supreme. In the Western Hemisphere, probably the United States; in the Eastern Hemisphere, if Great Britain could not keep ahead of Germany—and Germany was rapidly approaching her—it would be Germany.

But we have thought that there ought to be some means to lessen these armaments. Every Senator knows that instead of armaments being security for peace they are the surest incentive for war. Of course, if there are two nations adjoining, and one of them has an eye upon the territory of the other and creates a great army and a great navy the neighboring nations will have to do the same to defend itself. In that respect these armaments may prevent war until one nation gets so supremely greater than the other that it feels certain that with its army and its navy it can crush the other nation.

Great Britain has been listening for years to the philosophy of German orators, German scholars, and German military men that the duty of Germany was first to crush France, seize French territory, get control of Belgium, and then strike at Great Britain. Naturally, Great Britain said, "Germany has double the population of England; therefore I can not put an army in the field that will equal Germany's."

Germany can live within her own territory and upon her internal resources. We can not do that. We must draw sustenance for the support of our people from all over the world. Therefore when Germany builds one warship our very life depends upon our building at least two, for we must meet any combination of nations in the world against us. Now, if Germany had had no warships, Great Britain would not have needed to have built any. If the United States had none and none of these other great nations had any warships, none of them would need to build a warship to defend itself against the other.

We all believe that we should have a sufficient military establishment to protect ourselves against possible emergencies, but we all believe that there ought to be some means adopted to reduce these armaments. I want to ask any Senator how on earth are we going to do it? We can not leave it, as it is said, to the two nations. If you left it to Great Britain and Germany, they would never agree upon which should have the bigger army or the bigger navy. If you left it to the United States and Great Britain, we never would agree. We would say, "We might get into war with you at some time, and therefore it is necessary that we have a navy at least as big as yours." Great Britain would answer, "Inasmuch as you can throw the soldiery from 100,000,000 people across the line, my only safety will be in having a bigger navy than you have." Thus we never would arrive at any agreement.

Now, it is easy, Mr. President, for Senators to criticize, but some one besides the two nations or the three nations involved must determine that question. Therefore, they say in this instrument we will leave it to this council to determine what it thinks a fair balance of power in armaments. The council decision does not bind us. Each nation takes back to its own people the question whether it shall agree to the suggestion of the council. If it agrees, of course it binds itself not to increase its armaments without the consent of all the other Governments, whose interests are also to be taken into consideration.

Mr. President, we talk about this being in defiance of our Constitution. Senators say that by this provision we are running in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the Congress shall declare war and raise armies and navies. Oh, Mr. President, it seems to me that that is almost a childish construction of our Constitution. Of course Congress would have to raise the Army; of course Congress would have to determine what the size of the Navy should be. All this does is to suggest to Congress what it should do in the premises.

A few years ago we entered into an agreement with Great Britain whereby we agreed to take our warships off the Great Lakes, and Great Britain agreed to take her warships off the Great Lakes. We entered into an agreement whereby Great Britain agreed to have no forts and no cannons on the Canadian border pointing toward the United States, and we agreed that we would have no fortifications with mighty guns pointing toward Canada. We knew and the Canadians knew that if each of us had warships upon the Great Lakes we would be looking as suspiciously and as angrily toward each other as a couple of bulldogs, each eager to test its fighting prowess. We knew that if we had artillerymen manning cannon on this side of the line and we were facing cannon that were pointing to us from the other side, the chances were that instead of being instrumentalities of peace they would be instrumentalities of war.

We all know that every organ seeks always to perform its function. The natural function of any army is to fight; and therefore, if you create an army, if you organize artillerymen and place in their hands a cannon, their natural inclination is to want an opportunity to fire it. That is human nature. You take away the chance of war when you take away the means of making war.

Ah, Mr. President, if Germany had not had a navy and if Germany had not had an army all equipped there would have been no great European war. I want to see armaments reduced to such an extent that we can utilize the energies of the people of the world toward making the world more beautiful and a better place in which to live. Across the Capitol grounds is a beautiful monument, the Congressional Library, good for 2,000 years. That building did not cost more than one-third as much as one ugly battleship that would not last longer than five or 10 years and 50 of which might be sent to the bottom of the ocean in a single day. I am in favor of a sufficient number of warships; but I am in favor also of a reduction of armaments in order that the energies of the world may be directed toward upbuilding the world and giving the people of the world comforts that ought to be within the reach of all the people.

When we entered into the agreement to take the warships off the Great Lakes we thereby reduced our armament. No one ever claimed that we exceeded our authority. We limited our armament and Great Britain limited hers, and that has tended as much as any one thing to maintain peace between the English-speaking people. We did not override the Constitution in making that partial reduction of armaments and we would not wreck the Constitution in extending the same principle to include all nations.

Mr. President, I feel that I ought to say a word about a little discussion that took place at the White House the other evening. I would not mention it were it not for the fact that wrongful statements in regard to it have already been published. I think I am as good a Republican and stand as firmly on Republican principles as any Member of the Senate; but I do not feel that I am every justified in misstating the position of a Democrat, whether he be in the Senate of the United States or whether he be the President of the United States; and I wish to say as a Republican, because heretofore the statement has only come from the Democratic side, that when the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate dined with the President the other evening nothing could have been more fair than his presentation of the case. He subjected himself to every inquiry that might be made and answered every inquiry fairly and justly and in a spirit of conciliation, with a desire to make all matters perfectly clear.

The assault which has been made upon him by Senators, if they made it—and I doubt if they made it as it has been published—seems to me to be entirely unfounded. It has been stated that he proclaimed that if Ireland should rebel against Great Britain the American people would be required to take up arms to subjugate Ireland. Mr. President, no such statement was made. In discussing whether or not the instrument bound this country to interfere in case India or Canada or Ireland should seek to separate itself from Great Britain, he answered, "No; that is a domestic question, and we only agree to protect nations from a war of aggression waged by another nation." Everyone must agree with that construction. The instrument itself makes it absolutely clear that that is the intent, and no other intent was expressed by the President in that discussion. I say this simply because I feel that, inasmuch as the committees were treated with absolute fairness, we ought to treat our host with the same fairness as to what took place, if we are to mention it at all.

Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] presented to me the question whether I would agree that Canada should have a vote in the executive council. He assumes that Canada is simply a portion of Great Britain. Possibly I would not have drawn this instrument in the form which the delegates drew it; no one of us would have produced exactly the same instrument.

As a matter of fact, I have already placed before the Senate what I believe to be the things to which we should agree and the things to which we should not agree; and I shall not attempt in any way to reiterate them; but the President had to deal with other nations. Other American representatives were with the President. I do not agree with all of them, perhaps, but I have considerable confidence in the patriotism of Mr. White. I know that he is a good Republican. I know that when he accepted his position there he would not willingly surrender any important right of the American people. But, Mr. President, Canada is a self-governing people, and the Senator is mistaken when he says that Canada could not govern her own internal affairs. Canada makes her own tariff rates. Canada can not even be compelled, under the present policy of the British Government, to support Great Britain in a war. Great Britain has never attempted to compel any one of her colonies to respond and take up arms in her behalf. She has allowed them to decide those questions for themselves.

On the outbreak of the war the Canadian Parliament immediately met and said, "We are not compelled to go into this war; but it is our war; it is a battle for civilization, and we will fight the battle." We finally agreed that it was a battle for civilization, and we fought for the same grand cause.

I am not afraid of the Canadian people. We have had a great many arbitration settlements with Great Britain. Have we ever had occasion to say that she has not always fully responded to the arbitration agreements and has not made good any claim against her? In the Geneva award she not only submitted to the award, but we found great difficulty in finding a place to apply all the money she paid to us. Did the award look like a combination of European States against us? Again, we settled the boundary question between the United States and Canada. Great Britain selected the lord chief justice of England as one of her representatives, and that lord chief justice of England agreed with the American contention on every important proposition. We got what we wanted; and, even though the Canadians opposed it, the British representative agreed that the American claims were right, and granted practically all of the American claims, and, I think, very much more than we expected to get.

We have never had an arbitration, in my opinion, when we got the worst of it, whether it was with Great Britain or any other country.

I know that when we submitted the question of the Bering Sea, as to whether it was a closed sea or not, the world nations held that it was a part of the ocean. I think they were right.

I think that we were wrong in contending that it was a closed sea. That is the only case that I know of in which the decision was particularly against the United States.

Mr. President, all I think we ought to do is to be absolutely honest with ourselves. If we do not want any kind of an agreement to maintain the peace of the world, in Heaven's name let us say so and be done with it. If we do believe that we are in honor or in duty bound, if we do believe that there is any moral obligation resting upon this great Nation to assist in maintaining the peace of the world, then let us at least do what we can to assist other nations in making an agreement that we can all stand by.

I do not want to surrender the Monroe doctrine, and I do not think that we do surrender it. I am going to call attention to what the Monroe doctrine really is and see, then, whether or not, as a matter of fact, this league, as I have read it, does destroy that doctrine.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for a question.

Mr. WEEKS. I was going to ask the Senator what effect on the peace of the world he thought it would have had if we had made peace with Germany and insisted on the destruction of all arms, all men-of-war, and all munition factories in that country?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think, Mr. President, if we had carried it to all countries it would have had an excellent effect; but, of course, if one great nation is armed to the teeth, all other great nations must be likewise armed to protect themselves. I have covered that subject.

Mr. President, what was the Monroe doctrine? There is one clause in the Monroe doctrine that Senators have omitted in their discussion, and I want to read it. First, I want to read the principal declaration made by President Monroe in his message to Congress in December of 1823. He says:

> We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any part of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

That is only one of the clauses.

> With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere; but with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

Mr. President, the Monroe doctrine does not stop there; and here is the vital declaration in that, because it not only fixes the relation of other governments toward these governments of South America, but it fixes our own. Senators are arguing that we have no obligations incumbent upon ourselves under this doctrine; that our conduct is in no way limited. I insist that we have obligations that bind us under the Monroe doctrine. The closing declaration is this:

> It is still the true policy of the United States to leave the parties to themselves, in the hope that other powers will pursue the same course.

Now, there is the Monroe doctrine. Put down in simple words it is, "Keep your hands off, and we propose to keep our hands off of the independent nations in the Western Hemisphere." I know we have not followed that obligation at all times, but it is as much a part of the Monroe doctrine as any other declaration.

Mr. President, the Monroe doctrine does put us in the position of being big brother to all of these South American Republics, but I deny that it puts us in the position of being big tyrant to all of these southern republics. They can exercise whatever sovereign power we can exercise, with one exception. We say: "For your safety and our safety, you must not allow any other European nation to seize your territory or destroy your independence."

The United States says that no other nation shall lay its hands upon an American nation for the purpose of destroying its sovereignty or seizing its territory. This compact says that no nation in the world shall lay hands upon a South American nation for the purpose of destroying its sovereignty or to take possession of its territory. In the sense, Mr. President, that all the nations in the world agree to make the principles of the Monroe doctrine universally applicable, it may be said that the Monroe doctrine is merged in a world doctrine, but it is not destroyed in any respect.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. COLT. Does not the Monroe doctrine go further, and forbid any Central or South American Republic from ceding any of its dominions or sovereignty to any European or non-American power?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that is not going further. That is included in the statement I have made that the Monroe doctrine says to all European nations, and to all nations, "Hands off. It does not make any difference whether the territory is offered to you or whether it is taken by force. You must not take it."

Mr. COLT. Through the Monroe doctrine, in assuming that a South American Republic can not cede its territory, do we not virtually assume sovereignty over this hemisphere?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, we do not assume sovereignty over this hemisphere. We say, as a policy, that we will not allow any European nation to seize upon or take possession of the territory of any South American or any Republic in the Western Hemisphere, and we will not allow anyone of those nations to surrender its sovereignty to any European nation.

Mr. COLT. Supposing Brazil should say that the United States could not cede a naval base to Great Britain on her northern coast. Would not that be an exercise of sovereignty by Brazil over the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. COLT. And when the United States said, in the case of Yucatan, "You can not part with your sovereignty to Great Britain," and when it was said, in the Magdalena Bay resolution to Mexico, "You can not cede a naval base to Japan," that, in substance and effect, is, to my mind, the exercise of a superior sovereignty or overlordship by the United States over the Central and South American Republics.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, ceding a naval base to a European power is ceding the territory on which that base is located, and we, by our Monroe doctrine, declare that no nation of Europe shall obtain any of the territory. Therefore, of course, it would cover the cession of a naval base.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator see anything in the proposed constitution of the league of nations which would forbid one nation ceding territory willingly to another?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we discussed that the other day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to have the Senator's discussion.

Mr. McCUMBER. My opinion is that there is nothing in this instrument that in any way destroys the Monroe doctrine. There is nothing that allows one nation to seize the territory of another, and nothing is said upon the right of one nation to sell its territory to another. All that this agreement does is to say that no nation shall make war against any other nation for the purpose of aggression, seizing its territory, or destroying its political integrity. This instrument does not cover every possibility. I stated that before; and I have further stated that I think it ought to be amended so as to declare specifically that it is not an interference with the Monroe doctrine. I have stated that thrice, I think.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was wondering why the Senator thought it ought to be amended to specifically take care of the Monroe doctrine, because he has just stated that it does not interfere with the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do say that it does not interfere with the Monroe doctrine. I have stated, however, in order to meet any claim that it interferes, that it ought to be made certain and definite.

Mr. President, I want, just before closing, to discuss another feature of this matter. The Senate has before it Senate resolution 411. That resolution seeks to record the Senate in favor of the withdrawal of the soldiers of the United States from Russia and the abandonment of that country to its fate. While the resolution inserts the words "as soon as practicable," the intendment is that it is the duty of the United States—and that, of course, includes the concurrent duty of our allies—to abandon Russia to the mercy of Bolshevist savagery. Every speech made in support of that resolution is a speech which challenges our right of interference with the domestic affairs of Russia and binds us to abandon Russia to the robbing, murdering band of Bolshevists who, having seized all the resources of the Russian Government—its industries, its banks, its treasuries, and its transportation facilities, and having thereby gained such a mastery over the peasants and all others who believe in the rule of law and morality as to render their opposition impotent—are perpetrating atrocities unequaled in the world's long history.

"As soon as practicable," therefore, means, according to the idea of the proponents of the resolution, as soon as we can remove our troops from that country.

I am not surprised that those who are earnestly supporting this policy of retreat take occasion to declare that their position must not be construed as an expression of friendship or sympathy for the Bolshevists of Russia.

They do not want the American people, who listen to the purr of this accursed tiger under their soft caress, to get the idea that they are intentionally giving pleasure to the beast.

Their apprehension, Mr. President, that it might be so accepted is well founded. I was one of the three Members on this side of the Chamber who voted against that resolution. I did not vote against it because I felt that there was any real danger in the resolution itself, because practically it might be construed to mean almost anything you wish. I voted against it because I knew that its adoption by the Senate would give great aid and comfort to Lenine and Trotsky and their gang of brigands, murderers, and rapists. I voted against it because I knew that poor stricken Russia, looking with hopeful eyes to this Government to relieve it from its present awful condition of anarchy, would hear but the one note, abandonment to their fate. I voted against it because I knew that Lenine and Trotsky would hear nothing of the personal condemnation of their conduct, but only the record vote of the Senate of the United States approving their damnable reign of terror.

I can not but be somewhat surprised when I find these great orators condemning the President of the United States for his inaction in Mexico, condemning his administration in a thousand other ways, now most heartily supporting him in his purpose to exert no action in behalf of the oppressed Russian people—innocent people who are being murdered by the hundreds of thousands. I think the President should have intervened in Mexico to protect American lives and American rights. I believe that when the Mexican bandits under Villa invaded United States territory and murdered its citizens we should not have given up the chase of that bandit; that we should have followed him to the utmost confines of Mexico and captured him and his band, brought them back to the United States, and put them on trial for murder.

And if I believe that should have been our course in Mexico, by a thousandfold greater reason I believe that in a mighty world war, and in the reconstruction that must be had to maintain the peace of the world in the future, we should continue to fight our enemies in Russia just so long as those enemies fight us or our allies in Russia.

We are building up a cordon of little nations around a portion of Germany for the purpose of protecting the peoples east of that Empire from being annihilated to satisfy the ambition of the two great central European powers. And yet we are leaving an opening for aggression, wider than the territory occupied by this cordon of nations. There is not a Senator here so ignorant of the Russian situation that he does not know that this Bolshevist government can not last, that it will continue only until it has looted every Russian Province within its grasp. And then what? Let a single year's history of this war answer that question.

It was Lenine and Trotzky and their following who sold out the entire Russian Army to the central powers. It will be Lenine and Trotzky who will surrender Russia to German control and domination. The honest people of Russia want peace. They would accept anything on earth, any control, even though it should be the return of an autocratic Czar, or German control to protect them in their rights of life, liberty, and property. There are hundreds of thousands of Germans living in Russia. They speak the Russian language. They have been colonized there for hundreds of years. They are German in sentiment and in thought. They understand the weakness of the whole Slavic race. And they will control Russian finance and Russian commerce. They will develop the mighty undeveloped resources of Russia.

The world frustrated the Germanic scheme of a Mitteleuropa, a great interior empire that would reach from the Baltic to the Caspian, from the Caspian to Bagdad, but at what awful costs? With a casualty list of at least 27,000,000 and with a destruction beyond computation. It is now proposed to allow her, the defeated country, the control of a country ten times greater in area than that which measured her ambitions when she launched this war.

No matter what the careful wording of this resolution is, I ask myself this question: Would an affirmative vote by me give aid and comfort to Lenine and Trotsky? Would it please the Bolshevists throughout the United States? Would it aid and strengthen their cause? The answer must be that it would so do. The American Bolshevists all agree that we have no right to battle against their brothers in crime across the ocean. We are to-day deporting these criminals because they favor bolshevism in this country. At the same time we are purposing in the resolution to subserve Bolshevist rule in Russia. I fail to see the consistency. Senators declare that it is none of our business what the Russian people do toward each other. That was not what we said when we intervened in Cuba and made war on Spain. I think we and our allies have shamefully treated the real Russian patriots. We have failed to give them the support which by every principle of honor as well as of military strategy we should have given them. We have painted in glowing terms on the floor of this Senate the fidelity of that band of Czecho-Slovaks who, after Lenine and Trotsky had surrendered the Russian Army to Germany, refused to abide by that surrender and began their perilous march across the mighty continent to join our force in France. They were betrayed by the Bolshevist authorities. They were told that if they would surrender their arms they would be given free transportation to the Siberian coast.

They surrendered their arms and then without arms they fought and won a battle in order to reinvest themselves with that element of self-defense and of war. They fought without guns and maintained their organization. They are somewhere up in central Russia to-day. Senators probably would abandon this little band of friends. I would not. We have a little Army—a few thousand men—protecting American property from these bandits. Senators would not increase that force to such an extent that it could take the offensive.

In making this statement, Mr. President, I do not wish it to be understood that that is the position of the proponent of this resolution. If I understand him correctly, his position is that we either ought to bring them out, or we ought to support them with a sufficient number to protect them. I want to leave the alternative out of the question and declare that it is our business to put sufficient soldiers in Russia to support them and make good our agreement with the Russian people.

I would increase our force to a hundred thousand or five hundred thousand, if necessary. I would save Russia. I would stay the hands of the robber and the murderer until the law-abiding, the decent people of Russia, could hold an election and establish a government. It is argued on the floor by Senators that we have no right to be there because we have not recognized any government. To my mind that is one great reason why we should be there, to see that there is a government organized, for no man acquainted with the situation could call the Bolshevist control a government.

Mr. President, we are in war. The Russian Bolshevists are our enemies. By their action they inflicted a greater damage on us at a most critical period in the history of the war than was ever inflicted by the whole German armies when they centered their force against the armies of Haig in a drive to the sea. Lenine and Trotsky made it possible to make that drive. They are in exactly the same position that a regiment or a division of our Army would have been in had they deserted our country and joined the ranks of our enemies. Would Senators say that we should not have fought them because they were Americans or because we had not recognized them as an enemy division?

Not only this, Mr. President, but there is a moral obligation resting upon this country to sustain the real Russian people, our friends, as against the Bolshevists, our enemies. Let us see if there is any foundation for that moral duty. In the war address of President Wilson, made before the two branches of Congress on April 2, 1917, speaking of Russia, he uses this language:

> The autocracy that crowned the summit of her political structure, long as it had stood and terrible as was the reality of its power, was not in fact Russian in origin, character, or purpose; now it has been shaken off and the great, generous Russian people have been added in all their naive majesty and might to the forces that are fighting for freedom in the world, for justice, and for peace. Here is a fit partner for a league of honor.

To whom did the President refer at that time? Was he referring as a fit partner for a league of honor to the Bolshevists of Russia? Could he have had in mind Lenine and Trotsky, with their Bolshevist following? No, Mr. President; he spoke of the real Russian people, weak as they were, uninformed as they were—the easy prey of the demagogue and the extremist, but nevertheless sound of heart and honest of purpose. Which one of these two classes of people is the President about to take into the partnership of nations?

Again, article 6 of the 14 conditions of peace declared by the President in his address before the two Houses of Congress on January 8, 1918, reads:

> 6. The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unbiased opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing—and more than welcome assistance of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will and of their comprehension of the needs, as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

Mark that, "under institutions of her own choosing"—

Are we obtaining for her an unhampered and unbiased opportunity for the independent determination of her own political develpoment and national policy? Are we not purposing by the withdrawal of our armies to desert her while her people are being murdered and starved to death by hundreds of thousands by the criminals in control of her territory and resources? In what way are we assuring her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing? She chose a legislature. That legislature and all legislative form of government was destroyed by the Bolshevists. In what respect are her institutions to-day of her own choosing? If the treatment which is being accorded Russia by her sister nations is the acid test of our good will, then God forgive our infidelity.

Mr. President, it has been asserted on the floor of the Senate that no faction of the people of Russia desire our interference. I can not believe it. It is impossible of belief. It is impossible that the majority of the people in Russia are content to have their best citizens murdered, their property looted, their daughters assaulted in the shameful manner disclosed from every reliable source in all the investigation upon the subject. Testimony has been taken from a reliable source, from people who have been living in Russia for years, bearing upon the Russian situation.

I wish here to have read into the RECORD an address by a lady who is described as the mother or grandmother of the Russian revolution. I take that method of designation because it is more clear than to attempt to pronounce her name. I wish to have the Secretary read that short address which she gives to the American people. This address was given a few days ago in New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

AN APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

[By Catherine Breshkovskaya, at a mass meeting at Carnegie Hall, Monday evening, Feb. 10, 1919.]

There are two reasons why I am speaking aloud and openly about the affairs of Russia, about the conditions our country is living through in this critical hour of her history, and what are her greatest needs in this hour.

The first reason is that Russia, although the most backward in her culture, has rendered such great services to Europe, and therefore to the whole world, that she deserves the full attention of all her friends and allies. For many centuries Russia served, and still serves, as a barrier, defending Europe against the raiding forces of Asia. By a great price, the price of her own blood and progress, Russia guarded the might and the culture of the European peoples. She withstood with her own back the incessant shocks of wild invaders, and for centuries was obliged to concentrate her forces only for self-defense, for the preservation of her independence and safety. Russia had hardly the time to fortify her position in the East before Europe itself began to hit her, and blow after blow fell on her shoulders again and again. Twelve different nations sent their forces, under the leadership of Napoleon the First, to destroy and conquer Russia. Our large country saw her cities ruined, her villages burned, her treasuries robbed.

A century passed. Russia rose up and entered the family of peoples who struggled toward freedom and light. But it was not fated that our people should rest, should be left to work for themselves. A treacherous, merciless war, the work of her neighbor, waited Russia, and during five years Germany has tyrannized our country in concert with her allies, the treacherous Bolsheviki. Material poison, moral, spiritual poison—all the diabolical machinery was put into action to bring our beautiful country to the ground. The very heart of Russia, her very mind, is injured by the venom brought across her boundaries by her enemies. Cooperating with Lenine and Trotzky, the Government of Germany strove to poison the very conscience of the Russian people. But she, my motherland, bore up agaist even this trial. The mind and conscience of a great people will never die! They already awaken to a new and better life. The enlightened Russian people will come to freedom and democracy.

Russia has rendered great services to humanity by carrying on her shoulders the defense of Europe from Asia. She took those burdens from the shoulders of other European peoples and gave them the opportunity to continue in safety their progress, remaining herself for centuries the sentinel of civilization. Now, when these historical services, and even the recent enormous Russian sacrifices in the war with Germany, are forgotten, Russia has the right to present her account to mankind.

This is the first reason for making my appeal to the American people. And if you ask me who it is that has authorized me to make it, I answer that it is my 75 years of life among my people and my 50 years of struggle for the freedom, the honor, and the welfare of my motherland. I am authorized by my infinite love for Russia, by my anxiety to see her happy, by my fear to see her future endangered. And, proud of that love, proud of the confidence of my people, I appeal to you, citizens of America, and remind you that there, far away, lives a true and honest democracy, ready to pursue her way side by side with you if you desire it.

Do you ask me why I especially address my woes and sorrows to you? It is because we Russians regard you as a people that have always cherished their liberty; that have always held high the standards of democracy; that have never stood for despotism and oppression. And also because many times have we heard from you words of friendship, words that give us Russians the hope to see in you faithful brothers, always ready to aid us in the hour of our hardships.

This hour has come. And I, the old nurse of my beloved suffering child, I come to tell you, friends, about its sufferings. Great are these sufferings, and undeserved. It would be a great sin to leave Russia alone, her bleeding wounds unattended. While we lived through all the horrors of war, paying 10,000,000 in casualties, of whom 3,000,000 are dead, and as many disabled for life, your sufferings in this war were comparatively small. Never did the enemy tramp your soil, never destroy your towns, never burn your villages, never cut down your forests and gardens, never violate your daughters, never shoot thousands of your innocent citizens, never force on you a civil war with blood, robbery, and slaughter.

The United States does not count her war orphans by the millions, and she is happy in that she is sure of her future. Her children are growing up without witnessing atrocities and degradation. May the security and the happiness of the American people be blessed forever! My friends, he who has much must give much. From the very beginning of the history of this country we see her people possessed of a high degree of culture and spiritual enlightenment; we see in them fighters for liberty, defenders of human dignity. We see in the people of this country the eldest brethren of the Russian people, and we hope that they will stretch forth their hands to us without pride, unselfishly, bringing moral and material aid.

Of what nature should this aid be? What are the immediate needs of the Russian people? Our greatest, deepest, most immediate need is the creation of conditions under which the Russian people will be able to convoke an all-Russian constituent assembly. Russia will never be quiet and satisfied until her representatives, freely chosen by the entire population, will establish a constitution for the State, will lay the foundation for a stable, democratic government, insuring laws that accord with the will and desires of the Russian people. The demand for a constituent assembly was one of the main aspirations of the Russian revolution. It was on the eve of its realization when the Bolshevist revolt, in November, 1917, tore out of the hands of the people the beautiful possibility to make laws for themselves, to trace the path for their future, to construct a new life in accordance with the interests of the masses, to strengthen peace and insure the common welfare. The constituent assembly, elected by the entire Russian people on the basis of universal, direct, equal, and secret suffrage was dispersed by the Bolsheviki with bayonets.

A year ago our allies, together with the devoted and proven friends of the Russian people, could have created the conditions necessary for the convocation of a constituent assembly. The opportunity was lost, and our masses, simple-minded, naive, and credulous, tired out by their past misfortunes, became a prey to the base and rapacious instincts of selfish, ambitious, and merciless people. Under the circumstances, Russia faces a long and cruel struggle with all the evil which has entered her life. She has to suffer all the pains inevitable in the conditions of a people clearing its way to a better future. Many opposing forces bar this way; they check the normal course of events and make the people suffer and suffer more in their struggle to get the right issue out of the insurmountable chaos.

The world is curious to see the outcome of this deadlock, the issue of this conflict of passions, theories, and aspirations, the conflict between the people striving for a brighter life, and the hideous treachery handicapping the great people.

There is no doubt that Russia will be able to find the right path, but her pains, her bloody sufferings will be known only to the millions of Russian mothers and the millions of our other innocent martyrs, our orphans. Flooded with tears and blood, Russia moans and cries out to the world. She is a living body, and her tortures can not be looked upon cold-bloodedly as an extraordinary, never-before witnessed experiment in social evolution. She is alive, and every pore of her body is shedding blood. The illness that was not stopped in time, I fear, may be prolonged for years. Only through insistent and incessant work and efforts can Russia be brought to the normal conditions, to the position in which she found herself two years ago, after the glorious revolution of March, 1917. In those days there was real freedom in Russia, and it seems that our young country had every possibility for peaceful evolution and the free building of her future. I may assert, without boasting, that the March revolution, perhaps the most beautiful and the most rational revolution in the world, was brought about, among other factors, through the efforts of the party of Socialists-revolutionists, whose program for more than one-half century presents a basis for settlement which will satisfy the demands and aspirations of the overwhelming majority of the Russian people.

But, unfortunately, our people, young and inexperienced, could not at once find the true path, and, if abandoned by their friends, they may not find it for a long time. It is your duty, good friends, to aid them by your sympathy and your deeds. Especially by deeds, for our people, long deceived in their hopes, will give credit only to those who really and practically give them proof of their sympathy, to those who aid them to elevate and educate the new Russian generations, the millions of Russian orphans deprived of shelter and the most elementary means of education.

Russia is exhausted through the war and the terrible civil strife. Her industries are disorganized, her means of transportation are destroyed, her educational system is at a standstill. Without industry, means of transportation, and education, Russia faces conditions the horror of which can not be expressed.

I undertook it as my task to present to the American people the tragedy of the people of Russia in order that the American democracy might render us the immediate help necessary for reestablishing democratic order for convocation of the Constituent Assembly and creating conditions whereby peaceful progress may be possible in Russia. Recalling with gratitude the true friendship which the people of this country have shown me during my exile in Siberia I appeal to the people of the United States to help my suffering people, the people of Russia.

CATHERINE BRESHKOVSKAYA.

FEBRUARY 11, 1919, New York.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I feel a little guilty perhaps for having had read at this time such a long excerpt from an address, but it so clearly and simply gives the situation in Russia that I felt it was due that the American people should know the conditions from a Russian standpoint.

Mr. President, I wish that some member of the Judiciary Committee had presented some of the testimony which has been taken before that committee upon the Russian situation. I wish it could be published to the American people before the peace treaty shall have been signed, so that the people, once realizing the awful condition there, would insist that we should sign no peace pact until the declarations made by the President of the United States to protect Russia until she could establish a government of the people, until she could elect a representative assembly, should have been carried out.

The only information I get is from excerpts published in the press. These excerpts, I am informed, evidence but a fraction of the horrible condition disclosed by the entire testimony. I read an excerpt from the testimony of Rev. Dr. George L. Simons, superintendent since 1907 of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Russia and Finland, who left Petrograd the middle of last October. Let me quote a few sentences as to whether the Bolshevists are allies or enemies:

Q. Can you tell us the real attitude of the Bolsheviki so far as it regards the two groups of belligerents in the war?—A. Lenine and Trotsky were always saying bitter things against the allies—was the answer—

They scattered posters in which they described the allies as the blood drinking and flesh eating allies. They named France and England, but as I recollect did not specify the United States, the reason, in the opinion of the leading diplomatic representatives, being what may be described as a sort of strategical trick. They figured out that in the event that Bolshevism failed, as they knew it might, they would need a land of refuge, and they wanted the United States to be their asylum.

The real Bolsheviki are avowedly antially, and I have no hesitation in saying that they have a real affection for Germany. This fact has been proved time and time again.

That they are enemies of the United States, that they are friends of the enemy is demonstrated in every possible way. Nothing could be more brutal, insulting, and defiant than their published articles against the United States.

I should like to have the thinking American people, at least, read the message that was received by the President of the United States from the Russian Soviet some months ago. It was so insulting to the President, so brutal, so low, that I feel that I would not be justified in having it printed in any American record.

Dr. Simons told of witnessing the murder of two young men in front of his office in Petrograd, the killing taking place a few minutes before Ambassador Francis, who was his dinner guest that night, arrived at his home.

Asked to estimate the number of persons who had been murdered by the Bolshevists, Dr. Simons replied that it was in the thousands, but that no man could at this time even approximate the number of the victims.

"The Bolsheviki never investigate. They kill on the spot, as a rule," he added.

Dr. Simons cited the case of two brothers. One was wanted by the Bolsheviki to answer a certain charge. They were unable to find the brother sought, so they killed the one against whom there was no charge or suspicion.

Blackmail and graft were everywhere recognized, said Dr. Simons. If a person could get the money, he said, it was generally possible to buy even one's life from the present régime. However, few had the money, and the killings went on.

"What about the criminal element in the present régime?" Senator KING asked.

"There is a large criminal element in the Bolshevist régime," was the answer. "The fact that the criminal has a big part in the movement is proved by the destruction in public bonfire of court records, the destruction of prisons, and the liberation of all criminals who are sympathetic with the cause. We know it to be a fact that some of the worst criminal characters in all Russia hold positions under the Bolshevist government, while others are helping as agitators; while under the damnable system they call nationalization the criminal is actively cooperating." (New York Times, Feb. 13, 1919.)

"What of the treatment of women and girls?" Senator KING asked.

"That is a terrible question to answer. I might cite case after case in answer to it. Let me cite one of the worst:

"A few days before I left Petrograd, in October last, a woman of the highest culture, a woman more than 50 years of age, and a teacher for years in a famous imperial institute for the education of young girls, called on me. She was in hysterics. 'Why have I lived to see all this!' she sobbed.

"Then she told the story. The institute in which she taught is one of the finest buildings in Petrograd. She said that the Bolshevist authorities had barracked hundreds of the Red Guard in one wing of the building, and in doing so issued orders that all girls of and between the ages of 16 and 18 years were to remain in the building.

"'I wish,' the poor woman exclaimed, as she tried to tell the rest of the horrible story, 'that I had died before this thing happened.'

"And that," asked Senator WOLCOTT, "was the result not of the act of irresponsible guards but of the Bolshevist authorities?"

"Yes."

"In other words," said Senator KING, "these poor little girls were the victims of the lust of these unspeakable creatures?"

"Yes; of the dirtiest pigs the world has ever seen. So vile no words can describe them."

Senators, have we so lost our sense of repugnance for atrocities of this character that while this war is continuing, while these people are our enemies and are fighting our soldiers, we propose to withdraw our troops and submit the poor innocent victims and the good people of Russia to such brutal attacks?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. Do I understand that the Senator is in favor of maintaining war against the Russian people?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am in favor of maintaining war against Lenine and Trotzky, and I am in favor of fighting the battles of the poor innocent Russian people, who are in the grasp of these damnable beasts.

Mr. FRANCE. Do I understand that for the purpose——

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator understands my position, I think.

Mr. FRANCE. I regret that I do not understand, Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am sorry.

Mr. FRANCE. But perhaps it is my own fault.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is undoubtedly mine.

Mr. FRANCE. It seems to me that the Constitution of our country very clearly provides that the carrying on war against a foreign people should only be after a declaration of war by the Congress; and does not the Senator realize——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Maryland has not finished his question.

Mr. WALSH. I rise, Mr. President, to remind the Senator from North Dakota that he was warned by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] some time ago that he would invoke the rule if the Senator from North Dakota yielded further, and that the Senator would thereby lose the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I recognize that; and I hope the Senator from Maryland will not ask the question.

Mr. FRANCE. I did not know that there was a rule in the Senate to that effect.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is such a rule, but it is provided that simply the asking of a question is not subject to the rule, as I understand; and I understood the Senator simply wanted to ask a question. Heretofore Senators have gone on and expressed their own convictions on the subject and not confined themselves to questions.

Mr. FRANCE. I think it is very important that the document be made perfectly clear. The Senator has my question, however, and I do not care to elaborate on it. I think he understands what is in my mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course I understand. Mr. President, we declared war against Germany, and when Lenine and Trotzky sold out the Russian army to Germany and when Lenine and his following supported the German régime in every possible way, then we were in war against every one who supported our enemies. Lenine and Trotzky did support our enemy, and surrendered our allies to that enemy. I have already made myself clear in a declaration that we are exactly in the same position as though Italy an alley had surrendered her armies and used them to support Germany. We would then be fighting Italy or fighting that portion of Italy that was supporting Germany. If we fight these beasts we are fighting our enemies, worse enemies than the Germans, because the Germans were our open enemies, while the others parading as our allies betrayed us.

Now, Mr. President, I will go on with these questions.

In another instance I was told of a group of young girls who were approached and advised to go out into the Novsky Prospect and "do as the prostitutes are doing."

"Do the Red Guards," Senator KING asked, "rape, ravish, and despoil women at will?"

"They certainly do."

I have no hesitation at all in saying that I am willing to put this country in war against those beasts.

Again says Mr. Simons:

I am strongly convinced that in all main essentials the aims of the Bolsheviks and of the I. W. W. are identical. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs Zorin, who lived eight years in the East Side, told me once that they expected to get Germany after Russia, and after Germany they would tackle the United States.

We are passing laws against the I. W. W. in the United States. We are deporting them; we are sending them out of the country; but we must not lay our hands upon these brutes in Russia. I disagree with the contention of anyone who would not have us make war. I would make war until we redeem the promise that we made to Russia.

And again:

"Can you tell us anything of the treatment accorded the so-called bourgeoisie, or middle classes?" Senator NELSON asked.

"Thousands upon thousands of them have been starved to death," Dr. Simons answered. "I have seen the walking shadows of these dying human beings in the streets of Petrograd. Thousands have dropped dead in their tracks. I have seen them myself. I have seen some of the finest men of the old days standing starving in the streets, and with outstretched hands begging a few kopecks. I have been in the homes of the best people of Petrograd, in which there has been no bread for weeks. When I say the better class I mean the people who believe in a clean handkerchief and a white shirt."

"What of the Red army; what is it?

"It is a mass of Letts, Chinese, Germans, Austrians, Hungarians, and unfortunate Russians who have been forced to serve. But for these outsiders there never would have been a nucleus for a Red army."

I again quote something from the testimony of Madam Breshkovskaya, known as "The Grandmother of the Revolution":

Q. Madam, can you give us any fair estimate as to the number of people who have been killed by the Bolsheviki?

And I want Senators to listen to this answer:

"Well," replied Madam Breshkovskaya, "in the little more than one year of Bolshevist rule, there have been twice as many Russians—men women, and children—killed as there were soldiers killed in the front during the almost three years that Russia was actively in the war."

And it is estimated that there were 3,000,000 Russians killed in battle. That means, if her statement is true, that 6,000,000 poor Russian people have been murdered since the President made his declaration that the United States would assist Russia in establishing a constitutional government.

"For instance, there were 2,000 officers in one prison who were killed at one time. Every man, woman, or child who opposes bolshevism in any way risks his life."

Shall we do nothing because Russia is on the other side of the ocean? Why, eastern Russia is only 30 miles from us across the Bering Strait; but here is an atrocity a hundred thousand times greater than the atrocities committed against our Cuban people, for which we made war on Spain.

Again, she says:

Two years ago when the Czar was overthrown we were happy. We expected and had reason to expect excellent laws; we expected political peace and social freedom. None of these things has been realized. We thought we were going to get a national assembly and a constitution, and we got neither.

Now, we promised that we would help them get both. That was one of our agreements, that we would not make peace with Germany until we had assured both a constitutional and a national assembly.

For six months we were free, and then came these German-dominated Bolsheviki.

Again:

So it was that Russia fell into the hands of these two ambitious creatures, Lenine and Trotsky. There are some who think that after Bolsheviki will come another Czar, and then the freedom that we thought we had will be but a legend. To-day Russia is in ruins.

And I want Senators to mark this:

If you had given us 50,000 good soldiers there would have been no bolshevism. The peasants are against the Bolsheviki, but they have no arms.

Mr. President, that statement that 50,000 soldiers would have saved poor Russia is given again and again by other witnesses, prominent men in the United States, and those who understand the Russian situation.

Again:

There is robbery everywhere. The brigands control and everybody has been robbed. All Russia is physically and morally depressed, and bolshevism is spreading around us. All the best men in Russia, the professors, the literateurs, all the rest, they have gone. We do not want another Czar, yet if bolshevism rules many years more, Russia will be dead.

Oh, Mr. President, think of a people who pass a resolution that intelligence is a crime, and that people who intellectually are above the lowest class of criminals must be killed in order that the world may be propagated by the lower class! We are asked to league ourselves with that class of people, to take them into a league of nations!

Mr. President, here is another question:

Q. Do you really believe that Trotzky and Lenine are the tools of Germany?

A. "I do not believe it; I know it," the old woman answered, as she banged her hand on the table.

Q. "Isn't it a fact that the Russian people would prefer a Czar to the Bolsheviki?" Senator NELSON asked.

A. Certainly they would prefer a Czar to Lenine and Trotzky; but we do not want a Czar again.

Q. What proportion of the peasants are against the Bolsheviki?

A. Practically all of them. In some places they are fighting them with sticks now.

Q. "Do you think that we should withdraw our troops, and by 'we' I mean the allies?" Senator STERLING asked.

A. If they will fight with us against the Bolsheviki; no. The Czecho-Slovaks are standing all alone, and they are far too few in numbers. There are only a few thousand of French, British, Americans, and Italians with them.

Q. Do you think we should treat or deal in any way with the Bolsheviki?

A. Certainly not. They have destroyed all the honest and intellectual life of Russia. All honest people are their enemies.

Mr. President, I want to present a little article here from one of their declarations of principles. It reads:

Another phase of bolshevism and one not hitherto referred to at this hearing is what the Bolsheviki call the "Leveling of Intelligence." This forms one of the most ghastly effects of the system. Persons, under the regulation, who are considered to have more intelligence than is considered healthy for the cause of Lenine and Trotzky are arrested, thrown into prison, and I am certain in great numbers of instances put to death simply because they were considered of higher intelligence than the leaders approve of. This one phase should indicate to any thinking man or woman in America what bolshevism is and what its spread means to the civilized world.

"What can you tell us of the policy that is known as the nationalization of women," Mr. Simons was asked.

Mr. President, I am going to put into the RECORD, without reading, the principles that are enunciated by the Bolshevist government for the nationalization of women. I shall not ask the Secretary to read it. It is not fit to be read in a mixed audience. It is so filthy, so brutal, that I am surprised that whole country does not awaken in indignation and declare that the civilization of the world demands the extermination of such beasts. I will ask, Mr. President, that it be printed in the RECORD, and then all who desire to read it in privacy may do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DECREE OF SARATOV SOVIET.

The first decree read by Mr. Simons was dated March 15, 1918, and was issued by the anarchist Soviet, which was charged by Lenine and Trotzky with the government of the city of Saratov. The official translation of the decree reads:

This decree is proclaimed by the Free Association of Anarchists in the town of Saratov. In compliance with the decision of the Soviet of Peasants and Soldiers and Workmen's Deputies of Kranstadt, the abolition of the private possession of women.

MOTIVES.

Social inequalities and legitimate marriage having been a condition in the past which served as an instrument in the hands of the bourgeoisie, thanks to which all the best species of all the beautiful women have been the property of the bourgeoisie, have prevented the proper continuation of the human race. Such ponderous arguments have induced the present organization to edict the following decree:

1. From March 1 the right to possess women having reached the ages 17 to 32 is abolished.

2. The age of women shall be determined by birth certificate or passports or by the testimony of witnesses, and on failure to produce documents their age shall be determined by the Black Committee, who shall judge them according to appearance.

3. This decree does not affect women having five children.

4. The former owners may retain the right of using their wife without awaiting their turn.

5. In case of resistance of the husband he shall forfeit the right of the former paragraph.

6. All women according to this decree are exempted from private ownership and are proclaimed the property of the whole nation.

7. The distribution and management of the appropriated women in compliance with the decision of the above said organization are transferred to the Anarchist Saratov Club. In three days from the publication of this decree all women given by it to the use of the nation are obliged to present themselves to the given address and give the required information.

8. Before the Black Committee is formed for the realization of this decree the citizens themselves shall be charged with such control. Remarks: Each citizen knowing a woman not submitting herself to the address under this decree is obliged to let it be known to the Anarchist Club, giving the full address, full name, and father's name of the offending woman.

9. Male citizens have the right to use one woman not oftener than three times a week, for three hours, observing the rules specified below.

10. Each man wishing to use a piece of public property should be a bearer of certificate from the Factories Committee, professional union, or Workmen's, Soldiers', and Peasants' Council, certifying that he belongs to the working family class.

11. Every working member is obliged to discount 2 per cent from his earnings to the fund of general public action. Remarks: This committee in charge will put these discounting funds with the specifications of the names and lists into the State banks and other institutions handing down these funds to the popular generation.

12. Male citizens not belonging to the working class in order to have the right equally with the proletariat are obliged to pay 100 roubles monthly into the public funds.

13. The local branch of the State bank is obliged to begin to reserve the payments to the national generation funds.

14. All women proclaimed by this decree to be the national property will receive from the funds an allowance of 238 roubles a month.

15. All women who are pregnant are released of the direct State duties for four months, up to three months before and one month after childbirth.

16. The children born are given to an institution for training after they are 1 month old, where they are trained and educated until they are 17 years of age, at the cost of the public funds.

17. In case of a birth of twins the mother is to receive a prize of 200 roubles.

18. All citizens, men and women, are obliged to watch carefully their health and to make each week an examination of urine and blood. Remark: The examinations are to be made daily at the laboratories of the Popular Generation Health.

19. Those who are guilty of spreading venereal disease will be held responsible and severely punished.

20. Women having lost their health may apply to the Soviet for a pension.

21. The Chief of Anarchists will be in charge of perfecting the temporary arrangements and technical measures concerning the realization of this decree.

22. All those refusing to recognize and support this decree will be proclaimed sabotage, enemies of the people and counter anarchists, and will be held to the severest responsibilities.

(Signed) COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF SARATOV, RUSSIA.

Any girl having reached her eighteenth year and not having married is obliged, subject to the most severe penalty, to register at the Bureau of Free Love of the Commissariat of Surveillance.

Having registered at the Bureau of Free Love, she has the right to choose from among the men between the ages of 10 and 50 a cohabitant husband.

Remarks—(1) The consent of the man in the said choice is unnecessary. (2) The man on whom such a choice falls has no right to make any protest whatsoever against the infringement.

The right to choose from a number of girls who have reached their eighteenth year is also given to men.

The opportunity to choose a husband or wife is to be presented once a month.

The bureau of free love is autonomous.

Men between the ages of 19 and 50 have the right to choose from among the registered women, even without the consent of the latter, in the interests of the State.

Children who are the issue of these unions are to become the property of the State.

The decree states further that it has been based on the "excellent example of similar decrees already issued at Luga, Kolpino, etc."

A similar "project of provisional rights in connection with the socialization of women in the city of Hvelinsk and vicinity" has been published in the Local Gazette of the Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies, Mr. Simons said.

"Gentlemen," added Mr. Simons, as he finished reading the Vladimir decree, "these documents speak for themselves. God and morality are unknown to the Bolsheviki, and everything that makes life decent and worth living is in jeopardy if this thing is permitted to go ahead."

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, I want to ask that there be inserted and printed in the RECORD as a part of my address an article printed in the press a short time ago—I think it was the Post—by Archibald Hopkins, pertaining to the Russian situation; a very strong article, in which he demonstrates beyond any question that we could restore order with the use of not more than 100,000 troops, including the United States and our allies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WOULD WAR IN RUSSIA—SEND ADEQUATE AMERICAN ARMY, URGES ARCHIBALD HOPKINS—BOLSHEVIKI RISING MENACE—STATE OF WAR NOW EXISTS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND FORCES OF DISORDER BOTH HERE AND IN RUSSIA—DUTY OF AMERICA TO EXTEND AID TO HELPLESS PEOPLE AND PROTECT OWN LAND.

[By Archibald Hopkins.]

The objection to keeping American troops in Russia is being loudly and persistently made in the Senate on the ground that we are not at war with the Bolsheviki. Such is not the case. Not only are we openly engaged in fighting them, but they are just as openly at war with us in the field in Russia and in our cities and towns all over the United States.

They have plainly and repeatedly declared it to be their purpose to destroy this Government and to substitute for it the beneficent rule of a single minority class which they are exercising in Russia. Consequently we are bound to fight them wherever we can do it most effectively. If a man found rattlesnakes crawling onto his premises every day from the same direction, he would not wait till they had spread and bred all over his farm but would trace them to their den and exterminate the whole brood.

STRIKE AT SOURCE ONLY WAY.

And that is the only way to deal effectually with the Bolsheviki. Put them down at the source and their poison will cease to spread. In doing that we should be acting strictly in self-defense. We are in more danger from their infamous propaganda than we ever were from German militarism.

President Wilson refused to treat with the government that stood behind that, and said there must be force and still force, until it was overthrown. He further declared in one of his propositions that there could be no peace while arbitrary power is anywhere exercised. Now he is negotiating for peace with men far more arbitrary, oppressive, and cruel than czar or kaiser, men who in shameless, bloody atrocity and robbery have surpassed the Huns, who have abolished God and religion and made women common property, done away with the home and family ties, and who aim to cover the whole earth with their deadly, miasmatic control.

BOLSHEVIKI TOOLS OF GERMANY.

What do Americans think of their representative sitting down at a table to make peace with them? And what do they think of the selection to represent them of a man in full sympathy with Bolsheviki principles and in daily accord with some of their most revolting practices? What does it mean? Why is not the same rule of force applied to them which overthrew the Kaiser and his Government?

Another thing we should think of. If we and the allies recognize the Bolsheviki, as we must, if we come to terms with them, the result will be that, incapable as they are of forming an effective government and ignorant and helpless as are the majority of the Russian people, they will inevitably come completely under the control of Germany, whose paid tools and agents, Lenine and Trotzky, have been proven to be, and Germany, nominally defeated, will in 10 years have accomplished all she set out to do.

She will have dominion over the vastest and richest undeveloped territory on earth, with a man power which, with German training and an undying desire for revenge, could defy and overrun a world in arms.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND MEN CAN RESTORE ORDER.

A year ago Kerensky's secretary of war said 40,000 men could have put an end to Bolshevism. The best Russian authorities say 100,000 can go easily to Petrograd now, restore order, reconvene the constituent assembly and stay by it till an all-Russian Government is established. The people—all but the Bolsheviki—would gladly welcome such a force.

Do not we and the allies owe that much to Russia? Had it not been for her wonderful fighting at the beginning of the war, which, at a sacrifice of over 6,000,000 men, held the entire Austrian Army and a large German contingent in the east, France would certainly have been overrun, the allies beaten, and we, wholly unprepared as we were, left at the mercy of the Huns. That the Russians were drawn back and demoralized and fell out of the conflict was no fault of theirs. They were cut off from supplies through the Black Sea, were almost deprived of arms, clothing, and food, and, being ignorant, became easy prey to German and Bolshevik propaganda and corruption.

SPANISH WAR SAVED CUBA.

They could no longer fight. One of the most creditable chapters in our history points the way to what we should do for Russia. Why did we go to war with Spain? Not that we had any casus belli with her, not that we were under any obligation to Cuba, but because, having the power to stop it, we were unwilling to stand by and see her cruelly oppressed and denied the right of self-government. We declared war and rescued her, established a government of justice, and as soon as she was ready we turned over the island to her own control, under which peace and prosperity have continued to reign.

There are much stronger reasons why we should help to drive the Bolsheviki out of Russia than there were to drive Spain out of Cuba. The Russians have always been our friends and have fought our battles.

SUFFERINGS WORSE THAN CUBANS.

Their sufferings are a thousand times greater than were the Cubans. They are even more helpless, and they are looking to us for rescue. In helping them we shall be protecting ourselves.

Let me repeat what I have already said, for one father and mother. We have an only son who has been wounded in France, and is now on the Atlantic on his way home. Far rather would we have him turn back, if need be, though not with a handful of men, which an indecisive, ineffective, worse than useless policy has sent to Russia, but with an adequate, well-equipped force, able to do with the help of our allies what we did for Cuba.

I do not believe that the fathers and mothers and sons of America, having put their hands to the plow, wish to turn back and leave their great task unfinished.

Lloyd George has stated that it is wholly due to America's unwillingness to act that nothing is done. Has America made any such declaration? Has anyone been authorized to make it for her?

God forbid that such a record shall become a page in our honorable history. God forbid that the allies and ourselves stand by supine till all that is best in Russian life is exterminated, and the process is completed by which it can be said of her "they make a solitude and call it peace."

CRIES OF HELPLESS ASCEND.

In that process our Teuton enemies are cooperating in order that Russia may become a German asset. Shall we by our acquiescence join in the work? Shall we with such a spectacle of misery and despair as presents itself in Russia, hopeless without some such succor as we have ample power to furnish, as the cries of starving infants assail our ears, and the appealing, outstretched hands of bleeding victims of assassins meet our gaze, saying coldly, "It is no concern of ours; the day of self-determination has come; you must yourselves determine what to do and carry your own conclusions into effect," pass by on the other side? Is Russia less our neighbor than Cuba because she is farther away? No matter what covenants Mr. Wilson is bringing home, there can be no real or lasting peace till there is peace in Russia. Shall it be a peace with a future of hope and the beginning of good government or shall it be the peace of death? It is for us to say.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have here, also, Mr. President, a number of letters, one of them written by a man who was a major of Cavalry, who has been in Russia for some time, strongly supporting the views that I have given, giving many reasons, and, possibly, in very much better language than I have been able to express my own views. I will ask, also, that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INVERFIRS, LAKEWOOD, N. J.,
February 20, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCUMBER: I notice in the paper that you have introduced a bill declaring it to be the duty of the United States to send a sufficient number of troops to Russia to defeat the Bolsheviki in Russia itself. While we are all debating the subject of restricting the menace of this accursed creed in America, few seem to realize the necessity of crushing it in the place of its inception. I earnestly hope that your bill may be favorably reported and a chance given for debating it in the United States Senate.

There has been an extraordinary amount of misinformation presented in the form of evidence before various committees in Washington to the effect that it would take from one to three million men a generation to restore order in Russia. That such statements are absurd I feel confident in stating without reservation, whether the statements come from military or civil authorities. They certainly come from people who have no understanding whatever as to the strength and fighting capacity of the Bolsheviki in Russia. It is my opinion that in 1917 a sotnia of Cossacks could have crushed this movement in its inception. I was in Petrograd at the time, but Kerensky failed to give the order. In the early spring of this year 40,000 allied troops properly distributed and instructed to fight and not demonstrate would have done the job. I feel equally certain in stating now that 100,000 allied troops attacking from Odessa and from the north would put the armies of the Bolsheviki out of business and the party of Lenine into the scrap heap in six months.

That I am qualified to speak with some knowledge of the situation, I may state that I was in Russia during the campaigns of 1914, 1915, and 1916 as military observer of the London Times, and during that period covered the Russian front from the Baltic to the Danube and for that paper reported more than 80 battles in which the Russians took part. I was again in Russia in 1917 with the Root diplomatic mission. My evidence is not, therefore, mere hearsay but from direct observation. Either French, British, or American troops, properly supported by heavy guns and material, with plenty of aeroplanes, can always defeat from five to ten times their numbers of the mercenary troops composed of 57 varieties of adventurers which now constitute the so-called powerful army of Trotzky. I have watched the Russian Army year in and year out, both in victory and defeat, and know both its strength and its weakness and am willing to state without reservation that in the Bolshevik Army there is no strength and a hundred weaknesses which would melt before any definite allied policy, in all probability even before actual military contact were ever established.

The fact that the Bolsheviki army with its alleged hundreds of thousands of troops is defeated by a fraction of its own numbers every time it meets an army in any strength is significant enough as to its fundamental weakness.

If you ever get your bill in shape for discussion in committee, I would only be too glad to come to Washington and present concrete evidence to supplement the statements made above.

I was both speaking and writing along lines of supporting Russia up to December, 1917, when my efforts were summarily crushed by orders from the War Department. As I have been in the Army since May, 1917, I therefore was obliged to discontinue my efforts. I was discharged January 25 and am no longer under any such restrictions, and if I can serve with such information as I have in the fight against Bolshevism, both at home and abroad, I shall only be too happy. I am in Lakewood, N. J., for the winter.

Very truly, yours,

STANLEY WASHBURN,
Major of Cavalry, United States Army (retired).

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, I have also two other letters in support of the same proposition, each giving additional thoughts upon the subject, which I also ask may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

4533 PINE STREET,
Philadelphia, February 20, 1919.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I congratulate you on your resolution calling for the reenforcement of our little Army in northern Russia, which is almost the first evidence of courage and decision in the handling of this serious problem. Having sent 5,000 men up into the Arctic wilderness to do the work of 50,000, having encouraged our Russian and Czecho-Slovak allies to resist the Bolsheviki, having urged the Poles to defend their territory, we are now apparently about to scuttle out in abject surrender, leaving our allies to the tender mercies of the demoniac Bolsheviks. It is the most disgraceful episode of our whole connection with the great war, and I can think of nothing in our history which approaches it in ignominy.

There is something humiliating and unaccountable in the frantic haste of Congress to hurry our troops back home, regardless of our responsibilities to the world. Why did we ever enter the war if we were unwilling to bear our share of its certain consequences? Can we not see the danger of losing the victory even now? The Germans already are urging their leaders to refuse to sign the treaty on the ground that the allies will not dare order their armies to invade Germany. Shall we play into their hands through panic fear of the Socialist vote, or the unreasoning demands of relatives of the soldiers? Never was there greater need for courage in Congress than now.

I hope you will press your resolution, and wish you entire success.

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. E. MACKEAN.

1826 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE,
Washington, February 20.

DEAR SENATOR: I am rejoiced to see the stand you have taken in regard to Russia, and venture to inclose something I have written on the subject. I am receiving letters showing great interest and approval and urging that it be given wide publicity, which I do not know how to compass. Would it be possible to get it into the RECORD? I feel very sure that if the allies would announce their intention of sending an adequate force and make its purpose known in Russia the Bolsheviki would scatter.

* * * * * * *

Yours, very truly,

ARCHIBALD HOPKINS.

SENATOR MCCUMBER.

Mr. McCUMBER. I must admit that I have some letters here on the other side of the question. I have had a few letters that were written in very poor English and worse spelling, with black hands imprinted on them and skull and cross-bones attached, informing me what awful calamity would befall me if I dared to bring up this proposition in the Senate of the United States. Of course I understand that people who send those things out are of the Bolshevist type, who are always cowardly and would not dare to put their names to such letters, and no one needs pay any attention to them. I simply mention the fact as indicating that the Bolshevists of this country are bitterly opposed to our warring against their cocriminals on the other side of the Atlantic.

Mr. President, I have taken up more time than I intended to in the discussion of this question, but I felt that it ought to go out to the American people before we closed this Congress that some of us on this side of the Chamber are in favor of continuing our war in Russia until we have enabled the people of that country to establish a Government, and I felt also that it ought to be known that while all of us may disagree in some respects with this particular kind of a league-of-nations proposition, there are some Republicans who are strongly in favor of this great country joining hands with the other great nations of the world and devising some kind of a scheme to protect the innocent people of the world from another such cataclysm.

ADDITIONAL PAY FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall take only a minute or two of the time of the Senate. I understand there is a disposition among some Senators and also among some of the high officials of the country to take out of the Treasury of the United States billions of dollars for the improvement of desert lands and dismal swamps and place our returning heroes upon those lands whether they want to go there or not.

Of course, Mr. President, I shall not oppose any measure which in my judgment will be helpful to these brave men, I care not what it costs our Government. But in accordance with my best judgment I believe it would be a mistake, because many of these boys are not farmers and they do not desire to go out on a farm. Certainly any man who knows anything about that struggling industry must admit that it is the least profitable one among all the industries of our great land.

Mr. President, I have prepared a bill which would grant additional pay—one year's pay—to officers and enlisted men and others serving in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard. I know it is too late to pass that bill at this time. The question might be asked, Why do you introduce it? Let me say for the information of the Senate that no bill is pending before this body or the House which, in my judgment, includes more than one-third or possibly one-half of those who served in the Army. I know it will be impossible to pass this bill at this session, but I shall again introduce it at the next session, and I shall, with all the vigor I possess, urge passage of this bill at the earliest opportunity.

I ask out of order that the title of this bill may be read and that the bill may be printed in the RECORD. It is very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is granted. The Secretary will read.

The bill (S. 5678) granting additional pay to officers, enlisted men, and others serving in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 5678) granting additional pay to officers, enlisted men, and others serving in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.

Be it enacted, etc., That officers, enlisted men, and others in the Army of the United States, naval service, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, including Army field clerks, contract surgeons, members of the Army or Navy Nurse Corps (female), and members of the Naval Reserve Force, who have served the United States during any time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, shall be allowed, in addition to all pay and allowances otherwise due, an amount equal to one year's pay at the rate provided for the highest temporary or permanent grade, rank, or rating held by them during their service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918: Provided, That the above provision shall not apply to any person whose base pay exceeds $2,400 per annum; to any person who was assigned to noncombatant duty on account of being a conscientious objector; to persons discharged from the Army, naval service, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard as aliens; to any officer who has been dismissed from the Army, naval service, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard in accordance with sentence of court-martial; to any enlisted persons in the Army, naval service, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who have been sentenced by court-martial to be confined in prison or to be dishonorably discharged from the service; or to any other persons of the services above enumerated whose services were not honorable: Provided further, That the payment of the one year's additional pay authorized herein shall be paid to all officers and men of the Army, naval service, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard whose base pay does not exceed $2,400 per annum, who are not members of the permanent organizations at the time of their discharge from the service or relief from active duty; and all officers, enlisted men, and others in the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, whose base pay does not exceed $2,400 per annum, who are on the active or retired list, shall be entitled to credit for the additional pay herein provided immediately upon the passage of this act; and all persons entitled to the benefits of this act whose active service was terminated prior to its enactment shall be paid the additional pay immediately upon the passage of this act.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Baird	Hardwick	New	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smoot.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Page	Sterling
Colt	King	Penrose	Sutherland
Culberson	Kirby	Pittman	Swanson
Cummins	Knox	Poindexter	Thomas
Curtis	Lewis	Pollock	Thompson
Fernald	Lodge	Pomerene	Trammell
Fletcher	McCumber	Ransdell	Underwood
France	McKellar	Reed	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Robinson	Walsh
Gay	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Warren
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Weeks
Gronna	Moses	Simmons	Wolcott
Hale	Myers	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a matter which seems to be of some importance. I shall take but a moment.

When the time of the Senate is not so engrossed as it is at present I shall ask the attention of the Senate to some discussion of the inevitable relationship between a league of nations and our Monroe doctrine. At this time I merely want to read a single sentence or two from the columns of the Yorkshire Post, published at Leeds, England, February 1, 1919.

Those of us who hope that some league of nations at the peace conference may be arranged that shall lessen the chances of future wars, and who believe that such a league is entirely feasible without any serious disregard of our traditional attitude as a Nation toward the questions which are purely American and without material derogation of our national sovereignty, are particularly concerned that there should be no uncertainty or misunderstanding about the actual supremacy of the United States concerning questions which are essentally American. I do not say that the extract which I now read correctly represents the position of the President. I hope it is entirely mistaken. However, it certainly is direct testimony tending to show how the people of England are looking at our Monroe doctrine as it appears to them through the glass of the proposed league of nations. Here is the extract:

There is a side of the present situation which has not attracted the attention it deserves. Possibly it was not intended that it should attract attention. It is not yet known to what extent the Republican Party of the United States are in agreement with Mr. Wilson in an important matter. Mr. Wilson has definitely abandoned the Monroe doctrine, and it is generally believed here that he will find on his return to the United States an organized body of Republican opposition which will make his persistence in this policy extremely difficult. It is even expected that the Democrats also will betray a considerable discontent. Yet it is admitted that unless the Monroe doctrine is definitely abandoned by the United States the formation of a league of nations is impossible. It would be ridiculous to attempt it.

One thing, Mr. President, ought to be clearly recognized, and that is the necessity, not by mere inference or by interlineary interpretation but by a declaration—clear, positive, and unmistakable—in the draft of any constitution of the league of nations to which the United States is a party, that nothing therein implies any relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions, nor does anything in the constitution of the league of nations in any sense limit the power conferred by the Constitution of the United States upon the Congress. If the people of England feel in any sense as is indicated by the article which I have just read, nothing can better lay the foundation of good faith in our dealing with them than some clear, positive, ringing declaration about the traditional and constitutional principles that are dear to us, and in the preservation of which, I venture to say, the Members of this body on both sides stand together.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from what paper he was quoting?

Mr. SPENCER. Let me give the name of the paper and the date, though I thought I had done so. The quotation is from the Yorkshire Post of February 1, 1919, published at Leeds, England.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MYERS. I thought the Senator had concluded. I was going to ask for a vote upon my motion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and others rose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Who is recognized?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] was on the floor. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] rose first, and then the Senator from Oregon. The Chair will ask the Senator from Missouri whether he yields to either?

Mr. SPENCER. I had concluded, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is unimportant to me whether I am recognized now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

DEFERRED APPROPRIATION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 11 o'clock this evening the Senate shall vote on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to see if the Agricultural appropriation bill will fare better or whether time is material. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for a vote upon the Agricultural appropriation bill at 10 o'clock this evening.

Mr. PENROSE. I object. There has not been sufficient opportunity to give this important measure due consideration.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, possibly the naval appropriation bill will be recognized as of paramount importance at the present time. I therefore ask unanimous consent that at 12 o'clock to-night we vote upon the naval appropriation bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. PENROSE. I know the Senator from Virginia does not make the request seriously. There is about a month's debate on the naval bill. It contains in its present form several very vicious features which I know the Senator from Virginia does not expect to be passed upon before the 4th of March.

Mr. SWANSON. I had hoped it would be, though from what has proceeded here during the last three weeks I did not have much expectation.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then that is out of the way now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that at 11 o'clock to-night we proceed to vote upon the House joint resolution repealing the semiluxury taxes in the revenue law.

Mr. CURTIS. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is out of the way now.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if Senators had displayed this same zeal earlier in the session, all these bills might have been passed. It is true that inability to dispatch public business earlier in the term has reduced the session to this lamentable situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am unwilling to yield the floor——

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. On the notice that has been given here, I yield to the Senator to ask a question, but not for any other purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. I will ask a question. Would it be more pleasing——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am surprised at this tumultuous energy on the part of our Democratic friends to get these measures passed just now.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me to say that if they had displayed the same energy earlier in the session all these bills might have been passed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. PENROSE. The utter inability to dispatch business promptly exists now that existed then. It is a lamentable situation.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If I may yield to the Senator to ask a question, I will do so, but I could not yield for any other purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. I will ask a question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it is the disposition to cut off debate here, so that Senators can not with safety yield to a colleague, we ought to know it. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado for a question or statement so far as I can do so without losing the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. So far as I know I have never taken or attempted to take any such advantage, and I hope I never will.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator has not done that.

Mr. THOMAS. I was merely going to suggest, in view of the stand the other side takes regarding our apparent haste and anxiety now to take up something, that perhaps it will suit them better if I should move that we vote upon the league of nations at 11 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Oregon asked unanimous consent to vote on the Army bill at 11 o'clock to-night, but the Army bill is not before the Senate and has not been before the Senate and has not had any consideration whatever. It is simply on the calendar. The Senator from Oklahoma asked for a vote upon the Agricultural bill at 10 o'clock. That bill is not before the Senate. It has not been before the Senate and has not had a bit of consideration by the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. A great many important amendments are proposed by the committee that have had no consideration whatever by the Senate, and no Senator knows what they are except possibly those who are members of the committee and others who may be personally interested in some particular amendment. Yet the Senator asked that the Senate agree to vote on that bill at 10 o'clock to-night. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. GORE. I was not certain whether the Senator meant to imply at first that the Agricultural appropriation bill was not on the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. GORE. I judge from his later remarks he did not mean to convey that implication.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the bill is on the calendar.

Mr. GORE. I will ask the Senator if he does not think if the speeches had been made at an earlier stage of the session, it might have been possible to secure consideration for those bills?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The speeches could not have been made very much earlier, because we did not have this compact that has been discussed until a short time ago. The President has not been here very long. The compact had not been presented, and the President asked that it be not discussed, and out of deference to that request I have no doubt many Senators withheld their speeches until after the date set by him. So that has caused delay in the presentation of those figures.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Washington, in all sincerity, that the request I made was made in perfect good faith, and for this reason: There is no legislation that fixes the status of the National Guard, and there are 30 States whose legislatures are now holding sessions; and unless something is done the status of the National Guard will not be understood.

Further than that, there is no legislation that establishes the size of the Army. The Army appropriation bill fixes that; and unless there is some legislation that will be undetermined.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the Senator from Oregon. It is really a shame that that legislation can not be enacted. It ought to be enacted, and it ought to have been considered before this time at this session. If it does not get through at this session, it ought to be considered immediately afterwards. If there were nothing else to justify the calling of an extra session of this Congress, it would be the status which will exist in reference to the Army. If such legislation is not passed, we ought to be called back here immediately to consider the Army appropriation bill to which the Senator has referred. There are other facts that ought to be brought out with reference to the result that will follow if this legislation is not enacted at the present session.

Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] hastily, enthusiastically, and energetically asked us to pass the naval bill at 12 o'clock to-night. That bill is not before the Senate; it has not been before the Senate. It is on the calendar, having been reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It carries several billion dollars and has propositions in it of tremendous importance; and yet the Senator asks us to set the time to vote upon it at 12 o'clock to-night by unanimous consent.

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Washington permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The three bills that have been brought up involve the expenditure of nearly $3,000,000,000 and the taxation of the people of the United States to that extent.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Washington a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Florida first rose, and I yield to him.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think we could have made considerable headway if we had spent the three and a half hours this morning in discussing matters that are before the Senate, rather than matter that are not before the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not criticizing the Senators who have been taking time to-day. I think they have done splendid work; I think they have discussed their subjects well; they have given us much information, and have given the country much information upon a question that the country is very much interested in.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply want to show that delay in reporting and passing these bills is not unusual at a short session.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, I understand.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in 1911——

Mr. BORAH. May I make a suggestion before the Senator from Virginia proceeds?

Mr. SWANSON. In 1911 the naval bill was reported on March 1 and passed on March 3. This bill was reported five or six days earlier than that. In 1913 it was reported on the 28th day of February and passed on the 28th.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator a question. I ask how much money has been appropriated for the Navy in the last 50 years?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not the amount.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not anything like the amount appropriated in this bill, is it?

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; I venture to say it is not.

Mr. SWANSON. The naval bill has been greatly reduced over the expenditure of last year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I doubt that very much, with the big program, but, Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the present situation.

Anyway, the Senator refers to 1911, to bills that were passed. They were enacted when other bills were not in the way to prevent action upon them. There was not the jam and congestion that we now have, caused by what I may take time later to discuss a little more fully.

I did not intend to speak about these things, and would not have done so at this time, had not these Senators gotten such a movement upon them to ask for the expediting of the public business.

However, I did rise to say a word or two on the motion that is pending before the Senate. The motion, as I understand it, is the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to take up the bill (S. 5652) providing for cooperation between the United States and State governments in the rural settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to promote the reclamation of lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, we have had millions of acres of land in this country that have been idle for many years, which probably, unless some governmental action of some kind is taken, will continue to lie idle for many years more. I hope that some legislation may be passed, if necessary, on the part of Congress to inaugurate this work, to carry it on to completion, so that these lands may be reclaimed and homes may be built thereon. I myself introduced a bill a couple of years ago that I believe would, if passed, have aided and encouraged very materially the reclamation of swamp and arid lands. That bill proposed to place the Government behind the bonds of the districts that might be formed, to raise revenue by taxation in order to encourage private capital to go into these great enterprises. I believe, if that bill had been passed, we should have had development going on with reference to these lands.

That bill, however, did not seem to be satisfactory to the department, and the department prepared a bill, which was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. It was referred, and it was reported to the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1918, over a year ago, with a unanimous report from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with certain amendments. That bill has come up from time to time on the calendar and has been objected to and gone over. There has not seemed to be any very serious effort to get it passed. Even when the need for reclaimed land for our soldiers became apparent there was no special activity to get action upon it.

We have seen now for several weeks glowing accounts of the proposal of the Secretary of the Interior to make lands available for our soldiers and sailors. I think that he wrote one of the most inspiring articles with reference to this work that I have ever read. I believe that we are going to have to do something along the lines that he has suggested in the way of aiding people, not only in the way of reclaiming land but in the way of aiding people in establishing homes on those lands and maintaining themselves for a few years until they get a start. Other countries are doing this. Canada is doing it; Australia is doing it to a wonderful extent, and is accomplishing great things. We shall probably have to do it. So the Secretary, instead of taking these propositions that we already had on the calendar, has suggested a new proposition. A great deal of publicity, a great deal of notice, a great deal of notoriety, have been given to this plan, and many questions have been asked about it. I am getting numerous letters with reference to it. Some of the soldiers seem to think that it is almost on the way to completion, and they are seeking knowledge and information as to where they can get a farm, where they can get lands upon which they can settle.

Here we have a motion to take up this bill to-day, the day before the close of the session. How long has it been pending? How earnestly has it been pressed in the United States Senate? Why, Mr. President, this great measure of transcendent importance was not introduced in the Senate until February 22, just a little over a week ago, and it was not reported from the committee until when? Until February 27, just two or three days ago. It appropriates $100,000,000 outright and proposes to place it in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior to carry on this work, and it is admitted by all those who urge it and those who realize its importance that it will ultimately cost a billion or two billion or possibly three or four billion dollars——

Mr. PENROSE. Four billion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. To carry it out to completion. Yet we are asked in the closing hours of this session to take up this measure and try to pass it without discussion, without consideration, because there can not be discussion upon it and there can not be consideration given to it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to call attention to page 4 of the report, from which the Senator will see that it contemplates the expenditure of $4,000,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to examine carefully the provisions of the bill. They may be all right; they may be such as will amply safeguard the expenditure of the public money; they may be sufficient to direct the activities of the bureaus of the Department of the Interior in the proper way to carry out this great and desirable and laudable object and purpose; yet it seems to me there has not been the activity and the energy displayed in pushing this bill that its importance deserves.

I have no doubt as to the good faith of my friend from Montana. I am sure that he is earnestly in favor of this measure, for he knows what it means; he knows what is necessary to get the arid lands of the West reclaimed; he knows what it means to a man to go out on those lands and try to build a home; he knows that very few men can do it without help, without aid, and assistance; and that that aid and assistance can best come from the Government.

He knows also, I am satisfied—or, at any rate, he feels entirely confident—that this money will ultimately come back to the Treasury; that it will be repaid to the Government by those who are aided and assisted in the matter. I feel so, too. I should like this measure, or something like it, passed if it is properly safeguarded; but, as I have said, I have not had time to examine its terms. I am simply expressing my views with reference to the general purpose, the general object that it is hoped to accomplish by legislation of this kind; but I do not think the suggestion ought to go to the country that when this measure was brought up or a motion was made to take it up the Senate rejected it. The Senate will not reject it upon its merits; it will not reject it because it has had it under consideration, but if this motion is defeated it will be simply because the Senate feels that it is impossible at this late day of the session to give this measure the consideration that it ought to have; that the business before the Senate is considered of more pressing, immediate, and urgent importance for action than the measure brought forward now by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Washington comes from a section of the country where irrigation is necessary in many places, and I wish to ask him this question: Does the Senator believe that we ought to treat the soldiers like we treated the Indians in the early days, setting aside certain areas for them to live upon? And may I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under the bill referred to we would not treat them as well as we treated the Indians, because he knows that the irrigation of some of these lands will cost from fifty to a hundred dollars an acre, and the soldiers would have to repay that amount to the Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will frankly state that I do not see any special benefit to come to the soldiers and sailors from this legislation. It will take years to get the projects moving, under this legislation, to a sufficient extent to do anybody any good.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington allow me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Soldiers would be gray-headed men before they could get an acre of it, would they not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hardly would say that; but, at least, it will take a long time, judging from the time it has taken the public authorities to get similar projects in motion heretofore.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. In order to make this scheme a success, will it not be necessary to support the soldiers on these lands for at least two years, to furnish them seed, tools, machinery, and everything else; and does the bill provide for furnishing them food and other supplies?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I have said, I have not had time to examine the terms of the bill, but the Senator from Minnesota is just about right with reference to the necessities of the people who will go on these lands. When I said that I thought something of this kind ought to be done, I was referring to that as a general policy, looking to the future development of the country. From my knowledge and my experience in connection with the reclamation of arid lands, I feel that it would be years before there would be any land actually available for settlement by homesteaders or soldiers under this proposed legislation. Why, Mr. President, it takes time to get desert land in shape for farming; it takes time to get logged-off lands in shape for cultivation; it takes time to get swamp lands reclaimed. You have got to go through all the process of getting the districts formed, and all that sort of thing; you have got to get your plans; you have got to get your estimates; you have got to make surveys, and everything of that kind; so that when I say I am in favor of something along this line it is as a general permanent policy, and not that it will bring any special benefit to the soldiers and sailors of the country.

We can get relief and help for them sooner by appropriating about $50,000,000 to carry on reclamation projects that have actually been begun but have had to stop during this war; on projects for which plans and estimates are already completed but the work upon which is being withheld because no money is available. There would be some relief if we would follow a course like that. We could furnish employment to men who want to go into that sort of work, and we could put them to work immediately.

In Yakima County, Wash., in connection with a great irrigation project, a reservoir was being constructed; the buildings for the housing of 500 or 600 or a thousand men were constructed; men were actually at work in building this reservoir; but they had to stop; all those houses are now vacant, and the work is not going on.

It could be started to-morrow if there were money available to do it, and it ought to be done. No plans would have to be prepared; no estimates would have to be worked out; no expense would have to be incurred to start this work. The Government houses are idle; the Government work is deteriorating; its machinery is deteriorating. That is not the only irrigation project that is in the same condition. So, Mr. President, if we want to help the soldiers to employment, if we want to make additional lands available so that they will get some benefit out of the lands, let us appropriate money for work that should be actually under way and that could be put under way next week if we would make the money available.

The principle of this proposed legislation as a permanent policy for the future development and growth of this country is a good thing; it is a great scheme; its possibilities, when they are thought over, awaken the imagination and create dreams of wonderful growth and development in various sections of the country. These dreams could even be surpassed in the years to come in the actual development that would take place; but, Mr. President, this bill is called up on the next to the last day of the session, having been introduced in the Senate only a week ago and reported to the Senate only on the 27th day of February. The country will understand that, even if this motion is voted down, it is not in condemnation of the proposition of the Senator from Montana, but merely because of the condition of the calendar and because of the delay that has taken place in the presentation of the measure to the Senate for consideration, for which delay the Senate is not to blame. The Senator from Montana no doubt introduced it just as soon as it was submitted to him. The committee acted with wonderful promptness upon a proposition of that kind. They only had it under consideration for a week and then reported it to the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have listened to the Senator's speech, and it shows a good deal of comment favorable and a good deal of comment unfavorable. I want to ask the Senator whether, if this vote is taken now, he will vote in favor of the measure?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am prompted to make a few observations at this time by reason of the request made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a simple announcement—just a second?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I do not lose the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think the Senator will lose the floor. Mr. President, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I object.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to it.

Mr. MYERS. I have a right to withdraw the motion.

Mr. PENROSE. I want an opportunity to point out the absolute absurdity of this proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I must insist upon holding the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I care nothing for the so-called absurdity. It is not as absurd, in any event, as the Senator from Pennsylvania makes himself; and I withdraw my motion.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. MYERS. I do not have to ask anybody's permission to withdraw it. I have that right.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRANCE. I wish to call attention to the recent remark of the Senator from Montana, and ask if that is in order.

Mr. MYERS. I will enlighten the Senator. I think it is. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, we will see what a Senator may say about another, according to the rules:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words, impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

The Chair does not know whether this comes within the rule or not. The Chair does not believe the Senator from Pennsylvania cares.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not care, Mr. President. It is a matter of utter indifference to me. Let the RECORD be ornamented for all time by the emanations of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I have withdrawn my motion, Mr. President. What I have said will ornament the RECORD a great deal more than the Senator from Pennsylvania ornaments it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is enough.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has withdrawn his motion, as he had a right to do; so the unfinished business, the general deficiency bill, is before the Senate, and the Senator from New York has the floor.

NEEDS OF THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr President, a few moments ago the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] asked unanimous consent that the military appropriation bill be voted upon at 11 o'clock to-night. It is a request which failed of obtaining unanimous consent. The incident prompts me to make a few observations on the situation connected with the military appropriation bill.

Even were the Senate to pass the military appropriation bill to-night at 11 o'clock, there is scarcely a chance on earth that it could pass the other House in the form that it would pass the Senate, if the Senate follows the suggestions of the Committee on Military Affairs. So I think no one should be confused or disturbed about any action which the Senate may take or any Senator may take upon this occasion being responsible for the failure of this bill to become a law at this session.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs has seen fit to add a large number of amendments to this bill, some of which, in fact, many of which, must inevitably give rise to extensive debate, not only in this Chamber, but in the House of Representatives. Many of those amendments are on topics and are of a nature which have already been rejected once by the House of Representatives; and anyone who supposes that this measure could pass both Houses of Congress before March 4 at 12 o'clock, is very much mistaken.

It is physically impossible for the Congress in the remaining hours to pass this measure, and the only way in which it can become law in time to carry out the purposes sought for between its two covers, is in an extra session of Congress called at the earliest possible moment; and I am going to call the attention of the Senate to two or three features of this measure, two or three matters relating to the Army of the United States, which to my mind are exceedingly important and should be settled without any delay whatsoever, if such a thing is possible.

Senators will remember that the national defense act of June 3, 1916, provides for this year an Army of 175,000 men.

The law as it is to-day will result in the Regular Army being reduced to 175,000. When this present emergency is over, and it is so declared by a proclamation of the President, the men who have been drafted into the military service must be discharged, all of them, within four months thereafter, under the terms of the selective-draft law. I assume that the proclamation of the President declaring the emergency terminated will be coincident with the signing of the terms of peace with Germany. No one can tell when that declaration will be issued. But, in any event, when it is issued the entire military forces of the United States will be reduced to 175,000.

We are confronted with this situation: This great Republic of ours will be unable to carry out even small obligations which will be imposed upon us in the terms of peace. For with a total Army of 175,000 men, a great portion of which will be necessary for the garrisoning of the Philippines and Hawaii and Panama, and another great portion of which will be needed to man our seacoast defenses to even take reasonable care of the armament of those defenses, and another great portion of which will be needed to take care of the military property in the Army posts and cantonments which will then still be standing in the United States, we will be stripped of all power to carry out our obligations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator knows that the bill that is before the Senate now is the general deficiency bill. If that is passed in the next hour or two hours, every Member upon this side of the Chamber will then be willing to take up the Army bill, and for that reason it seems to me that the Senator ought to aid and assist in the passage of the general deficiency bill. Surely the Senator has no objection to that bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not be diverted from my purpose by the interruption of the Senator from Colorado. I am going to point out to the Senate a condition which I regard as serious, and I am going to put the blame where it belongs.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will simply either cease or consent to the general deficiency bill going through, he can within an hour get his Army bill up by the consent of every Member on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am entirely willing that the general deficiency bill shall go through, and I assume it will go through; and, furthermore, the Senator will not cease.

Now, Mr. President, the program of the War Department, as laid out in this bill reported from the Military Affairs Committee, provides for recruiting a Regular Army to an aggregate number of 509,000 men and 28,000 officers. It is calculated that that number can be recruited under a volunteering system in time to enable this Government to undertake whatever responsibilities may fall upon it later in this year. If that is not done, and done very, very soon under authority of Congress, then that number of drafted men will have to be kept in the Army of the United States, and the bulk of them will have to be kept in France.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator, he is in favor of and has agreed to the bill that is reported out by the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, why not let us pass it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator could not have been in the Chamber a moment ago when I said it was physically impossible to pass this bill before final adjournment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. I decline to be interrupted except for a question. If the President of the United States would call an extra session of Congress shortly after we adjourn to-morrow, as he should do, this bill could be passed, and passed within a reasonably short period. It is impossible to pass it between now and to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator to yield again?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question if I am not deprived of the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator this question, and then I will not interrupt him again: Does not the Senator think that if he and other Senators on that side of the Chamber would quit filibustering and let us pass this bill in the usual way at the short session, we would get along very much better?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am not going to take up very much of the time of the Senate, nor am I disturbed by the insinuation made by the Senator from Tennessee. This is a matter of grave importance to the country. I am begging that an extra session of Congress be called, and as a Member of this body I have a right to make that request and to urge that action upon the President of the United States.

The plans of the War Department include, if this bill should pass, the bringing home from France by July 1 of 915,000 men. We now have in France approximately 1,500,000 men. The War Department desires to open up to volunteer recruiting the Regular Army to a total aggregate strength of 500,000, composed of men who are willing either to stay in France or to go there and take the places of the men who desire to retire from the service and return to their homes and their former occupations.

This bill can not pass in this session. It should be taken up in an extra session, immediately upon the adjournment of this Congress, in justice to these men who desire to be brought home, and to whom the Government owes a moral obligation to bring them home. But the Government can not bring them home if it has no force with which to replace them.

Now, that is the situation. We are told that there will be no extra session before June 1. Three months will go by, approximately—March, April, and May. With the failure of the Congress in this session, or the next Congress in an extra session called immediately upon the adjournment of this Congress, to grant any relief during those three months, it will be impossible for the War Department to recruit by volunteering an Army to take the places of the men who want to return; and I contend that it is the duty of the President, in view of this situation, to call an extra session of Congress.

We can not, as a nation, afford to be stripped of our military defense; and so, therefore, the War Department must hold these men in service. They can not be reduced in number below a certain figure in France for some time to come. We can not abandon garrisoning the Philippines, or Hawaii, or the Panama Canal; nor can we abandon the care which should be taken of our seacoast fortifications and our military property here in the United States; and yet, without this measure passed in an extra session of the Congress called very soon, there is no authority lodged in the law under which the War Department can recruit an army to exceed 175,000 men; and that is absolutely inadequate, and is admitted to be inadequate by the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War. We are face to face with that situation. The Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War have told the Military Affairs Committee exactly what the situation is. I want the Senate to know it; I want the public to know it; and I want the Senate and the public to know where the responsibility will lie if three months go by, and probably four months, before we can get a bill through the session of the new Congress called some time around June 1, or thereafter.

It is a serious situation, Mr. President; and it should be thoroughly understood that the one item alone to which I have referred is ample justification for an extra session of Congress. There are other things that must be taken care of, and taken care of at the earliest possible moment, or we are in even greater difficulty.

Senators must all remember that under the bill which enacted the so-called selective draft law, the National Guard of the United States was drafted into the service. The Judge Advocate General of the Army has ruled that by that act all the enlisted men of the National Guard have been separated completely and entirely from their National Guard organizations as they existed prior to the time that we went into the war. In other words, we have no National Guard in the United States to-day worthy of the name.

Mr. President, thousands of these former National Guardsmen, after being drafted in the Army of the United States, went to France, became an exceedingly important part of the American Expeditionary Force, fought with great valor and with great success, with every evidence of discipline and efficiency, and are now about to return to the United States, trained veteran soldiers of tremendous potential value to their country in the event of any trouble overtaking us at home or abroad. The War Department wants to encourage these veterans, some of whom are on the water now, to reenlist in the National Guard, to go back into that service and thereby render themselves available to meet any emergency which may arise. A provision has been drafted and inserted in this bill to make that possible, to encourage these men to come in, rating them and their officers as veterans, urging them to renew their terms of enlistment in the National Guard. If that is not done within the next three or four months, we are going to lose thousands and thousands of our best soldiers. If it is done promptly, we have every reason to believe that many of these famous units will continue in existence in the several States under Federal control and subject to the call of the Federal Government.

There is another matter that ought to be decided, and it ought to be decided in an extra session of the Congress, just as soon as the new Congress can be gotten together, and the responsibility lies upon the President of the United States. Senators have heard a good deal during the last year about the grave delay in the payment of soldiers. Many, many months have gone by in thousands of cases where soldiers in the Army have been compelled to go without their pay owing to the intricacies and complications of so-called Army paper work. We would like to get that straightened out.

We do not want to wait four months and have this condition of affairs continue during all that period. The War Department has a remedy and has proposed it to the Military Committee, and it is in this bill. Must these men of ours wait four months more before this system can be corrected? Must this intolerable situation continue indefinitely? Is it not important for the contentment of these thousands and thousands of men, is it not important for the success of the future military policy of the United States, that these things be corrected, that we may get an Army by volunteering, if necessary, at the earliest possible time, that we may reestablish the National Guard and see that the men are paid?

I have felt very deeply on this question since the bill first came over from the House. The House sent a bill over to us which, in many respects, was exceedingly difficult to deal with, and instantly upon the call of the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee a subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee endeavored to put the bill in shape. It was a terrific task. I have never been confronted with a such a difficult one, and I think my colleagues on that committee will say the same thing. We knew at the time we received it that so great were the questions involved in the amendments which were proposed, and so important were they and so open to contention that it would be almost impossible to pass it through the Senate and get the consent of the House to these more important matters before 12 o'clock on March 4. I am not entitled to speak for the majority of the committee, but many of us believe that this bill alone represents ample justification for the calling of an extra session, so that the matters to which I have referred, and many others can be taken up and straightened out at the earliest possible moment.

But instead of that, Senators, we are given to understand that the new Congress will not be called in session until June 1 or thereabouts, and for the months of March, April, and May the President is to be in Paris and there is to be no Congress at Washington.

It is an unusual situation, Mr. President. I find it difficult for me to describe my feelings as I confront the possibilities of the next three months with the Chief Executive in Paris and no Congress at Washington; for this is not the only matter that may come up of great importance to the country. We can not tell what may happen during the next three months which will make it absolutely essential for some remedial legislation to be passed or quick action taken by the Congress; and yet there seems to be no hope that there shall be enough left of the Government of the United States to take care of an emergency. The country must drift for three months.

One may only speak one's opinions upon the floor of the Senate and express one's apprehensions, and that is all I am endeavoring to do. I wanted the Senate to know how I feel about it, and I wanted the country to know some of the questions that confront it in the maintenance of an adequate armed force to carry out the obligations of the United States.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the general deficiency bill has theoretically been before the Senate since 10 o'clock this morning, although not one single word has been addressed to any subject mentioned in it, and I think I may safely say not a particle of thought or consideration has been given to it. I feel it to be my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill is now in jeopardy. Unless there is cooperation with a view to its early passage, it will fail, and when it fails $842,000,000, which is needed now, will be denied those to whom it is due.

Frequent allusion has been made to the appropriations. General appropriation bills carry money which will not be needed and can not be used until the 1st day of July. Nearly every dollar of this $842,000,000 is needed right now and will be paid out by the Government in the next 30 or 60 days to meet obligations which rest upon the Government, and which it in honor should meet.

I feel it to be my duty to call the attention of Senators to this situation. This is a deficiency bill. It is to provide moneys that are now needed, with very few and small exceptions. It will take about two hours for the clerks to get this bill ready for the conference after the Senate finally passes it. All we are to do must be done before 12 o'clock to-morrow. This bill is in danger, it is in imminent danger, of defeat. If Senators want to deny this money, of course it is in their power to do it, but I appeal to Senators not to deny moneys that are absolutely necessary to meet present obligations of the Government, obligations the denial of which, in my judgment, will bring on a financial panic if not paid.

I say, if money is not supplied to meet these demands of the Government, I believe it will bring on a financial panic. I feel it my duty to call these matters to the attention of the Senate and to appeal to Senators to cooperate with each other and with me in passing this very vital and important and necessary legislation to meet the demands on the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, having explained the matter briefly, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with; that the bill be read for amendment; and that the committee amendments may first be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FRANCE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suppose it will not do any good, but still I appeal to the Senator not to embarrass the country and not to bring a panic upon the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me for just a moment? I understand the Senator from Virginia is only asking that formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. The bill itself will be read at the time the amendments are taken up. The Senator from Maryland does not want to have the bill read through twice? He simply wants to have the bill read once, I understand.

Mr. FRANCE. I wish to have the whole bill read.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be read when we are acting upon the amendments of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not want the bill read twice, and unless the Senator from Maryland means to filibuster against this bill and defeat it, I can conceive of no reason why we should sit here and hear it read twice.

Mr. FRANCE. I do not object if the whole bill is read and carefully considered, with all the amendments thereto.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask the Senator if this bill should fail, and its failure would probably bring on a panic, would not the President immediately call Congress into special session for the purpose of taking care of these obligations?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not authorized to speak for the President. I can only say he told me in two conversations, in the plainest possible English, that he had made up his mind, and it was final, that no extra session of Congress will be called under any circumstances until his return from France.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield further, does he think the President of the United States would be willing to bring a panic upon the country rather than change his mind and save it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The President would not be bringing the panic; but these Senators who sit here and filibuster against these appropriation bills and fail and refuse to support the Government of the United States are the men who will bring on the panic.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire to renew the objection made by the Senator from Maryland and to have the bill read with due formality and according to orderly procedure.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly the Senator from Pennsylvania does not want to have it read twice?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Very well; the Senator has it in his power to filibuster against the bill by insisting upon that course if he sees fit.

Mr. PENROSE. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Eight hundred and forty-two million dollars.

Mr. PENROSE. That is a considerable sum of money, and the bill ought to be considered deliberately. There has been too much——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator can not understand it when it is read once, he will be unable, in my judgment, to understand it when it is read twice.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think so. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee—because it may influence my views—whether he intends to offer as an amendment to the bill the proposition to appropriate $5,000,000 for the further expenses of the Paris trip?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows before he asks that question exactly what my position is. I am opposed to putting that amendment on this bill. I not only will not offer it as an amendment, but I am opposed to delaying and hindering the measure by bringing up any such proposition.

Mr. PENROSE. I am astonished, Mr. President. Has not the President of the United States made a special request to have this appropriation made?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. He has not communicated with me in any way with respect to it.

Mr. PENROSE. The newspapers say he has communicated with the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the newspapers so stated, they stated what was false. I have not received any communication from the President with respect to it. It has been sent as an estimate to Congress, but I have had no communication from the President in regard to it.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator knows that such a communication was transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That may be. I am speaking for myself and in respect of my own duties, and not in reference to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. PENROSE. If I should offer the amendment to the bill, will the Senator accept it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. An amendment to appropriate $5,000,000 for that purpose?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will not accept it. I am opposed to its going on this bill. As the Senator knows, he is as much opposed to it as I am, and he has no idea of offering the amendment. Such ad captandum suggestions to me are absolutely futile.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator seems pretty firm against it. I should like to read the President's communication.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will forego anything like a filibuster against this bill. He knows the vital importance of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly a little moderate debate——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to take a hand. There must be objection, or there is none.

Mr. PENROSE. I have made my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well; the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill. That is the thing in order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing in order except the reading of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to present a conference report——

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. MYERS. I do not care for the Senator's objection. I have a right to make a conference report, if the Chair will recognize me. Am I recognized?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly, for that purpose.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to present a report of the conferees on Senate bill 3797, and I ask that the conference report be read. It is very short.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad we are permitted to hear the report, and not have to pass upon it without reading.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. MYERS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 19, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the issuance of patent shall not release the Milwaukee Lumber Co. from its obligations to pay the value of the timber cut from this land, with a reservation in the Government of the United States of an easement across said land for roadway or other purposes which the interests of the United States may require."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow George E. Windecker to make homestead application for the east half, section 21, township 34 north, range 14 east, Montana meridian, in the State of Montana, subject to reconveyance of the said land to the United States by said George E. Windecker."

And the House agree to the same.

H. L. MYERS,
JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
WILLIAM L. LA FOLLETTE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, and 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$780,000: Provided, That the pay of cadets for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall be fixed at $780 per annum and one ration per day or commutation therefor at the rate of 68 cents per ration, to be paid from the appropriation for the subsistence of the Army"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"For cadet hospital and nurses' quarters, $390,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 16, 18, 19, 20, 22, 25, 26, and 30.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 15, 17, 23, 27, 28, and 29, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "including such loss on bills of exchange to officers of the United States Court for China"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Not exceeding $50,000 of the"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC AND PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

"The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for the payment of compensation to and the necessary expenses of the representative or representatives of the United States on the International Commission of Jurists, organized under the convention signed at the Third International American Conference August 23, 1906, approved by the Senate February 3, 1908, and ratified by the President February 8, 1908, for the purpose of preparing drafts of codes of public and private international law, and for the payment of the quota of the United States of the expenses incident to the preparation of such drafts, including the compensation of experts, under article 4 of the convention, made in the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, is hereby made available for the fiscal year 1920."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. D. FLOOD,
J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, there is an amendment which is stated as agreed to in the conference report which I do not quite understand from the reading of the report. I should like to ask the chairman of the conference on the part of the Senate what amendment was made with respect to the officers of the United States Court in China?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was retained in the bill substantially as it passed the Senate with a slight change of language, the clause being transferred to another place in the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then there is no material change of the language, but merely a slight change of phraseology and a transposition to another place in the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. The provision is practically the same as that adopted by the Senate, but it was transferred to another place in the bill, as it was thought it ought to be.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So that the provision remains practically as it was when agreed upon by the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I have no objection to the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10891) to amend and reenact an act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, still in disagreement between the two Houses, and agrees to the same.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3797. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes;

S. 5554. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14894. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 15706. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to the committee amendment on line 11, page 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to know if the committee amendments are to be considered as the bill is read?

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President; not under the objection of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. PENROSE).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume the formal reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think the bill could be followed in a better and more consecutive way if the amendments were read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The Chair is informed that at the time the request was made that the bill be read it was not to include amendments, but simply the text of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. PENROSE. I made the request, and I simply objected to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill. When I asked for the reading of the bill I certainly had in mind the whole bill and not a garbled part of it. I do not ask the Secretary to go back. He has been skipping a good deal—I do not mean skipping the House bill, but the Senate amendments—but I will ask him, from now on, to read the bill as it is printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read as printed, except the Senate amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like hereafter to have the amendments read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The Secretary will read the amendments.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, including the Senate amendments, and read to line 13, on page 15, the last Senate amendment read being as follows:

EMERGENCY SHIPPING FUND.

For purchasing, requisitioning, or otherwise acquiring plants, material, charters, or ships now constructed or in course of construction, and the expediting of construction of ships thus under construction, authorized by the deficiency appropriation acts approved June 15 and October 6, respectively, 1917, $50,000,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1920.

For recruiting, instructing, and training officers, engineers, and crews for American vessels, and for all expenditures incidental thereto, $3,750,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, having this bill in charge, to explain the necessity for this appropriation. We have given to the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation not millions, not tens of millions, not hundreds of millions of dollars, but billions of dollars. I do not think the record of that organization is of such a character as to commend itself to this body. Speaking for myself, without further information, I am unwilling to appropriate another dollar for that organization or for either of those organizations to expend. Their work has been so grossly extravagant, so inefficient, that it calls for investigation rather than for indorsement and for additional appropriations. If the Senator has any explanation he can offer, I shall be glad to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I am not in charge of the bill. I am merely a member of the committee. The Senator in charge of the bill had to be out for a few moments; but under the rules the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has invoked the first reading of this bill, and nothing is in order now until the Secretary finishes the reading of the bill. When we reach it, if the Senator desires to bring the matter up, no doubt the Senator in charge of the bill will give him the information. I have no doubt he will be here at that time.

Mr. KING. Then I should like to ask the Senator, with his permission, that no vote be taken upon this amendment now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the bill must be read before the amendments can be voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the first reading of the bill, and there will be no vote taken until after that reading is completed.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading to line 18 on page 30.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to obtain the floor for a moment, I am just advised privately and by the announcement officially that the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill has passed the House and is now before the Senate on the Secretary's desk. I wish to say that, although I was not a member of the conference committee, it was a full agreement, signed by the three conferees on the part of the Senate—Messrs. OWEN, JONES of New Mexico, and GRONNA—and signed by the three conferees on the part of the House. There was no disagreement. I should like to ask leave, if the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] will permit, to present the conference report and raise the question of its immediate consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Arizona be good enough to call it up a little later on? I wish to confer with two or three Senators about it.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly; I think that is a very reasonable request.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no objection, but I want to confer with other Senators about it. I have no doubt this bill is no worse than some of the other bills that have been passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to comply with the Senator's suggestion.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, we can not hear the Secretary over here.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think it makes much difference. There are only four or five Senators in the Chamber anyway.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, on that statement, I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Simmons
Baird	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Kendrick	Nugent	Spencer
Calder	Kenyon	Overman	Sterling
Cummins	King	Page	Thomas
Curtis	Knox	Penrose	Trammell
Fernald	La Follette	Pittman	Underwood
Fletcher	Lodge	Poindexter	Vardaman
France	McCumber	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Gay	McKellar	Ransdell	Warren
Gronna	McLean	Robinson	Watson
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Weeks
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Wolcott
Henderson	Moses	Shields

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 6, on page 58.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Is there any objection?

Mr. FRANCE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection, the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now read the bill for amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, several Senators are absent who wanted to be present when the reading of the bill began for amendment, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kellogg	New	Smith, Ariz.
Baird	Kenyon	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	King	Nugent	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Kirby	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Knox	Owen	Smoot
Cummins	La Follette	Page	Spencer
Curtis	Lenroot	Penrose	Swanson
Fletcher	Lewis	Pittman	Thomas
Gay	Lodge	Poindexter	Trammell
Gerry	McCumber	Pollock	Underwood
Gore	McKellar	Ransdell	Vardaman
Gronna	McLean	Robinson	Wadsworth
Harding	Martin, Ky.	Saulsbury	Warren
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Watson
Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Sheppard	Weeks
Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Sherman	Wolcott
Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let us have the amendment read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "District of Columbia," subhead "Streets," on page 8, after line 11, the committee propose to insert:

Bathing beach: For amount required to reimburse the life guards, clerks, laborers, and help at the bathing-beach pool after July 16, 1918, who received during the period of their employment only 50 cents per day, fiscal year 1919, $1,330.46.

Mr. JONES of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Was not the bill now to be read for committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the proper proceeding. The bill is now to be read for amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We do not want to start on page 8 of the bill. The reading should begin on the first page of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is for the Senate to determine. The Chair can not determine that. The Chair can only direct that the usual parliamentary procedure be complied with, that the bill be read for amendment. Does the Senator from Washington insist upon that? He is within his right if he does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary, then, will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I inquire what reading of the bill is this?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the second reading.

Mr. WALSH. The second paragraph of Rule XIV provides that—

The * * * second reading of each bill may be by title only, unless the Senate in any case shall otherwise order.

I inquire of the Chair whether the Senate has otherwise ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator please again read the rule?

Mr. WALSH. The rule provides:

The first or second reading of each bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From what rule is the Senator reading, please?

Mr. WALSH. From Rule XIV, paragraph 2.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What page of the Manual?

Mr. WALSH. On page 18 of the rules. The entire paragraph of the rule reads as follows:

2. Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings previous to its passage, which readings shall be on three different days, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise; and the Presiding Officer shall give notice at each reading whether it be the first, second, or third: Provided, That the first or second reading of each bill may be by title only, unless the Senate in any case shall otherwise order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that the bill should be read by title only on the second reading, unless the Senate otherwise directs. If the Senate has not otherwise directed, the reading of the title completes the reading of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am interested only in the rules. I do not care whether the bill is read or not; but I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the rule provides that "the first or second reading of each bill may be by title only, unless the Senate in any case shall otherwise order." That means, in my opinion, that, unless the Senate otherwise orders—that is, takes affirmative action—the bill, upon objection, must be first read—that is, the formal reading of the bill—and, then, second, for amendment. Of course, it has been the practice of the Senate to do that unless it has been otherwise ordered by the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. This bill was read twice before it was referred to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that this is the first reading since it has been on the calendar and taken from the calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill is read the first and second time and read the third time on its passage. In Committee of the Whole it has been customary to read the bill once, and after it has been read once, it has been open for amendment. I concur with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], that it has been customary to simply read a bill once as in Committee of the Whole; and this bill has been read once.

Mr. WALSH. I invite the attention of the Presiding Officer to subdivision 3 of the same rule, which reads:

No bill or joint resolution shall be committed or amended until it shall have been twice read, after which it may be referred to a committee.

This bill, as I understand, has been referred to the committee and has been reported by the committee; and so, presumably, it has already been twice read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the bill, under the rule, could not have been referred to the committee unless it had been twice read. It may be read twice by title, if the Senate so consents.

Mr. LODGE. This bill has had its first and second readings, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to say that the bill had taken its first and second reading before it went to committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it must be presumed to have had two readings, or it could not have gone to the committee.

Mr. WALSH. My understanding is that the bill has been read once here to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been read in extenso.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is now open to amendment at any point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that unless the Senate by an affirmative majority vote orders otherwise, the further reading of the entire bill will be dispensed with, it having been already read three times. There has been no unanimous consent requiring that committee amendments be first acted on; so that all amendments are in order, whether from the committee or from the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I should think that the usual procedure should be followed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware that there was unanimous consent granted that committee amendments should be first disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that request was coupled with the request that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not occupying the chair at that time, and can only be bound by what the record shows.

Mr. SMOOT. If the record shows that, and, as I remember, that was the request——

Mr. LODGE. The usual request was made that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for committee amendments, committee amendments to be first considered. The bill has been read, and therefore is open to amendment. Of course, the whole request for unanimous consent fell when objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that the bill is open to amendment for committee amendments or otherwise. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read by the Secretary, on page 8, after line 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Courts," on page 11, after line 3, to insert:

Court of Appeals Building, District of Columbia: For fitting up the top story and basement of the Court of Appeals Building of the District of Columbia suitable for occupancy by the office of the recorder of deeds, including expenses of moving said office, and material and labor, and for each and every item incident thereto, to be immediately available, $19,800, said work and the expenditures authorized hereunder to be under the direction and supervision of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 2, to insert:

EMERGENCY SHIPPING FUND.

For purchasing, requisitioning, or otherwise acquiring plants, material, charters, or ships now constructed or in course of construction, and the expediting of construction of ships thus under construction, authorized by the deficiency appropriation acts approved June 15 and October 6, respectively, 1917, $50,000,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. I submit an amendment to the amendment just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 15, at the end of the paragraph, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the purchase of the International Mercantile Marine.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the International Mercantile Marine is a shipping corporation owning a number of vessels that are operated under the English flag. During the past fall and winter I have observed many times in the newspapers that the Shipping Board contemplated the purchase of this line of vessels. I am not willing that this money shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, as I heard the amendment I am perfectly sure that it is not contemplated to use one dollar of this money for the purpose indicated. There is absolutely no possibility of it, and no desire to do it. So the amendment is needless and harmless. I see no objection to its adoption if the Senate wants to adopt it. I do not think it does any harm, because nothing of that sort is contemplated.

Mr. CALDER. If the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment, I will not discuss it at length; but I was going to say that the difficulty with the purchase of this line of ships during the past few months is the fact that we have heard constant rumors from Washington, apparently emanating from the Shipping Board, that this fleet would be purchased. On the day of the signing of the armistice the preferred stock of this corporation was quoted at $90 per share. It has gone from $90 to $124 and back three or four times since that period, depending upon rumors from Washington or statements of members of the Shipping Board that this fleet would or would not be purchased. It seems to me we ought not to purchase it. We are going to have many more ships than we can operate profitably when the fleet now under construction is completed; and I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, that we shall invest any money in a fleet of this character under the circumstances.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator state from what source these rumors came that seem to affect the market value of the stocks of this company? Did they come from the Shipping Board or some other department of the Government?

Mr. CALDER. I know the chairman of the Shipping Board has several times referred to the fact that this fleet was to be purchased. I have in my hand a letter from which I will quote. The writer says:

I will cite an instance. Last month, February 10, the stock quotation of the International Mercantile Marine on the New York Stock Exchange ranged between 92 and 93¾. All at once a rumor was started, which gave Mr. Hurley, chairman of the Shipping Board, as the author of the statement, that our Government intended to purchase the International Mercantile Marine fleet, and promptly the stock moved two or three points up. The following day a similar report appeared in several papers, and these reports are persistent in their continuation, with the result that International Mercantile Marine preferred stock has enjoyed a rise of 10 points in one week, and now stands at 103.

This stock, as I said a moment ago, Mr. President, has gone from 90 to 124 several times, back and forward, since the armistice was signed. I think it is just as well that we write into the law now that no part of this fund shall be used for purchasing this line of vessels.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think that we really ought to do that? If rumors from the Shipping Board have that effect upon the stock, should we not by a statute take away any possible power of the Shipping Board to raise the stock or lower it from day to day?

Mr. CALDER. Does the Senator believe that we should buy the ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I mean prohibit their purchase by the Shipping Board, so that any statement given out by the Shipping Board would have no influence.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator for his statement in the matter and am glad that he agrees with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the amendment, but I hope the chairman of the committee will not accept the amendment, and that it will not be agreed to, not that I have any idea about the purchase of these ships now, although at one time I think it was contemplated, but I have not any notion that it is now contemplated. At the same time, I do not see any use of putting restrictions on the Shipping Board. If it is possible to obtain these ships, or some of these ships, at $90 a ton, whereas now similar ships are costing us nearly $200 a ton, I fail to see why it would not be a good business proposition for the Government to purchase them. I do not know whether that can be done or not; I have not inquired into that; but the price considered at one time was something like $100 a ton for a magnificent fleet of ships. That is about half of what similar ships are costing; and if the Government has the opportunity of acquiring valuable ships such as they need for a particular service at much less than they can be built for to-day, I do not see why the board should not be allowed to acquire them. That is all I am going to say about it. It is utterly immaterial to me one way or the other, but I do not see any use in tying the hands of the Government in a matter of this sort. The mere fact that the stock is speculated in is no argument one way or the other.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there is no intention whatever on the part of the Shipping Board to purchase this fleet, there can be no harm in specifically stating that no part of this appropriation shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator refers to my remarks on the subject, I will state that I did not say that these ships will not be purchased from this appropriation; but I said that there is no intention, as I understand, of using this money for that purpose. It is not half enough for them to make the purchase, even if they wanted to do it. I do not think there is any intention of using this money for this purpose, and I do not think there is any intention now of acquiring that fleet. I know there was some negotiation about it at one time.

Mr. SMOOT. I was unaware that the Senator had made any statement with relation to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes. I thought the Senator was speaking of what I said.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not hear the Senator make the statement. My remarks were called out by the statement made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], in which he said that there was no intention of purchasing this fleet.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not believe there is, but there was some negotiation at one time.

Mr. SMOOT. Then if it is a proper policy to follow, and an expression of the Senate is necessary by adopting this amendment to prevent stock gambling upon this stock, daily and weekly, and to prevent these gamblers making $10 and $20 and sometimes $30 a share upon it, I think an amendment of this sort ought to be adopted.

The Senator speaks of purchasing this fleet at $100 per ton. It is true that shipping has cost during the war from $200 to $225 a ton, but it is also true that before the war shipping did not cost $100 a ton; and with the great amount of tonnage that has been constructed and that is under way now by the Government there will be a day when the cost per ton of shipping will be normal again. If this company is going to offer these boats for $100 a ton, it is simply because its officials are fearful of the future, and they think the first loss will be the best loss; and if they are going to sell them for $100 a ton, you can depend upon it that they are looking to the future and have come to the conclusion that it will not be long before $100 a ton will be more than the boats are worth.

As it has been generally understood, Mr. President, and as the papers of the country are being utilized by stock gamblers who deal in this stock, and as it is not necessary for the Government of the United States to have this line of ships, the safest way, I think, is to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for a statement as to the reason of this appropriation. In view of the fact that we are slowing up on our shipbuilding program, and the further fact that the emergency for the construction of shipping is past, and in view of the further fact that we are not establishing any new shipyards, what is the reason for this extraordinary appropriation?

I only speak as one member of the Committee on Commerce, which has to deal with the shipping problem; and I am frank to say that I never heard of any reason or excuse for this appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will read, for the information of the Senate, a letter received by me from Mr. Hurley, of date the 28th of February. He says:

> Information has come to me that the sundry civil bill may fail of passage at this session, and it has been suggested to us that the deficiencies of the United States Shipping Board and of the Emergency Fleet Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, may have to be cared for under the pending general deficiency bill.
>
> Chairman SHERLEY indicated in his speech of two days ago that this course might prove to be necessary, and I understand that he has informally brought this particular matter to your attention.
>
> Referring to the bill printed as being on Union Calendar No. 399, H. R. 16187, and Report No. 1148, I therefore ask the Appropriations Committee of the Senate to make the following insertion in the pending general deficiencies bill, at page 12, after line 19:

Then follows the language used in this bill, with the exception that the amount asked for was $100,000,000 instead of $50,000,000. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reduced it one-half. We thought we would see if they could not get along with $50,000,000 instead of $100,000,000, so we cut in two the appropriation which they asked and gave them one-half of what they asked.

Then he says:

> For recruiting, instructing, and training officers, engineers, and crews for American vessels, and for all expenditures incidental thereto, $3,750,000.

That is an additional item. That, I think, is all on this subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator if it is the purpose of Mr. Hurley or the board to purchase additional vessels, or to requisition additional ships?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That language was used in previous legislation, and it is adopted here. As I understand, there are no additional purchases contemplated; and this is for an actual deficiency. This is to meet deficiencies that have been incurred by the Shipping Board.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is to be made available for 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that this is a direct appropriation of $50,000,000; and not only is it available for 1919 but it is specifically available for the year 1920.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is intended to meet the obligations that have already been incurred. That is my understanding of it. Mr. Hurley asked for $100,000,000, and the committee cut him down to $50,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think that it is true that it is to carry out contracts or commitments actually made.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Unless this appropriation is made, some of those contracts and some of those commitments will fail.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, then we never ought to have put in the words "to continue available during the fiscal year 1920."

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; because some of the contracts will not be performed until the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. Congress is going to meet twice before the end of that year.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know; but here are contracts made for ships that are not paid for. It takes some time to build a steel ship, and particularly steel ships of such a class. You can not build them in a few months now. Some of these contracts will not be completed until the end of the year 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator's argument holds good, then they ought to have $100,000,000 instead of $50,000,000——

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they ought.

Mr. SMOOT. Because Mr. Hurley asked for $100,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they ought.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the appropriation for the training and recruiting of shipping crews. I think that is a very desirable appropriation.

If it is in order, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out everything contained in lines 4 to 10, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another amendment pending.

Mr. FLETCHER. The question will arise on whether the committee amendment should be adopted. The whole question is presented on the motion to adopt the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator from New York has the right to perfect the amendment before it is voted on. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from New York, and I shall also support the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, we have this situation before us: A deficiency appropriation is asked for, and the chairman has just read a letter upon which the request is based, and not one single detail is given either to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Senate as to what this appropriation is for or the use to which it is to be put. It is only $50,000,000, Mr. President. Of course, that is a very small sum; but it seems to me that now, when the war is over, even for deficiency appropriations, the different departments of the Government, before a request should be granted, should furnish detailed information as to what this money is to be used for.

Under the language of this amendment the Shipping Board is not confined to using this sum for deficiencies at all. Under the language of this amendment, Mr. President, the Shipping Board may go out the next day and purchase ships, purchase plants, purchase materials, and pay for expediting the construction of ships that are now under way, for it will be observed that this amendment has nothing to do with the construction of ships; it is for the purchase of ships, the requisitioning of ships, or otherwise acquiring plants, material, charters, or ships now constructed or in the course of construction, and expediting the construction of ships and those under construction.

Not a dollar of this fund can be used for the construction of ships by the Emergency Fleet Corporation or the Shipping Board. Every dollar of it may be used for the purchase of ships, plants, and materials; and with the need of expedition gone, and with the condition that the Treasury is in at the present time, an appropriation ought not to be made of this character in this way. The committee, at least, ought to have information as to the particular need of the money and the purposes for which it is to be used.

Mr. President, this is only a sample of other amendments, with one exception, that are found in this bill, a bill carrying $842,000,000; and I was interested this afternoon, Mr. President, to ascertain, if I could, what investigations had been given by the Committee on Appropriations to this deficiency bill, to what extent they had gone into the question of the needs of the Government for the money that is appropriated by this bill. I sent for the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. I have them here. They constitute 35 pages, every word of which is upon one single amendment, namely, the $750,000,000 appropriation to the Railroad Administration.

Apparently the Committee on Appropriations made no investigation of any of these other items. No testimony was taken as to this item of $50,000,000; and the $50,000,000 carried in this amendment was granted by the committee solely upon a letter which the chairman has read from the Shipping Board, saying "We need the money."

Mr. President, I sometimes wish that the next liberty loan campaign had been on during this winter. I think if it had possibly Congress would have been a little more careful in making these millions and billions of dollars of appropriations. I know that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee are anxious for economy; but it seems to me that the time has come when Congress ought not to make any appropriation without the fullest information from the different departments of the Government as to the need of the appropriation and the purposes to which it is intended to be put. We ought not any longer to grant appropriations by the hundreds of millions of dollars upon a letter from a department saying, "We want the money."

Mr. President, this amendment can well go out of the bill, and certainly the portion of the amendment that it should be available for the year 1920 ought to go out, because when the Shipping Board made the request for the amendment in that form it showed upon its face that it was not to take care of present deficiencies. It shows upon its face that they desire this money for the purpose of making some new purchases—possibly the International Mercantile Marine; possibly something else—but the Shipping Board ought not to have further authority and we ought not to make further appropriations for making new purchases under the circumstances which we now find the Treasury to be in without full, detailed information. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], a few moments ago said of the International Mercantile Marine that if we could get a good bargain we ought to take it, because we need the ships. The greatest problem that the Committee on Commerce now has before it, and which will later come before the Senate—the committee of which the Senator from Florida is chairman—is, what are we going to do with the ships that we now have? As far as the United States Government is concerned, we do not need any more ships. So far as the condition of the Treasury is concerned, we ought not to buy any more ships. So far as the condition of the Treasury is concerned, we ought not to begin the construction of any new ships except where material to such an extent has already been ordered that it would be cheaper for the Government to go on and finish the construction and sell the ships than it would be to cancel the contracts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Committee on Commerce has formulated any plan for submission to the Senate looking to the disposition to be made of the ships, and a plan for determining whether the Government is to continue the construction and operation of the ships, or whether it is to be remitted to the hands of private parties?

Mr. LENROOT. The Committee on Commerce has not formulated any plan whatever. There have been a number of informal discussions between members of the committee and members of the Shipping Board, but I do not think either the committee or the Shipping Board have any plan unless it has been within the last two or three days, when we were told by the newspapers that Mr. Hurley has a plan. What the plan is we do not know.

But, Mr. President, next to the railroad question the question of our merchant marine is probably the most important before the country so far as any permanent policies are concerned.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that a plan ought to be formulated and adopted by Congress at a very early date determining what course shall be pursued with respect to this important question?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wisconsin does so think, and the Senator from Wisconsin thinks that Congress ought to be called in special session next week for the purpose of beginning the formulation of these very important policies.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think, when the Emergency Fleet Corporation was authorized in the stress of war to engage in the construction of vessels, that now the war is over it ought to continue in the building of new vessels? I do not refer in my question to the completion of vessels now in course of construction.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think that we have a very considerable number of contracts where the keels have not yet been laid, but the material has been ordered and fabricated in very large part, and I believe in that respect the policy of the Shipping Board is, stated not accurately but in a general way, that where the cost to the Government by way of cancellation of a contract would equal or exceed 25 per cent of the contract price, or the estimated cost, the Emergency Fleet Corporation believe it will be cheaper for the Government to go on and complete the ship and sell it at a loss rather than to cancel the contract. Generally speaking, I believe that is a wise policy on the part of the Shipping Board, but of course the Shipping Board ought not to be authorized to enter upon any new construction where the material has not been ordered. It ought not to be given a dollar for buying ships.

Mr. President, if this amendment is defeated it may cause some embarrassment to the Shipping Board, but the Shipping Board ought to have given the Senate Committee on Appropriations detailed information as to the need for this money and the uses to which it is to be put.

Mr. WEEKS and Mr. NELSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield first to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that this amendment belongs in the sundry civil bill. Hearings were given by the House Committee on Appropriations on that bill upon this particular subject, covering some 300 pages. The Senator must remember that this bill was not reported to the House until last Thursday. It did not come over to the Senate until Friday, and it was only on Saturday that the Senate committee had jurisdiction over it. It was impossible at that time to give hearings upon it. I personally took the trouble to talk to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and get his ideas of the necessity for this appropriation, and as a result of the amendment, which I offered myself in the committee at that time, it was cut from $100,000,000 to $50,000,000. But I find in reading the hearings in the House it was estimated there were $65,000,000 due shipowners for requisitioned ships, and that there were $8,000,000 of salvage and perhaps $2,000,000 to be paid to complete payments that were due to finish the construction of wooden ships in the yards. That in itself would make $73,000,000 that must be paid. I have no doubt if Congress were called and this matter were further considered, very accurate detailed information could be obtained. It does seem to me that at least $50,000,000 is due and should be paid as soon as it reasonably can.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, then. If this $50,000,000 is necessary for obligations or indebtedness already incurred, why was not the amendment framed so as not to permit the Shipping Board to use any portion of the $50,000,000 for the purchase of ships?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me upon that suggestion?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment in the urgent deficiency bill now under consideration is in almost the exact language of the existing law approved October 6, 1917. It is the way in which all the appropriations have been made. Under the head of "Emergency shipping fund" in the act to which I have just referred I find this language:

> The cost of purchasing, requisitioning, or otherwise acquiring plants, material, charters, or ships now constructed or in the course of construction, and the expediting of construction of ships thus under construction, authorized by the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, is increased from $250,000,000 to $515,000,000, and there is appropriated for this purpose the sum of $200,000,000.

So the authorization for the appropriation carried in this general deficiency bill is found in the language that I have just read from the act of October 6, 1917.

Mr. LENROOT. I was not making any point at all about the authorization. This might have been made a clear deficiency, and the authorization would have been found in the act which the Senator from Arkansas has now quoted. But under the language of the pending amendment it authorizes the Shipping Board to use any portion of the $50,000,000, not for a deficiency, not to pay for indebtedness already incurred, but to go out in the market and purchase ships. That is what I am complaining of. If there be $50,000,000 of obligations already incurred, I would have no objection if the appropriation were limited to the payment of that indebtedness; but the Shipping Board is not compelled to pay a dollar of this $50,000,000 for the payment of those obligations.

Were it not for the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], with this $50,000,000 the Shipping Board can go out and buy the International Mercantile Marine. Senators say that negotiations have been pending. I did not know those negotiations had been broken off. Perhaps the Senator does. I did know they had been suspended. So far as I know they are still suspended, but I have no information that those negotiations have come to an end or have been broken off.

Mr. President, with reference to the defeat of this amendment possibly causing some embarrassment, perhaps it may; but even if it should, Mr. President, this is one of the many appropriations which we have no information about, and if it does cause embarrassment there is a way, and a very easy way, to remedy that embarrassment, and that is for the President to call Congress into special session immediately, which it is very obviously the duty of the President to do.

Mr. President, not more than three hours ago there was a motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to take up the $100,000,000 soldiers' land settlement bill. It can not be taken up now. That is very clear to everyone. It was stated this evening by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the President had stated that he would not call Congress in special session before the 1st of June. That means that the soldiers must wait three months before we begin considering legislation giving them the relief which that bill proposes to give to them.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] this afternoon very clearly pointed out that unless the Army appropriation bill should pass before the 1st of June a great many of our boys over in France to-day will be compelled to stay there against their will because of the failure to pass that bill. Mr. President, if Congress is not called into special session before the 1st of June the responsibility for holding our boys in France against their will after the 1st of July will rest upon the President of the United States.

What reason is there, what reason has been given by anyone with these pressing questions before the country, for waiting until the 1st of June before Congress shall be called into special session? No reason has been stated, but I think it is entirely obvious to everyone upon both sides of the Chamber and to the country. The very obvious reason is that the President of the United States, notwithstanding the importance of these questions, does not desire Congress to be in session during the proceedings of the peace conference because the President does not desire that this shall be a forum for debate on the proposed constitution of the league of nations.

If Congress were in special session that matter would be debated upon both sides, ably debated upon the Democratic side as well as upon this side. The people of the country would then have an opportunity to carefully study the arguments for and against the approval of that constitution in the form in which it is now proposed. Why is it that the President of the United States is unwilling that the country should have that opportunity to form a deliberate judgment upon full discussion in this forum and at the other end of the Capitol? Is it because the President of the United States is uncertain of the judgment the American people will ultimately form if they have before them all the facts? Is it because he would rather have the American people determine this question not upon the real issue but upon generalities without information as to the details of the proposed constitution?

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say except that I shall have no hesitation in voting to strike this amendment out of the bill. I shall have no hesitation in voting against other of the amendments in the bill concerning which we have no information, knowing that there is a remedy—that Congress can be called into immediate session for the proper and deliberate consideration of all these important questions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator anticipate that the treaty of peace will come in about the 1st of July, and that then we will be urged to ratify it immediately, in order that the boys may be brought back from Europe, and that that will be the pressure and the strong argument that will be presented to us for an early ratification?

Mr. LENROOT. Unquestionably, Mr. President. I have not seen the slightest desire for the judgment of the Senate or the American people upon the merits of this proposition, but evidently it is hoped and expected that the Senate may be forced into doing that which it might not do if it had the present proposed constitution of the league of nations before it as an independent proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Constitution provides that the President of the United States may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses or either of them. We have had as much time at this session to consider the general appropriation bills as at any session I have ever known. I have seen passed in this body as many as six appropriation bills in one day. You have time now to pass two or three of them before 12 o'clock to-morrow. It is said to be——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from Colorado tell us if that is the reason why you have to issue $7,000,000,000 of bonds?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I can not see that that question has any connection whatever with what I am discussing. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is attempting to blame the President if an extra session is not called. Nearly every one of the appropriation bills on the calendar, except the one which is before the Senate now, are bills that do not take effect until the 1st day of next July, and consequently if the President gets back to the United States and calls a session by that date it will be in ample time for the measures to take effect and there will not be a filibuster at that time.

Mr. President, I want to say that this situation is caused by the people who are opposed to the President and who are attempting in every way to hamper him. The Senator from Wisconsin well knows what would be done upon the other side of the Chamber when the President is in Europe and the Senate is in session. No matter what the President does, you will say it is wrong. No matter what is done in a department here, you will say it is wrong. If a letter fails to reach a soldier over in Europe, then there is going to be criticism of that. If the pay does not come in exactly within a minute of the time it is due, then there is criticism of that. There has been continual unfair harping and criticism against every one of the departments of the Government. Mr. President, it is these things that have delayed the consideration of the appropriation bills.

In the last three or four days speeches have been made, one of them six hours long and another three and a half hours in length, and for what purpose? They were not on the bill at that time under consideration, but they were purely and solely for the purpose of creating the situation which you desire shall arise in order to compel the President of the United States to call an extra session.

Who creates the emergency?

You had in the first instance the opportunity to pass the bills, but you did not do so. You have delayed the matter. The discussion to-day, every minute of it almost, has been upon the league of nations, which is not before the Senate at all. Four or five hours of time have been spent upon that subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here are pressing measures—here is a measure where almost the repudiation of debts will take place unless the bill is passed, and yet you are consuming the time of the Senate for the very purpose of defeating these measures. Talk about the responsibility of the President! The responsibility is here, and made by you.

I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does not the Senator from Colorado sit down and let us pass the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I remember the Senator from Washington the other day took three hours to discuss the league of nations when there was no such measure before the Senate, and I am taking five minutes now for the purpose of reminding the Senator of that fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does not the Senator from Colorado say that the league of nations is not before the Senate?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is before the Senate and before the country. There is no question about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Everybody knows in parliamentary procedure the measure before the Senate is the exact bill or treaty that is in the hands of the Secretary, and no such treaty is here now. Consequently every speech that is made upon that subject is made practically out of order and would be so ruled in any other body in the world except the Senate of the United States. You can not, by abusing the privilege of debate, create the necessity for an extra session of Congress and then blame the President for not calling an extra session of Congress to remedy the situation which you deliberately caused.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5554) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14894) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14945) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15706) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I present a conference report on House bill No. 14746, the Indian appropriation bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Moses	Simmons
Baird	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Kellogg	Overman	Smoot
Calder	Kendrick	Owen	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Page	Sterling
Colt	King	Penrose	Sutherland
Cummins	Kirby	Pittman	Swanson
Curtis	Knox	Poindexter	Trammell
Fernald	Lenroot	Pollock	Underwood
Fletcher	Lewis	Pomerene	Vardaman
France	Lodge	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gay	McCumber	Reed	Walsh
Gerry	McKellar	Robinson	Warren
Gore	McLean	Saulsbury	Watson
Gronna	McNary	Shafroth	Weeks
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Wolcott
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sherman

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may we have order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whenever the Senate will stand by the Chair, order will be enforced in the galleries. Until it does, no effort will be made to keep the galleries in order.

Seventy-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending. In addition to that, a conference report has been submitted, and is to be read. It has the right of way.

Mr. KNOX. I will offer my amendment subsequently.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reading the conference report?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not hear what is being said by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has presented a conference report and has asked that it be read. He was about to request its immediate consideration when a suggestion of the absence of a quorum was made. The roll has been called, a quorum has been disclosed, and the Chair thinks that the next business is for the Secretary to finish reading the report, unless there be an objection to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to say that the Senator in charge of the pending bill happens to be off the floor just for a moment, and in his absence I represent him. I know that it is his urgent desire that this bill shall be passed. If this bill is not passed it endangers the finances of the Government, for it carries the deficiencies for this year. Of course, the Senator from Oklahoma has the right and the privilege to move the immediate consideration of his conference report, and if the Senate desires to displace this bill, either temporarily or permanently, for the consideration of any conference report, that is for the Senate to determine; but being at present in charge of the bill, I can not consent to anything interfering with its consideration until it is disposed of, unless the Senate otherwise orders. Therefore, representing the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I must object.

Mr. OWEN. Upon the representation of the Senator from Alabama, I will say——

The VICE PRESIDENT. A conference report must be read when presented. Then, if there is objection to unanimous consent to proceed to its consideration, the Chair must put the question whether the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the report. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 16, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 57 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 71, 72, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 86, 89, 94, 96, 97, 106, 110, 117, 118, 119, 122, 127, 130, and 131.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 21, 26, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 42, 48, 56, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 73, 74, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 91, 92, 93, 95, 98, 99, 100, 102, 104, 105, 107, 108, 109, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 121, 123, 124, 125, and 129, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "$36,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert: $253,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "$375,000, of which $10,000 shall be used to care for old and indigent Indians in western Washington, and of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "$135,000: Provided, That $5,000 of this amount shall be immediately available:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$153,800: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 may be expended from Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Sherman Institute, for the purchase of land and water rights, the title to which is to be held in the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: Restore the House provision, but in line 25, page 26 of the engrossed bill, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "three hundred and fifty," and on page 33, line 23, of the engrossed bill, strike out the word: "hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "$75,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert: "$88,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 19, line 5, of the engrossed amendments, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$10,000"; also, in line 10, on page 19 of the engrossed amendments, strike out the words "of Congress" and insert: "entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

": Provided, That this provision shall not prohibit other sales as provided by existing law, except that such tracts of coal and asphalt deposits shall not again be offered for sale until after the expiration of six months from November 15, 1919."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23, line 4, of the engrossed amendments, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$15,000," and on page 24, line 1, strike out the words "and to remain available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 27 of the engrossed amendments strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and the words "of Indian Affairs in" on line 4 of said amendments and insert: "For" and in line 12, page 27 of the engrossed amendments, after the word "session" insert: "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"For the construction of a road from the village of Odanah, in the Bad River Reservation, to the south line of said reservation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians on the Bad River Reservation, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said Indians until paid: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may cooperate with the State of Wisconsin in the construction of said road: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Wisconsin satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said State of at least one-half of the cost of the construction of said road."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$151,000," and, on page 57, line 24, of the engrossed bill strike out "$2,325,000" and insert "$2,175,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 30, line 22, of the engrossed amendments strike out the figures "27" and insert "26";

On page 31, line 3, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 32, line 3, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 32, line 11, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 32, line 17, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 32, line 18, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 32, line 18, of said amendments strike out the word "thirty" and insert "twenty";

On page 33, line 4, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 33, line 10, strike out the word "act" and insert "section";

On page 33, line 10, after the word "lease," insert the following: "subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than $1 per acre";

On page 33, line 12, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 33, line 21, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 33, line 23, strike out the word "approval" and insert "lease"

On page 34, line 1, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 34, line 3, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 34, line 8, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 34, line 18, after the word "of," insert "not less than"

On page 34, line 19, after the word "thereafter;" insert "not less than"

On page 34, line 20, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, insert "not less than"

On page 35, line 22, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 36, line 8, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 36, line 11, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"

On page 36, line 13, of said amendment, strike out the word "State" and insert "States."

On page 36, line 17, strike out the word "Act" and insert "section."

On page 36, line 23, strike out the word "Act" and insert "section."

On page 37, line 1, strike out the word "Act" and insert "section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

R. L. OWEN,
A. A. JONES,
A. J. GRONNA,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHARLES D. CARTER,
CARL HAYDEN,
D. S. CHURCH,
PHILIP P. CAMPBELL,
H. P. SNYDER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, for the reason I stated a few moments ago, I am compelled to object.

Mr. OWEN. Then, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference? [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Ohio desires to offer an amendment, I will yield to him.

Mr. HARDING. With the consent of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], I send to the desk a substitute for the committee amendment and the proposed amendment of the Senator from New York, which I think will make the committee amendment satisfactory and permit the Emergency Fleet Corporation to meet all of its obligations. I therefore offer the substitute, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will have to suggest the point of order, and sustain it himself. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is not in order, being an amendment in the third degree. The parliamentary procedure will be, if we are not satisfied, to defeat the committee amendment, and then for the Senator from Ohio to offer his amendment. The committee amendment is in the first degree and the amendment of the Senator from New York is in the second degree; consequently the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio must be in the third degree.

Mr. HARDING. Is it in order to have the amendment read, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. HARDING. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment of the committee it is proposed by Mr. HARDING to insert the following:

For payment of obligations heretofore incurred in purchase or requisition or charter of ships, materials, or plants authorized by the deficiency appropriation acts approved June 15 and October 6, 1917, $50,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say that I think the language that is used in the bill is general language. It is universally carried in bills for this class of appropriations. I am satisfied from the hearings that there is no desire to use this money for the purchase of the ships which have been referred to in debate. I think the language offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] fully covers the item for which this money is required; and, in order to obviate any further discussion, on behalf of the chairman of the committee, who is temporarily absent and with whom I have consulted, I am prepared to so accept the amendment.

Before doing so I wish to say this: The debate here would indicate that this item had not been properly considered by the committee. The Senate must bear in mind that this bill reached the Appropriations Committee on March 1, and almost a continuous session of the Senate has intervened. To-day is the 3d of March. Of course, the Committee on Appropriations did not have the opportunity to have elaborate hearings and to give the consideration to this bill that it would if it had come from the House a week or 10 days sooner; but, as this bill must pass in order to supply deficiencies to take care of the Government between now and the 1st of July, action was required by the committee.

I think this entire appropriation of $50,000,000 is a deficit. The Shipping Board originally asked for $111,000,000—I am using round numbers. The House Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill provided an authorization of $100,000,000. The hearing before the House Committee on Appropriations is published, and covers 233 pages of testimony of the various officers of the Shipping Board. Of course it is impossible for me at this time to bring to the attention of the Senate all of the various items that are covered by this hearing, but on page 217 of the hearings is a letter by Mr. Hurley, chairman of the Shipping Board, to Representative SWAGAR SHERLEY, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, in which he defines what this money is used for, and to make it clear I ask that the letter be published in full, though I will not take up the time of the Senate to read it. He says in that letter that "$34,000,000" of his request for $111,000,000 "represents payments which will be due to builders who are completing ships which on August 3, 1917, were requisitioned while under construction."

The Senate well recalls that when the Shipping Board was created it was authorized to requisition certain ships on the docks, which was done; and $34,000,000 of the $111,000,000 is due for that purpose and to meet those payments.

Six million five hundred and twelve thousand one hundred and sixty-four dollars represents payments which are now or will be due before July 1, 1919, to builders who are working upon vessels which, in October, 1917, were requisitioned complete and are now in course of being fitted for ocean service.

In other words, we have taken these people's ships already; they are in our possession, and we have not paid for them.

Sixty million dollars represents payments which it is estimated will become due and payable before July 1, 1919, to former owners of ships requisitioned on August 3, 1917, while under construction. * * * Eleven million dollars represents payments which it is estimated will become due and payable before July 1, 1919, to former owners of completed ships requisitioned in October, 1917.

So that, according to Mr. Hurley's letter, practically every bit of this money is needed for ships that we have requisitioned and for which we owe other people.

As a matter of fact, the committee, if it went to the full extent of this request, ought to report $100,000,000; but in view of the fact that the sundry civil bill has failed and will not become a law, and it was originally proposed to place this appropriation in the sundry civil bill, the committee consented to cut down the appropriation by half and allow the balance of the money to be taken up in the sundry civil bill at the extra session of Congress, whenever it is called.

Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD the letter I have referred to, following my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, February 19, 1919.

Re: Sundry civil appropriation bill—1920 deficiencies.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Chairman of the Appropriations Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The balance of the emergency shipping fund, under the items directly involved in the estimates which are now before you, and their respective status with reference to deficiency through the present fiscal year, are as follows:

CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS FUND.

(See pp. 8, 24.)

In the fund "for the construction of ships" there is a balance sufficient to carry the Fleet Corporation through the present fiscal year and to enable it to enter the fiscal year 1919–20 with a substantial balance.

REQUISITIONING FUND.

(See pp. 45, 50, 216.)

In the fund "for purchasing, requisitioning, or otherwise acquiring plants, materials, charters, or ships now constructed or in the course of construction, and the expediting of construction of ships thus under construction" there is no balance available. The deficiency for the present fiscal year is $111,512,164, based upon the following figures:

Thirty-four million dollars represents payments which will be due to builders who are completing ships which, on August 3, 1917, were requisitioned while under construction.

Six million five hundred and twelve thousand one hundred and sixty-four dollars represents payments which are now or will be due before July 1, 1919, to builders who are working upon vessels which, in October, 1917, were requisitioned complete and are now in the course of being fitted for ocean service.

Sixty million dollars represents payments which it is estimated will become due and payable before July 1, 1919, to former owners of ships requisitioned on August 3, 1917, while under construction. This amounts to 75 per cent of the total estimate on account of such claims which was placed in the record, the remaining 25 per cent being safely assignable, in our opinion, to the next fiscal year on account of expected delays in settlement.

Eleven million dollars represents payments which it is estimated will become due and payable before July 1, 1919, to former owners of completed ships requisitioned in October, 1917. The figure originally allowed under this item was $3,902,975, because of the fact that until a day or two ago it was expected that the War Department would indemnify the Fleet Corporation against these claims to the extent of about $11,000,000. It has just developed, however, that the Auditor of the War Department has ruled that the statute does not require the War Department to indemnify the Fleet Corporation in connection with these claims. For this reason the Fleet Corporatian finds itself suddenly confronted with having to meet the entire amount of these claims without any assured protection from the War Department. The total estimated sum which will have to be paid to this class of former owners is $14,902,975, but about $4,000,000 of this sum has been charged over to the fiscal year 1920, on the theory that a very few of the settlements may be delayed until that time; hence the figure of $11,000,000 on this account.

It must be said that the Government stands in the position at this time of being remiss in making just compensation to former owners and that it will be placed in an extremely embarrassing position if funds are not made available in the emergency shipping fund at this time for making payments in accordance with the statute.

RECRUITING AND TRAINING FUND.

(See p. 111.)

In the fund "for recruiting, instructing, and training officers, engineers, and crews for American vessels, and for all expenditures incidental thereto," the available balance is approximately $456,000. The deficiency in this item is as originally estimated, $4,661,302.

You will note that the deficiency stated above of $111,512,164 is $11,512,164 in excess of the original estimate of deficiencies on account of purchasing, requisitioning, or otherwise acquiring plants, materials, charters, or ships, etc., which came to your committee from the Secretary of the Treasury on February 4 as Document No. 1770.

It is probable that the Fleet Corporation will apply to the Secretary of the Treasury for a supplementary estimate to cover these new developments.

Very truly, yours,

EDWARD N. HURLEY, Chairman.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio, which the Senator from Alabama now accepts; and I want to say just one additional word.

It appears from the letter that the Senator from Alabama has now read that this is a true deficiency appropriation. This afternoon I sent for the hearings before the House committee upon this bill, which comprise a volume of over 500 pages. I also sent for the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and, as I have stated, that is a pamphlet of 35 pages. In neither of these hearings was there one single word on this subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator that he merely got the wrong hearing. This was a separate hearing.

Mr. LENROOT. I have the hearing on the third deficiency appropriation bill, and I find nothing in it on this subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was a separate hearing on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; I am coming to that in just a moment. Is the practice and procedure of this body to be such that in order to find information about a deficiency appropriation one must seek through all the hearings upon appropriation bills for appropriations beginning on the 1st of the next July? Who would dream of looking in hearings upon the sundry civil bill for information respecting a deficiency bill, the appropriations for which begin July next?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure the Senator will agree with what the committee did. There was a hearing. We had only a day in which to report the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not criticizing the committee at all. Of course the Senate committee had no opportunity to do otherwise with the bill coming over so late as it did.

What I am now criticizing is the practice, too often followed, of putting what is really a deficiency upon a regular appropriation bill and making the appropriation immediately available. Deficiencies should appear in the deficiency bill, so that Senators, in going through a deficiency bill, may look at the hearings upon both bills and find the necessary information there. I am not criticizing the Senate Committee on Appropriations in the least, because it was not its fault.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in offering this amendment I was anxious that some action be taken by the Senate, or at least that the fact should be called to the attention of the Senate that stock jobbing was going on on the Stock Exchange of New York in the stock of the International Mercantile Marine Corporation.

I said when I proposed the amendment that this stock had gone from $90 a share to $122 a share two or three times. I offered the amendment to prevent the use of this money for that purpose and to give notice, so far as I was concerned, that I would oppose the purchase of this stock.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is satisfactory to me. It accomplishes in another way the purpose that I sought to accomplish; and I know, too, that this money is needed for many shipbuilders in New York and other parts of the country who are coming to Washington—some of them have come to see me, and told me that their bills are due, but are not paid—and this, of course, will take care of their interests.

I withdraw my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would not withdraw his amendment. If these stocks can be manipulated, raised and lowered by mere rumors coming from Washington that this or that is going to be done, we ought to put something in the bill as an intimation, at any rate, that the Senate is opposed to such a proposition. I do not charge, nor do I think for one minute, that these suggestions or rumors or statements are given out by the Shipping Board with the intention of influencing the stock market; but it simply shows the effect upon stocks of any suggestion that comes from a public official who may be connected with the operations of the Government.

Mr. President, a word or two about another matter that has been suggested. The way this bill has been handled illustrates a condition that confronts the Congress, and it illustrates the reckless way in which we seem to deal with the people's money. The Senator from Colorado a short time ago suggested that this bill ought to be passed in an hour. He seemed to think that that was the wise way for us to legislate. This bill carries, in effect, $1,671,472,208.69. This bill alone carries almost as much money as any Congress before this has appropriated, with all of its appropriations throughout the whole two years almost $2,000,000,000; and the Senator from Colorado says the Senate ought to pass a measure like that in one hour!

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize the fact that in less than 14 hours we are bound to adjourn? And has he not enough confidence in the administration and in the officers who are to expend this money to believe that they are not going to expend the money unless it is on a valid obligation of the Government? Have we not that check upon the expenditures that might be made?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if we are to follow that argument, we ought not to consider this bill for a minute. We ought simply to say to these people: "Go on and spend whatever you need, and, of course, it will be all right." That is not my idea of the way in which the Congress should handle the people's money or make appropriations for officers of the Government to use that money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, ordinarily when the Senate and House have time to consider these matters it is all right to carefully consider them; but in the closing hours of a Congress, when almost repudiation will occur if this bill is not passed, it seems to me that we ought to hurry matters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this bill ought not to have been brought here in the closing hours of the session. It ought to have been brought here long before this.

Mr. President, this Congress has passed but very few important measures. We knew when the session began that the main thing we would have to do would be to pass the appropriation bills, and those appropriation bills should have been the first things brought out and should have been considered. I know, Mr. President, that the Senate is not responsible for the delay. Probably it would be improper for me to say who is responsible for the delay, or what body is responsible for the delay; but I am going to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Alabama referred to, that this bill passed the House of Representatives February 28. That is not very long ago.

It is the practice—and some contend that it must be followed—for the House to originate the appropriation bills; that they must come over here from the House first; and so we did not have this bill; it did not get here until the 28th of February. Why it did not get here I am not prepared to say. I have my ideas about it. I have my views of it.

I want to say this: There are no politics in connection with this bill, but our Democratic friends are in control of both the House and the Senate. They are responsible for what is done and what is not done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does the Senator think that we ought to be held responsible when we can not prevent people getting up here and speaking from two hours to five hours about something that is not before the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do. [Laughter.] Of course, our Democratic friends are responsible. They are in control of the organization. They should have had these bills over here. They should have had this bill over here a week or two weeks ago. It came over here on the 28th of February. It went to the Committee on Appropriations. We considered it one day, being called in session in the afternoon on Saturday. We did not have any opportunity to bring in before us the men who will administer this fund and spend it to ask them about the items of this bill.

We first prepared this amendment for $100,000,000; and, Mr. President, if they need the $50,000,000, according to the showing that they presented to us, they need the $100,000,000. If it is repudiation not to appropriate this money it is repudiation not to appropriate half of what they say they have to have. They wanted over $100,000,000, to be made immediately available. We cut it down to $50,000,000—upon any testimony from the administrative officers? No; but simply because we thought it ought to be done. We had some information from some Members elsewhere who thought that probably they could get along with that. It is a guess. Mr. President, that is not the way to determine upon appropriations to run the people's business.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator why it is that all of these appropriation bills, or practically all of them, come over near the close of the session, with practically no time for the Senate committees or the Senate to investigate them, outside of any question of long speeches, which, I assume, do not affect the House?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Colorado seems to think that because we have four or five or six hour speeches they can not get the bills through the other body and get them over here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator knows that in the closing of the session of Congress every year, without fail, appropriation bills come over in the late hours, as to which we do not have more than two or three or four hours for consideration. This is not extraordinary in that respect; but the situation is extraordinary when in the closing hours of this Congress we have a filibuster on these bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it has been the custom during the last four or five years that whenever a measure comes toward the close of the session, and anybody wants to get any information about the terms of it, or wants to discuss the terms of it, the cry comes from that side that we are filibustering; it is a filibuster to try to get any information with reference to any of these bills. The Senator from Colorado may think it is a filibuster, but, Mr. President, the country will not think so. The country would like to have these measures scrutinized a little bit more closely than they are, because the people of the country are going to have to pay these bills.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I will ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that, as a result of the discussion upon this amendment, the chairman himself has accepted a substitute for the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is a fact.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then what is the Senator talking about?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Maybe I can get another substitute accepted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator know that these continuous speeches of from three to six hours on the league of nations do in effect produce a filibuster?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator can not shake his gory locks at me. I have not consumed any three or four hours on the league of nations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the Senator knows that that has been the principal theme for the last month before the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado how long he thinks persons ought to speak on the league of nations?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it depends entirely on what is the subject for discussion. The Senator's talk of three hours the other day in any other legislative body on earth would have been stopped, because the Senator was not discussing anything that was upon the table of the Vice President. But, Mr. President, under the idiotic rules that we have in this body you find that a man can talk about the moon being made of green cheese when any subject, no matter what it is, is before the Senate, and the league of nations has been a favorite theme by which there has been more delay than anything else. I want to say, Mr. President, that when the people get at the facts of these attempts to thwart a league of nations, when it is given serious consideration by those whose boys have been over on the other side and whose desire is to stop war, you will find, Mr. President, that there will be a serious condemnation of such obstructive measures.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wants to warn the Senator from Washington that he is going to lose the floor if he yields promiscuously.

Mr. JONES of Washington. With all due respect to the Chair, I wish to suggest that the rule relating to interruptions is a rule that is to be applied by the Senators, and if no Senator raises the point of order I respectfully submit that the Chair has hardly the right to do it; but I am willing to accept the suggestion of the Chair in the interest of time.

I want to say to the Senator from Colorado with reference to his last suggestion, that if we are interested in getting the boys home from France and want to get them home, we will impose our peace terms upon Germany and bring them home and then work out this league of nations proposition in a way that will promote the peace of the world.

Mr. SHAFROTH rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I can not yield to the Senator because he takes too much time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is the way to get the boys home from France. In my judgment, that is what the people of this country would like to have done. I want to see a league of nations or something else, I do not care what you call it, some organization or some association of the nations of the world worked out that will prevent war, that will maintain peace throughout the world; but I do not believe we ought to use the presence of the boys in France to compel us to take whatever may be brought over here. I want to say that that consideration will not influence me in the least when the time comes to pass upon the treaty that may be presented to us. I shall determine my vote with reference to it with which I conceive to be for the best interests of the American people and the American Nation and then for the peace of the world. I want our boys home. I think they ought to get home. We ought to bring them home, and the best way to get them home in the quickest possible time is to determine what terms we are going to impose upon our enemies in the war, and then we can bring them home, and then we will have time to give this momentous subject the consideration it ought to have.

Mr. President, we do not want to have to consider this league of nations treaty as we must consider these appropriation bills. Congress ought not to be asked along about the 1st of July to ratify a treaty in order that the boys may be brought home. We ought to have most of them home before the 1st of July. We ought not to have a single one over there whom it is not necessary to have there in order to enforce whatever terms of peace we propose to impose upon Germany, and what we propose to impose upon Germany does not depend upon the compact for a league of nations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize that the soldiers are being brought home just as fast as our ships or any ships which we can hire can bring them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why does the Senator suggest, then, that long speeches here are keeping them from being brought over?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not the fact. They are delayed because we have not the bottoms to bring them over in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We will never get them this way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You will not get them by denying this $50,000,000 for the very purpose of paying for the ships to bring them home in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator think that we have to wait until this $50,000,000 is appropriated to bring them over?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It will be a long time before they are brought over if we have to wait for that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I merely wish to inquire of the Chair if the Senator from Washington has not spoken twice on this subject?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not been keeping any record of it. But the Chair will state——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am through Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 10, to insert:

For recruiting, instructing, and training officers, engineers, and crews for American vessels, and for all expenditures incidental thereto, $3,750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Bureau of Engraving and Printing," on page 20, after line 3, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, during the emergency growing out of the war with Germany, to have all bonds, notes, checks, or other printed papers now or hereafter authorized to be executed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department printed in such manner and by whatever plate-printing process and on any style of plate-printing presses that he may consider suitable for the issue of such securities and other papers in the form that will properly safeguard the interests of the Government, and that such presses as are used in printing from intaglio plates shall be operated by plate printers except on such work as is now being done by other processes and any similar work that may be necessary hereafter: Provided, That in the execution of such work only such part of it shall be transferred from the present method of executing it as will permit of the retention in the service of such permanent plate printers as are now engaged in the execution of such work, or such temporary plate printers similarly employed and who can qualify under civil-service regulations for permanent appointments; and all acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relative to the use of power and hand presses in the printing of securities of the Government are hereby suspended and declared not in effect until that time, and at the termination of said emergency such acts or parts of acts shall be in effect and force as prior to the act of October 6, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 8, to insert:

REFUND OF INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTIONS.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money covered into the Treasury as internal-revenue collections under the provisions of the act approved May 27, 1908, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 13, to insert:

BONDS OF CREW OF U. S. S. "SAN DIEGO."

Any liberty loan bonds belonging to an officer or member of the crew of the U. S. S. San Diego and which were in possession of the owner on board said vessel on the 19th day of July, 1918, when such vessel was sunk off the coast of Long Island, N. Y., and which shall be shown to have been at that time lost beyond recovery, are hereby declared to have been wholly destroyed and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue duplicates of such bonds in conformity with the provisions of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," subhead "River and harbor work," on page 23, after line 12, to insert:

Cape Cod Canal: Whenever the Secretary of War, in pursuance of authority heretofore conferred on him by law, shall cause proceedings to be instituted for acquiring by condemnation the Cape Cod Canal and all the franchises, property, and rights of property appurtenant thereto, the United States, upon the filing of the petition in such proceedings, shall have the right to take immediate possession of said canal and appurtenances and maintain and operate the same in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1909, which are hereby made applicable to said works. The sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated for the improvement of this waterway, with the view to maintaining a depth of 25 feet at mean low water, with suitable channel widths, out of which sum may be paid any awards which may be made under the aforesaid condemnation proceedings: Provided, That the total amount to be paid under such awards shall not exceed $10,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to have some explanation of why this amendment is inserted in the bill. Is it a deficiency?

Mr. WEEKS rose.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Massachusetts will explain it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress authorization was made for an examination and survey and a purchase of the Cape Cod Canal. The Secretaries of War, Navy, and Commerce were appointed a commission to make the purchase, provided the report of the engineers was favorable. The usual examination was made by the Corps of Engineers, the report was favorable, and the three Secretaries referred to have proceeded to complete the purchase. In the meantime the Railway Administration took over the operation of the Cape Cod Canal and expended on it about $450,000 to widen it and deepen it. The Railroad Administration now proposes to turn the Cape Cod Canal back either to its owners or to the War Department. The War Department wishes to take over the canal and complete the transaction. An offer has been made to the owners of the canal which has not been satisfactory. In other words, they have been unable to reach terms which are satisfactory to the Government and to the owners of the canal; and as provided in the act of last summer, condemnation proceedings have been undertaken and are now proceeding.

This particular amendment, included in the appropriation bill now under consideration, comes from the Secretary of War, with the request that action be taken. The other day when bills on the calendar were being considered this bill passed the Senate unanimously. Undoubtedly, before the extra session of Congress is called, if reports are true about the time of its calling, proceedings which have been undertaken will have been completed and the turning over of the canal will then be made, even if it has not been done at this time. The appropriation is put in this particular bill because of the desire of the Railroad Administration to turn the canal back, and of the War Department to take it over, and particularly to secure the four hundred and fifty odd thousand dollars which have already been expended by the Railway Administration on the canal, which would revert to the owners if the purchase is not completed.

That, in substance, is the explanation.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to ask whether this amendment is identical in form with the bill passed the other day?

Mr. WEEKS. Exactly so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 24, line 14, after the numerals "1735," to strike out "part 2" and insert "parts 2 and 3," and in line 15, after the word "session," to strike out "$714,813.58" and insert "$852,106.49," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance Department: For the payment of the claims for damage to and loss of private property occasioned by the explosions and fire at the plant of T. A. Gillespie Co., at Morgan, N. J., which have been agreed upon by the War Department and the claimant, and in amounts not exceeding those which are enumerated and scheduled in House Document No. 1735, parts 2 and 3, of the present session, $852,106.49.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask what is the reason for this increase of $150,000 over the House figures?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a change in the judgments certified to since that time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 5, insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase the land at the corner of Seventh Avenue and the proposed extension of Grand Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., on which the United States holds an option until May 10, 1919, from the proceeds from the sale of the old site, amounting to $950,000, as a site for a new post-office building in said city, and such sum or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

Mr. KNOX. This amendment is subject to a point of order, I realize, but I hope when I explain the situation the point of order will not be made and the amendment will be passed.

The facts are these: About 13 years ago the Government purchased in the city of Pittsburgh a site for a new post-office building, paying therefor about $1,000,000. They held it since that time without improvement. I am stating these facts from a letter of Secretary Glass to the House committee which reported this amendment as a bill favorably. They then sold it, and in the act of Congress passed in 1913, authorizing the sale of this property, it was provided that the proceeds should be reinvested in another site for the same purpose, but unfortunately the money was not specifically appropriated at that time for that purpose. There has been an option taken on a very desirable property which can be bought for the proceeds of the sale of the old property, which option expires on the 10th day of May of this year. As the option was taken at a very reasonable price for the property, the department is very anxious to have this money available in order that they may close the deal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand amendments are in order on the bill at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course; it will promote the consideration of the bill if they are presented as we go along.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to amend on page 24, after line 22, by adding a new paragraph, as follows:

SALE OR EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY.

The President is hereby authorized, through the head of any executive department, upon terms and conditions considered advisable by him or such head of department, to sell, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of real property or any interest therein or appurtenant thereto acquired by the United States of America since April 6, 1917, for storage purposes for the use of the Army, which, in the judgment of the President, or the head of such department, is no longer needed for use by the United States of America, and to execute and deliver, in the name of the United States and in its behalf, any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate any such sale, exchange, lease, or other disposal; that all moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale or exchange shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation from which the funds to purchase or acquire the said property were allotted, and a full report on the same submitted annually to Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am compelled to make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator will withhold his point of order just a moment until I can explain what it is. It will save the Government about a million dollars.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have withheld so many points of order that we are having altogether too many amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator permit me to explain the matter before he makes his point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; I will do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I imagine the Chair will hold the point of order well taken. This is the situation as to this amendment which I have offered: It is an amendment I clipped from the military appropriation bill, which it is stated can not pass. It was inserted in the military appropriation bill at the earnest request of Gen. Goethals, who has been at the head of the Purchase, Transportation, and Storage Bureau in his capacity of Assistant Chief of Staff of the Army.

The situation with respect to this amendment is that the Division of Purchase, Transportation and Storage, as Senators know, acquired or built a very large amount of storage for Army supplies during the war. They have contracted for enormous buildings in which to store Army material, both at the ports of embarkation and at the principal depots in the interior of the country. In one particular instance, in the city of Chicago, the Division of Purchase, Transportation and Storage entered into a contract for the erection of a tremendous building to be used as a freezer for meats to be placed in storage for the use of the troops at home and abroad. The building had almost reached completion when the armistice was signed on November 11. The information which came to the Committee on Military Affairs was to the effect that the department endeavored to cease the construction of this building, which was a very expensive one, but a legal opinion was given to the effect that the department would have to stand by its contract and the building must be finished—finished, mind you—and delivered to the Government after the time had gone by when it would be of the slightest use to the Government. The building is just about to be finished now.

The Division of Purchase, Transportation and Storage has made arrangements for the exchange of that building with some concerns in Chicago for another building which is not a freezer plant and which the Government can use. If this amendment goes through, the Government can get rid of the freezer plant, which is utterly useless to it now, and get a building which will be of some use, because Senators will see that the amendment authorizes the exchange as well as other actions taken with the storage building which the Government has put up. If the building has to be retained by the Government we shall find ourselves in possession when the option has expired which the Government now has for this exchange or possession of a building that will be of no use to us at all; but, by reason of this exchange, Gen. Goethals told the Military Affairs Committee that something like a million dollars, as I remember, would be saved to the Government of the United States. There are other instances of similar character. I think there is one at New Orleans, where there is an opportunity for the Government to immediately sell, lease, or exchange some of its surplus storage and get rid of it now on a good market, thereby saving a good deal of money. The Senator from New Jersey, were he here, would remember that there are tremendous storage plants also in New Jersey, and there is an opportunity for the Government to exchange some of those or to lease them or to sell them. If it is done quickly, we can get some of our money back. That is the object of this amendment.

I know that the point of order will be held good if it is made against the amendment, but I hope it will not be raised because the adoption of this amendment and its passage through Congress will actually save the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars. That is the testimony that has come before our committee. I am trying to save something out of the wreck of the military appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am very much embarrassed by this amendment. It looks to me to be a meritorious amendment, but it is plainly subject to the point of order. I am making points of order against amendments, feeling that it is the only way to save this bill because a large number of Senators have in view amendments that would certainly wreck the bill. It is a very difficult thing for me to determine what is absolutely right in the premises. I am in sympathy with the Senator's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That settles it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 3, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee for all the blessings of life, especially for our Republic, its great institutions and vast opportunities for advancement; for our homes, dear to our hearts; for our religion, which makes for righteousness in the soul. Be with us now and always, that through all the changing scenes of life we may be loyal to our country, loyal to our homes, and loyal to our religion. And, O Lord, if this shall be the last prayer of the Sixty-fifth Congress, may it ascend on high in behalf of all the Members of this House, its officers and employees. Go with them to their homes, give them rest and comfort, that those who come back may be strengthened for the work ahead of them and those remaining may be strong to take up the duties of life wherever they may find them. Bless all their families. Guide and keep us close to Thee. In the spirit of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

COMMISSION TO ADJUST SALARIES.

The SPEAKER. It seems that the Speaker was premature the other day in appointing Messrs. HAMLIN, KEATING, and COOPER of Wisconsin upon this adjustment-of-salary business, because the bill had not been signed. The Chair thought the bill had been signed, because it had been presented to him by the Clerk for signature and he signed it, but it turned out the President had not. So the Chair reappoints them.

MINORITY VIEWS, NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file before the expiration of the session individual views upon the investigation of the National Security League, being a member of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to be permitted to file before the expiration of the session his individual views on the investigation of the National Security League. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the National Security League.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Army courts-martial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the league of nations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24 to the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, and had further insisted upon the residue of the Senate amendments still in disagreement.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the war finance corporation act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin, in pursuance of an order heretofore made, in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Representative from Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate stand in recess until 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, March 3, 1919.

Also the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, in pursuance of an order heretofore made to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Senator from Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate stand in recess until 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, March 3, 1919.

Also the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. DANIEL W. COMSTOCK, late a Representative from the State of Indiana, in pursuance of an order heretofore made in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Representative from Indiana.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the family of the deceased the Senate stand in recess until 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, March 3, 1919.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. McFADDEN. On a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFADDEN. The Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams, issued a public statement which was given to the Members and the country in regard to me as a citizen, as a banker, and as a Member of Congress, and I desire to make a statement in connection with it.

The SPEAKER. What did he say that determines whether the gentleman has any question of privilege or not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. He said enough.

Mr. McFADDEN. I think he said enough.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair does not know what he said.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will send to the Speaker's desk the official document and ask the Clerk to read the statement which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman just indicate the point on which he bases his question of privilege?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think in connection with that I will have to read the whole statement.

The SPEAKER. But there must be something in it——

Mr. McFADDEN. The last paragraph I think would be sufficient. I will read it.

These facts stated briefly as possible explain definitely why Representative McFADDEN would like to see the comptroller's office abolished. The whole record shows that you acted in exact accord with your career as a banker when as a representative of the people you used your privilege to avail yourself of your immunity to circulate the libels for which you produced no author and which you do not dare present when challenged, defied, and invited where they could be placed and exposed as absolutely unfounded and basely and viciously false.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a question of privilege.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, before that I want to make a point of order, and wish to be heard, that the gentleman has not stated anything that raises the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question of the point of no quorum has been made. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A hundred and twenty-seven gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to respond to their names:

Anthony	Estopinal	Knutson	Shackleford
Baer	Fairchild, G. W.	Larsen	Shouse
Beakes	Ferris	Lea, Cal.	Slemp
Birch	Flynn	Lunn	Smith, Mich.
Booher	Frear	McCulloch	Smith, C. B.
Brodbeck	Garland	McKeown	Snyder
Brumbaugh	Gillett	McKinley	Steele
Buchanan	Goodall	Nelson, J. M.	Swift
Caldwell	Gray, N. J.	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Carter, Mass.	Gregg	Overmyer	Tinkham
Cary	Hamill	Park	Voigt
Chandler, N. Y.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Porter	Wason
Costello	Heintz	Price	Webb
Cox	Helm	Ragsdale	Wilson, Ill.
Curry, Cal.	Hicks	Reavis	Wood, Ind.
Denison	Johnson, S. Dak.	Roberts	Woods, Iowa
Eagle	Jones	Robinson	Woodyard
Elston	Kahn	Rowland
Emerson	Kearns	Russell

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 352 Members have answered to their names, a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

POST OFFICE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The Post Office bill requires the Speaker to appoint a commission of five members of the committee, and he appoints Mr. MOON, Mr. BELL, Mr. ROUSE, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. MADDEN.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. DENISON] be excused for to-day on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that his colleague Mr. DENISON be excused for to-day on account of illness. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] is recognized.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, on the 15th of February I introduced a resolution in this House calling for an investigation of John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency, director of finances of the Railroad Administration, director of the War Finance Corporation, and so forth, and so forth. Last Saturday night at about 8 o'clock the Comptroller of the Currency, John S. Williams, released a statement for the press which I desire the Clerk to read, and in connection with this he attempts to make out that I am lone-handed in my accusations of him and his actions—that I was inspired by selfish motives—and in the few remarks I make this morning I want to disprove that, or at least attempt to do so, and to show that there is a universal mistrust in regard to this officer, and ask and insist upon an investigation of this gentleman and his public functions.

I would also like to have the Clerk read my reply to this statement, and also a statement from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, which came within half an hour of the time that the letter of the Comptroller of the Currency was delivered to me on Saturday evening. I would also like to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I prefer to wait until the letters are read.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is what I wanted to ask about. I understood you to say you would put in the RECORD a statement appearing in the papers.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did you receive a letter from Mr. Williams Saturday afternoon about 4.50?

Mr. McFADDEN. I did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will you also put that in the RECORD?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will decide about that later.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Unless the gentleman will put into the RECORD the letter which he received on Saturday afternoon, which is an elaboration of the article that appeared in the papers, I shall object to extension and revision of remarks and to the reading of the letters.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not wish to be at all discourteous to the gentleman, but I desire, if this matter is gone into, that there shall not be, at least, only one side of it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Virginia has covered the point. Reserving the right to object, I want to suggest this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that in order to have the whole controversy and all the facts in the RECORD here, should he not, in all fairness, put the whole letter in the RECORD?

Mr. McFADDEN. If the gentleman will wait a moment—and I refuse to yield further—I am charging the Comptroller of the Currency in this public statement with giving out information in regard to a financial institution which he should not have given out.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The Chair was stating to the House that the gentleman would proceed. I want the unanimous consent stated which the Chair submits to the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] objects to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Was the gentleman given permission to extend and revise his remarks?

The SPEAKER. He was not. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] intervened and practically objected—of course, under conditions.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the request.

Mr. McFADDEN. I ask that the Clerk read the letter.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the reading of the letter. I am perfectly willing he should read the comptroller's letter——

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to read a statement which was given out by the Comptroller of the Currency to the press, dated Washington, March 1.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to read from the Clerk's desk the letter which constitutes the matter of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is, if nobody objects.

Mr. WINGO. I am perfectly willing to allow the letter to be read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not the privilege of the gentleman to read that portion of the letter that constitutes his base of the personal privilege without reading the entire letter as objected to by the gentleman from Arkansas?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Speaker rule that a gentleman having the floor can read anything if there is objection on the part of any Member?

The SPEAKER. He can read that upon which he bases his question of privilege.

Mr. WINGO. He has already done that and the Speaker has ruled it gives him a ground of privilege. Now, he proposes to read another article.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; the same article.

The SPEAKER. He read a little piece of a letter which the Chair thought was a sufficient basis.

Mr. WINGO. No, Mr. Speaker; he read a newspaper article, but he has not read the comptroller's letter.

The SPEAKER. That is what he wants to do.

Mr. WINGO. He does not propose to do that. That is what he is trying to read.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to read the Williams letter and to read the reply to it, if he wants to.

Mr. WINGO. Well, I have no objection to that, but——

The SPEAKER. What is it that the gentleman objects to?

Mr. WINGO. I object to his reading a newspaper article, which he says is an extract from a letter, which is not the letter of John Skelton Williams or his reply to it. I am perfectly willing that he shall read to the House the letter of John Skelton Williams and his reply, but I do object to his reading some articles here on which he bases his question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. That is what he is basing it on.

Mr. WINGO. He is not reading but one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; he can not read both of them at once. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. I have not suggested that he read both of them at once.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair has always been liberal in construing the question of personal privilege. If a man states in a letter things that he would not dare to say to a man's face, or I suppose he would not, the Chair holds that that constitutes the basis of a question of personal privilege.

Mr. WINGO. Well, Mr. Speaker, the orderly procedure of the House is very clear as to what may be read and what may not be read. I am not trying to prevent the gentleman from having an opportunity to defend himself against any charge that he claims is made against him, but when he comes to the House and appeals to the House for the judgment of the House he ought to read the entire letter and the answer thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not have to express an opinion, but the Chair would say that he ought to read both letters entire, although that is an obiter dictum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Chair will remember that the gentleman's time is not unlimited. He may have other matters that he wants to present to the House.

The SPEAKER. He has a right to yield if he chooses.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman——

Mr. McFADDEN. I can not yield.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. One moment. I would like to read the rule, which plainly states what the procedure is. I read:

> When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman's time running while this discussion is going on?

The SPEAKER. It ought not to be taken out of his time.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a minute? I am not trying to bother the gentleman in any way.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. I can assure the gentleman that I am asking simply for information to keep the RECORD clear. Are the newspaper reports accredited to the comptroller a verbatim reproduction of what is in his letter, so far as they go?

Mr. McFADDEN. This is a correct copy from the comptroller under his frank, which came to me this morning. It is an exact duplicate of the press notice sent out Saturday night.

Mr. PHELAN. So far as they go, they are exactly alike?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The press notice came before the gentleman received the letter?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; afterwards. This is the article:

Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is reading that to which an objection was made, and to which I have a right to object.

The SPEAKER. How otherwise can the House ever get at this question, which is really a question of veracity?

Mr. WINGO. The House can get at it under the rules. The rule says he can not read a paper that is objected to without the consent of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, where a man rises to a question of personal privilege which is based on a written article, he has the right to read it.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair thinks, and has so ruled two or three times.

Mr. McFADDEN. I read:

(Immediate release.)

STATEMENT FOR THE PRESS.

OFFICE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, March 1, 1919.

Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams has written to Representative McFADDEN, of Pennsylvania, a reply to a speech delivered in the House by Mr. McFADDEN on February 15 attacking the comptroller's office as unnecessary and suggesting investigation of the present comptroller's administration and conduct. Mr. Williams says he published in the newspapers the day the speech appeared a challenge to hasten the proposed investigation and to trace to their sources alleged rumors, recited by Mr. McFADDEN, of misuse of the powers of the office. He continues:

"After your receipt of this but three days of the present session will remain. In 11 working days of the House you have failed to present evidence in support of your injurious accusations or innuendos against me or to press your suggestion of investigation. You knew on February 15 that my reappointment to be Comptroller of the Currency had just been sent to the Senate for action. You knew, from wide publication in the newspapers, that the Senate Banking and Currency Committee was conducting hearings on my fitness or unfitness to be comptroller and hearing evidence on charges that might be presented before it against me. You knew that here was an investigation ready to your hand in active progress. You knew that the Senate committee, with full power to compel attendance of witnesses and production of papers, offered opportunity to anybody in the United States with a grievance or accusation against my official conduct or personal character to present it. Because you had, directly and by indirection, deliberately and publicly made statements seriously accusing another man, personal honor demanded that you at least attempt to prove the truth of your assertions or retract them. You have done neither. Both as a public official and a citizen, your oath and bounden duty required that if you knew of reasons why a man holding a public position of large importance was unfit you should present or have presented those reasons before the body engaged in deciding the confirmation or rejection of that man. You have stood mute and inactive until now, when the close of the session is near.

"You have done nothing to vindicate your own assertions and insinuations declared publicly to be untrue or to prevent the Senate from confirming the appointee whose fitness you said you had reason to doubt. You are in the position of having taken a shot at me from safe ambush and skulking away too hastily to know what injury you had done or to allow the object of your aim opportunity for defense, redress, or reply."

Mr. Williams then asserts that Mr. McFADDEN, as cashier and president of a bank in Pennsylvania, has been under rebuke and criticism of the Treasury Department for over 20 years and through five comptrollerships and by 15 different bank examiners, and that only the constant interference of the comptroller's office has preserved the institution safe.

The comptroller calls attention to the fact that the capital of the bank in Pennsylvania, of which Representative McFADDEN has been continuously cashier or president, shows no change in the past 10 years, but has remained at $100,000, while its surplus and undivided profits have shrunk approximately 25 per cent, while the surplus and profits of all other national banks in the country have increased 62 per cent. Its deposits show virtually no improvement in the past five years, while deposits of all other national banks have about doubled in the same period.

Since 1908 the bank's dividends have been twice reduced. The losses which have already been charged off in this period have amounted to more than half of the bank's present capital; and although Mr. McFADDEN only appears to own 37 shares of the bank's capital stock, the money which the last report shows the bank to be lending to himself, his family, and his allied interests and enterprises amounts to more than the bank's entire capital and surplus.

After the examination of the bank in the spring of 1918 the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, in a letter to the board of directors, used the following language in determined effort to preserve and protect the interests of the bank and its depositors:

"The bank continues to violate the law; and this feature together with other unsatisfactory conditions seems largely due to lack of proper management. The examiner is of the opinion that the bank will not observe the law or regulations of this office as long as President McFADDEN is the managing director, because the other directors seem to take no personal and active interest in the bank, and permit President McFADDEN to use the bank for his personal interest without due regard for safe and sound banking.

"This condition will not be permitted longer to continue. All of the directors, and not alone the president, should give their attention to the affairs of the bank, which the law and their oaths require, and if President McFADDEN is not inclined to observe the instructions of this office and the law he should be required to resign and the board should elect some one else as president who will."

Comptroller Williams argues that, as he has been unjustly assailed, he has the right to show what he believes to be the causes and motives underlying the attack, and concludes:

"These facts, stated briefly as possible, explain perfectly why Representative McFADDEN would like to see the Comptroller's Office abolished. The whole record shows that you acted in exact accord with your career as banker when, as a Representative of the people, you used your privilege and availed yourself of your immunity to circulate libels for which you produce no author and which you did not dare present, when challenged, defied, and invited, where they could be faced and exposed as absolutely unfounded and basely and viciously false."

That statement was handed to me by a newspaper man at 10 o'clock Saturday night. I very hurriedly made this reply:

MR. M'FADDEN REPLIES TO COMPTROLLER.

Late to-night Mr. McFadden issued the following statement:

"The statement of John Skelton Williams has just been shown me. A hurried reading of the statement, I assert, proves the truth of my assertion that John Skelton Williams is an unfit public officer, and this is only a continuance of the persecution which he has carried on toward me since I suggested four years ago that the office of the Comptroller of the Currency should be abolished.

"The statement which he makes is false, and I would call attention to the fact that his attack upon me in this public manner only seeks to cloud the real issue, which is—and I reiterate it—that John Skelton Williams is an unfit public officer, and that he is on trial and not I.

"I have repeatedly called the attention of Congress to my resolution of investigation, and have twice been refused a hearing by the chairman of the Rules Committee."

Shortly after the letter was delivered to me from the comptroller on Saturday I received the following letter:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, March 1, 1919.

Hon. LOUIS T. McFADDEN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN McFADDEN: The Federal Reserve Board has sent a letter to Chairman PHELAN expressing its appreciation of the interest which the Committee on Banking and Currency has taken in the Federal Reserve System, and it desires to let you know as a member of the committee of its feeling of obligation for the uniform courtesy the committee has shown the board in considering the recommendations made by it, as well as for your effective work in securing legislation needed to enable the Federal reserve banks to perform not only the functions for which they were designed but to discharge the duties and meet the extraordinary demands imposed upon them by reason of the war.

The board feels that the work of the Banking and Currency Committee has been of the greatest value to the country, and that the members of the committee have every reason to be proud of their record.

Sincerely, yours,

W. P. G. HARDING, Governor.

I am a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. Now, in addition to that I want to put into the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to do so, a resolution which was passed by bankers from southern New York and northern Pennsylvania at a meeting held on February 22, which meeting I addressed on the subject of the Comptroller of the Currency. This is a resolution passed by bankers of seven or eight of the counties adjoining my own home, and that is the reason I ask to have the resolution placed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to put these resolutions in the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object; and I raise the point of order that under a question of privilege personal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania he can not lug in an attack on the Comptroller of the Currency, made at a private meeting in Pennsylvania that had listened to the gentleman on his controversy with the Comptroller of the Currency. That is not proper matter to bring in here under a question of privilege. If the gentleman has been unjustly charged by the Comptroller of the Currency, of course he has the right to answer that charge and to make any statement that will prove either its falsity or show circumstances which indicate that the comptroller has improperly attacked him, but to bring in resolutions adopted by a bankers' meeting up here in Pennsylvania attacking the Comptroller of the Currency is improper.

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman from Arkansas wants to object, let him object.

Mr. WINGO. I do not have to get permission of the gentleman from Illinois to make a point of order. I can state my point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to these resolutions?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; and further, I was making a point of order when interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to the gentleman making a speech——

Mr. WINGO. I know the gentleman objects.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield for a question.

Mr. POU. I understood the gentleman to say that he had been refused a hearing by the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

A MEMBER. Twice, he said.

Mr. POU. I have no recollection of the gentleman ever asking for a hearing, and I want to say that during the two years I have been chairman of that committee I never have refused any of my colleagues a hearing. I remember the gentleman asking me about the resolution, but I have no recollection or record of the gentleman asking that he be heard by the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman, I think, misunderstood what I said. I asked for consideration of my resolution on two different occasions.

Mr. POU. That is very true.

Mr. McFADDEN. Once here, and once in the rotunda of the Capitol; and the gentleman said he could not give me any assurances in regard to the resolution, and the fact is that there has been no action taken. In addition to that fact I pressed that matter with two of my Republican colleagues on the committee, Messrs. CAMPBELL and SNELL, and they advised me that the matter was presented to the committee and no definite action was taken.

Mr. POU. Now, that is quite a different matter from being refused a hearing. The gentleman did insist on consideration of his resolution.

Mr. McFADDEN. That was what I referred to.

Mr. POU. I do not think the gentleman himself, in all fairness, should state that he has been refused a hearing, because, I repeat, that has never been refused to anyone, and none of my colleagues on this committee——

Mr. McFADDEN. I did not mean to assert that I asked for a hearing. I asked for consideration of my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. McFADDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the bankers in northern Pennsylvania, of the counties surrounding my home in northern Pennsylvania and southern New York, I addressed a meeting on February 22. There were present at that meeting among other people the deputy governor of the Federal reserve bank of New York. After I left that meeting, without any consultation whatever with me, the following resolution was passed by that body without my knowledge, and the first intimation that I had of it was the press notice containing that resolution.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NORTON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. On a question of personal privilege, if a Member is charged with falsely making a statement, in this case the statement that the Comptroller of the Currency is an unfit person to hold the office that he occupies, and the Comptroller of the Currency charges the Member has made the charge from personal spite and malice and that he has no one to support him in his contentions or charges, has not the Member a right to show that that is not a true statement?

The SPEAKER. The Member has not any right to lug in all the resolutions that might be passed about himself and John Skelton Williams. Every crowd that meets in the United States might pass resolutions about them.

Mr. NORTON. The resolution proposed to be read I infer from what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] has stated supports his charges against Mr. Williams, whatever they may have been. I have only an interest in the parliamentary questions that have been raised.

The SPEAKER. The essence of this controversy is a question of veracity between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the Comptroller of the Currency. Now, any statement that throws light on that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As I understand it, the Comptroller of the Currency has indicated that only the gentleman from Pennsylvania is interested in this matter. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was about to read resolutions showing that other bankers were interested in this matter, had consulted about it, and expressed their views. Now, is it not proper for him to introduce resolutions of the other bankers, since the comptroller asserts that only this particular banker, who happens to be a Member of Congress, is interested?

The SPEAKER. There are about 8,000 of these bankers, and we would not get through here until the end of the next session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only point is whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the right to introduce supporting evidence.

The SPEAKER. He has not. None of these resolutions will be let in on either side.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. Do I understand the gentleman to hold that if Mr. Williams charges that a statement made concerning him by Mr. MCFADDEN is based on Mr. MCFADDEN's personal views, and that there is no one supporting him, that he has not a right to come in here and show that he is supported by a great many others?

The SPEAKER. That can not be made the basis of a question of personal privilege even if he has said it. There is nothing in that that reflects on the man's character; it may be the truth and it may be a lie.

Mr. NORTON. He implies it by further showing or attempting to show the charges made against him——

The SPEAKER. The essence of this controversy, as the Chair has said a half a dozen times, is a quasi question of veracity between the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to certain charges that he made against the comptroller and certain charges the comptroller made in reply.

Mr. NORTON. Just so; and the comptroller charges in reply that the statements made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] had no support at all.

The SPEAKER. We can not possibly go into that question. The Chair rules out all resolutions on both sides.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am attempting to show, in answer to this statement by the Comptroller of the Currency, that the bankers of the United States are opposed to the continuance of Mr. Williams as a public servant. I am attempting to prove also from evidence that he has been using his office for private gain and profit.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Assuming that that be true, it is not a question of personal privilege to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. That is the very question on which the whole controversy started.

Mr. WINGO. If the comptroller has made a charge against him that reflects on his character and veracity, the question of whether or not the Comptroller of the Currency is not discharging his official duties properly goes neither to the credit or the discredit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, his character and standing, or his reputation. The gentleman's reputation does not depend on the official acts of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I will permit it.

Mr. MANN. Why this fear on the part of the friends of Mr. Williams against telling the truth?

Mr. WINGO. I am not; I am trying to get the whole letter in. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will read the whole letter I am willing to give him two hours.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is objecting to the facts coming out.

Mr. WINGO. I am not; I am demanding all the facts, and if he will put in the whole letter I will ask for him to have another hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will object to that.

Mr. MANN. If you will not let him put the facts in now, we will see that they are put in later.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will let the whole thing come in upon which this is based, he may talk until doomsday if he wants to. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for me to ask unanimous consent to let all the facts in the letter come in as stated by the comptroller?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I refuse to yield further. Mr. Speaker, I have been attempting to show the motive back of this proposition. It seems the defenders of John Skelton Williams are here proposing to keep out the evidence that I am trying to submit. One of the great objections that comes to me against the Comptroller of the Currency is the extent to which he is playing favorites, the aid he is giving to the Commercial National Bank of Washington.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit an observation.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania yields.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The contention of the gentleman from Arkansas and somewhat indorsed by the Speaker that the question of personal privilege is narrowed down to a question of veracity seems to me is not true.

The SPEAKER. That has been decided.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The question of personal privilege is this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania as a Member of the House set forth as he understood it his views, and acting on his responsibility as a Member, against a certain public official. That public official replies and gives to the press of the country that the reason this Member has taken that action is not because the public official is unworthy of the trust, but because the gentleman himself has been guilty of improper conduct with relation to his bank and has been subject to disciplinary measures by that public official. Therefore, the question of privilege embraces two things: First, did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] make his accusation solely because irritated against the public official on account of matters growing out of his conduct of the bank, or did he make it because impelled to do so by conscientious consideration of his duties as a Member of the House, knowing that the bankers of the country were of the opinion that the administration of the present comptroller was injurious to the country? Therefore I submit the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the full right to show that the conduct of the present Comptroller of the Currency has not been right. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the right to show that he is right, both as a banker and as a Member of Congress. This involves his right to show his charges sprung from a belief that the comptroller has acted as a public official, and any attempt that is being made to prevent such statement by the gentleman from Pennsylvania can certainly be considered nothing but an attempt to keep the true facts from being presented to the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. The devotion of the gentleman from Minnesota to the truth is so notorious that I shall not reply.

Mr. TOWNER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words of the gentleman from Arkansas be taken down.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. It is demanded that the words of the gentleman from Arkansas be taken down.

Mr. WINGO. Of what does he complain? I said his devotion to the truth is so notorious that I should not reply. If that is unparliamentary I withdraw it, so as to save time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands that the words of the gentleman from Arkansas be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman withdrew his words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never heard him withdraw them.

Mr. BLANTON. I heard him withdraw them.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to withdraw the words in order to save time——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I meant no reflection by my facetious remark. I do not want to be put in the wrong attitude. Whenever I want to make a statement that is a reflection I am going to make it straight from the shoulder; and frankness demands that I state I intended that as a facetious remark.

Mr. WALSH. This whole explanation is out of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Minnesota can accept the apology of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, well, if the gentleman puts it that way, I will not withdraw. I made no apology, and none is due.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a gentleman withdraws his remark, is there anything before the House?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his remark.

Mr. MANN. Well, I withdraw the demand that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the demand that the words be taken down.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], coupled with his withdrawal of the demand that the words be taken down, I desire to say that I am not going to withdraw my words under apparent compulsion.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois withdrew his demand.

Mr. WINGO. But the statement that the gentleman made carried with it an imputation that I shall not rest under. I shall stand on the words.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words.

The Clerk read as follows:

The devotion of the gentleman from Minnesota to the truth is so notorious that I shall not reply.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that those words be stricken from the record.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard on that. Those words are parliamentary.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman can not be heard.

Mr. WINGO. To make a point of order?

The SPEAKER. No; this is a summary proceeding.

Mr. WINGO. But I make the point of order that the words are not out of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should take his seat under the demand that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas will please be seated.

Mr. WINGO. But I wish to make a point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas should be declared out of order immediately by the Speaker and should not be permitted to rise and address the Chair until this matter is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The only thing to do about it is to put the vote.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What point of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the gentleman can not be recognized to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The rules forbid it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He has lost his right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. But this is a free country.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He lost his right to the floor when he uttered the words taken down by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall these words be stricken from the RECORD?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the words may be again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the words.

The Clerk again reported the words.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In voting upon the—and that is the question, if I understand?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Whether or not the words shall be taken down?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The meaning is that if we vote to strike them out we question the devotion of the gentleman from Minnesota to the truth. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman better not start that sort of thing if he does not want this Congress to break up in a row. The gentleman better not start in that sort of tactics.

The SPEAKER. Has anyone moved to strike out the words?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I made the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the words be stricken out.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. MCARTHUR and several other Members demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the words of the gentleman from Arkansas be stricken from the RECORD?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 237, nays 80, answered "present" 16, not voting 96, as follows:

YEAS—237.

Alexander	Browning	Connelly, Kans.	Doremus
Anderson	Burroughs	Cooper, Ohio	Dowell
Austin	Butler	Cooper, W. Va.	Drukker
Bacharach	Campbell, Kans.	Copley	Dunn
Baer	Campbell, Pa.	Crago	Dupré
Benson	Cannon	Cramton	Dyer
Beshlin	Carter, Mass.	Currie, Mich.	Eagan
Birch	Chandler, Okla.	Dale	Edmonds
Bland, Ind.	Church	Dallinger	Elliott
Bland, Va.	Clark, Pa.	Darrow	Ellsworth
Blanton	Classon	Davey	Elston
Bowers	Cleary	Dempsey	Esch
Britt	Coady	Dewalt	Essen
Britten	Collier	Dickinson	Evans
Browne	Connally, Tex.	Dillon	Fairchild, B. L.
Fairfield	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson, A. P.	Stedman
Farr	Johnson, Wash.	Nolan	Steenerson
Fess	Jones	Norton	Stephens, Miss.
Flood	Juul	Oliver, Ala.	Stiness
Focht	Kearns	Oliver, N. Y.	Strong
Fordney	Kelley, Mich.	Olney	Sullivan
Foss	Kelly, Pa.	Osborne	Sumners
Francis	Kennedy, Iowa	O'Shaunessy	Sweet
Freeman	Kennedy, R. I.	Paige	Switzer
French	Key, Ohio	Parker, N. J.	Tague
Fuller, Ill.	Kiess, Pa.	Parker, N. Y.	Temple
Fuller, Mass.	Kinkaid	Peters	Templeton
Garland	Knutson	Platt	Thompson
Garrett, Tex.	Kraus	Porter	Timberlake
Gillett	Kreider	Powers	Towner
Glynn	La Follette	Purnell	Treadway
Good	Lampert	Quin	Van Dyke
Gould	Langley	Ramsey	Vare
Graham, Ill.	Larsen	Ramseyer	Vestal
Graham, Pa.	Lea, Cal.	Rankin	Vinson
Green, Iowa	Lehlbach	Rayburn	Voigt
Greene, Mass.	Longworth	Reed	Volstead
Griest	Lufkin	Rodenberg	Waldow
Griffin	Lundeen	Rogers	Walsh
Hadley	McArthur	Rose	Walton
Hamilton, Mich.	McCormick	Rowe	Ward
Hardy	McCulloch	Rubey	Wason
Harrison, Miss.	McFadden	Sabath	Watkins
Harrison, Va.	McKenzie	Sanders, Ind.	Watson, Pa.
Haskell	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sanders, N. Y.	Watson, Va.
Haugen	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sanford	Webb
Hawley	Madden	Saunders, Va.	Wheeler
Hayes	Magee	Schall	White, Me.
Hersey	Maher	Scott, Iowa	Williams
Hicks	Mann	Scott, Mich.	Wilson, La.
Holland	Mansfield	Scully	Wilson, Tex.
Hollingsworth	Mapes	Sells	Winslow
Hood	Mason	Siegel	Wood, Ind.
Huddleston	Merritt	Sinnott	Woods, Va.
Humphreys	Miller, Wash.	Small	Young, N. Dak.
Husted	Moore, Pa.	Smith, Idaho	Young, Tex.
Hutchinson	Moores, Ind.	Snell	Zihlman
Igoe	Morgan	Snook
Ireland	Morin	Snyder
James	Mudd	Stafford

NAYS—80

Almon	Crisp	Hayden	Rainey, J. W.
Ashbrook	Crosser	Heflin	Raker
Aswell	Delaney	Hensley	Romjue
Bankhead	Denton	Hilliard	Rouse
Barkley	Dominick	Jacoway	Sanders, La.
Beakes	Dooling	Keating	Sears
Bell	Doughton	Kehoe	Shallenberger
Blackmon	Drane	Kincheloe	Sherwood
Brand	Ferris	Lazaro	Shouse
Buchanan	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Sisson
Burnett	Gandy	Lever	Smith, T. F.
Byrnes, S. C.	Gard	Linthicum	Steagall
Byrns, Tenn.	Garner	Littlepage	Stevenson
Candler, Miss.	Garrett, Tenn.	Lobeck	Thomas
Cantrill	Godwin, N. C.	McClintic	Tillman
Caraway	Goodwin, Ark.	Mays	Walker
Carew	Gordon	Moon	Welling
Carter, Okla.	Gray, Ala.	Nicholls, S. C.	Welty
Clark, Fla.	Hamlin	Oldfield	Whaley
Claypool	Hastings	Phelan	Wright

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—16.

Barnhart	Gallivan	Montague	Polk
Davis	Houston	Neely	Pou
Dixon	Kitchin	Nelson, J. M.	Taylor, Colo.
Gallagher	Lonergan	Overstreet	Wingo

NOT VOTING—96.

Anthony	Fairchild, G. W.	Little	Rowland
Ayres	Fields	London	Rucker
Black	Flynn	Lunn	Russell
Booher	Foster	McAndrews	Shackleford
Brodbeck	Frear	McKeown	Sherley
Brumbaugh	Goodall	McKinley	Sims
Caldwell	Gray, N. J.	McLemore	Slayden
Carlin	Greene, Vt.	Martin	Slemp
Cary	Gregg	Miller, Minn.	Sloan
Chandler, N. Y.	Hamill	Mondell	Smith, Mich.
Cooper, Wis.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Mott	Smith, C. B.
Costello	Heaton	Nichols, Mich.	Steele
Cox	Heintz	Overmyer	Stephens, Nebr.
Curry, Cal.	Helm	Padgett	Sterling
Decker	Helvering	Park	Swift
Denison	Howard	Pratt	Taylor, Ark.
Dent	Hull, Iowa	Price	Tilson
Dies	Hull, Tenn.	Ragsdale	Tinkham
Dill	Johnson, Ky.	Rainey, H. T.	Venable
Donovan	Kahn	Randall	White, Ohio
Doolittle	Kettner	Reavis	Wilson, Ill.
Eagle	King	Riordan	Wise
Emerson	LaGuardia	Roberts	Woods, Iowa
Estopinal	Lesher	Robinson	Woodyard

During the calling of the roll the following occurred:

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the record clerk should be allowed to proceed without interference by Members of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The Chair was not aware of the fact——

Mr. WINGO. I was standing near the record clerk. The gentleman does not charge me with interfering, does he?

Mr. GOOD. I do not.

So the motion to strike out was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:
Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. HEATON.
Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.
Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. DENISON.
Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. GOODALL.
Mr. CARLIN with Mr. GREENE of Vermont.
Mr. DENT with Mr. KAHN.
Mr. DILL with Mr. HULL of Iowa.
Mr. DOOLITTLE with Mr. HEINTZ.
Mr. EAGLE with Mr. KING.
Mr. FIELDS with Mr. LAGUARDIA.
Mr. FOSTER with Mr. MILLER of Minnesota.
Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. MONDELL.
Mr. HAMILL with Mr. MOTT.
Mr. HELVERING with Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan.
Mr. HOWARD with Mr. PRATT.
Mr. HULL of Tennessee with Mr. REAVIS.
Mr. KETTNER with Mr. ROBERTS.
Mr. LESHER with Mr. ROWLAND.
Mr. LUNN with Mr. SLEMP.
Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. PARK with Mr. SWIFT.
Mr. PADGETT with Mr. TILSON.
Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. TINKHAM.
Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.
Mr. SIMS with Mr. WOODYARD.
Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.
Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.
Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. EMERSON.
Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. LITTLE (commencing Mar. 1, 1919; ending Mar. 5).
Mr. NEELY with Mr. SLOAN.
Mr. STEELE with Mr. FREAR.
Mr. AYRES with Mr. ANTHONY.
Mr. BLACK with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.
Mr. BOOHER with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening, and failed to hear his name when it was called?

Mr. REAVIS. I was in the Hall, but I was talking.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The name of Mr. REAVIS was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARLAND. To ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. He says he will yield to me.

The SPEAKER. He can not yield.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] should again seek to read papers to which the gentleman from Arkansas should again object, would it not be competent for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have the judgment of the House as to whether or not the papers should be read?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman before made the point of order; he did not object.

The SPEAKER. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUBEY. I rise to ask that the words of the gentleman from Iowa be taken down and reported to the House which occurred during the roll call in which he accused, as I understood him, the gentleman from Arkansas with interfering with the roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late after the business that has occurred.

Mr. RUBEY. The roll was being called, and this is the only time in which they could be taken down.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. RUBEY. I insist. He accused the gentleman from Arkansas with interfering with the count, interrupted the roll call which was being had, and I ask that those words be taken down and reported to the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the words were not taken down by the stenographer, how can they be reported?

Mr. RUBEY. They were taken down.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In reference to the demand, I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not insist upon that. I happened to be temporarily occupying the chair. Of course, the gentleman from Iowa had no right to interrupt the roll call to propound an inquiry, but the gentleman interrupted to make a point of order, and there are conditions under which that is in order. The occupant of the chair at that time did not understand him to say that the gentleman from Arkansas was interfering with the roll call. The point of order which the gentleman made was that the record clerk ought to be permitted to proceed without being interrupted, and I am frank to say I did not know what that meant, but he did not charge that the gentleman from Arkansas was interfering with the roll call.

Mr. RUBEY. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Arkansas was within several feet of the desk and was the nearest man to the clerk.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe he singled out the gentleman from Arkansas, and gentlemen ought to know that the rules forbid Members going to the tally clerk while a roll is being called or to be at the desk at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me say that the then occupant of the chair did not observe the gentleman from Arkansas at either the desk of the tally clerk or that of the reading clerk.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. NOLAN. It is not the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will take their seats. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] if he meant to charge him with interfering with the roll call, and I understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that he did not. I may have misunderstood it.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of this statement, I withdraw my request to have the words taken down, and in the interest of the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated the correct rule a while ago. These gentlemen ought to keep away entirely, everybody, from these clerks when the roll is being called. I remember at one time I raised a row here about Mr. Dalzell being inside the railing here, and I took it for granted—I was not in very good humor, anyway——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In view of that statement, I think it ought to be stated that the gentleman from Arkansas was not inside the railing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Arkansas was inside the reporters' desk.

The SPEAKER. I found, after running Mr. Dalzell out of the place where he was, that all he was doing was trying to get a copy of the resolution which was pending.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. To propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. If the roll was being called and the point was made that the roll call was being interrupted and a colloquy occurred between the Chair and Members or between Members of the House, does the language properly belong in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Why, I think it would; yes—in recording the proceedings.

Mr. MANN. The way it would occur in the RECORD would be that "During the roll call so and so happened."

The SPEAKER. Of course, once in a while, in a long time, some one undertakes to interrupt the roll call. Why, they do it——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOOD. Simply to make a statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. Referring to the question as to what I said when I made the point of order, I desire to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] called my attention to the fact that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] was standing right in front of the tally clerks. He was looking over their record. Whether he was speaking to them or not we could not tell; but under the rules he had no right to be there. It looked to us like he was interfering with the work of the tally clerks. I therefore, under that state of affairs, made the point of order, and by the time I got the attention of the Chair the gentleman from Arkansas was walking away from the place where he had been standing. Those are the facts.

The SPEAKER. The anxiety to hear the call makes them do that.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] is recognized.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether this is taken out of my time, and how much time I have left?

The SPEAKER. It is not taken out of your time. When the storm broke you had proceeded for 30 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me from what has taken place here, that we have uncovered a skeleton in the closet of the Democratic administration.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman's statement is not responsive to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. WINGO. His statement was that he had discovered a skeleton in the Democratic closet. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman is improper.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the gentleman state that in the singular or in the plural?

The SPEAKER. I do not know and do not care. It is improper, anyway.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is not a trivial affair. It is a serious matter, and I want to make just this one point: That I am endeavoring to put into the RECORD here and into the minds of Members of Congress here my side of this situation. It seems I am to be deprived from that, and I want to state to the House in connection with the matter that the Comptroller of the Currency is spending Government money to maintain a private press bureau to try his case in the papers.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. WINGO. He is not addressing himself to the question of privilege. He is submitting charges against the Comptroller of the Currency for official misconduct.

The SPEAKER. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania would leave out all extraneous matter.

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that is extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. That might be a matter for the grand jury, or it might be a matter for the House to pass censure on, but it is not a part of this question of privilege.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would like to ask some one in charge of that side of the House, then, a question. I see the Representative from North Carolina [Mr. POU], the chairman of the Rules Committee, here. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he is ready to take up the consideration of my resolution to investigate John Skelton Williams?

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that, as this session of Congress is about to come to an end, there is little chance to consider his resolution now; and I want to say to the gentleman that the only thing that he has ever done to secure consideration of his resolution, as I recollect, was to stop me once, back of the Speaker's desk there, and ask when it was going to be considered. His statement that he had been refused a hearing twice was absolutely inaccurate. So far as I am concerned, I will say that I have been ready at all times to give the gentleman a fair and respectful hearing before the Committee on Rules. I believe every other member of the Rules Committee has been ready to do this, but for some reason the gentleman contented himself with simply asking, on one occasion, and possibly two, when his resolution was going to be considered. He has never presented any material, and never brought any pressure in behalf of his resolution on the committee, and never asked for a hearing, so far as I can understand, and all this fuss is without reasonable cause. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I stated a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, during my question propounded to the chairman of the Rules Committee, that I had asked for consideration of the resolution. I asked the chairman of the Committee on Rules twice, and got no satisfactory answer. I reiterate again that I talked to Republican members of that committee and asked for the consideration of my resolution, and they informed me that they presented it to the committee and they got no consideration.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Where did they present that? That is where I get a little bit interested. I never heard of it before. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have reconsidered that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say just now that he had talked to the Republican members of the Committee on Rules, and that they had presented it to the committee, and that they had failed to receive any satisfaction. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Committee on Rules. I do not care to be involved in this, but I do not feel that, as a member of the Rules Committee, I can sit silent and permit that statement to go unchallenged. I say that neither the Republican members nor any member ever did suggest in committee consideration of the gentleman's resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will if I can.

Mr. McFADDEN. The Comptroller of the Currency has said that he was insisting on an investigation. He knew this resolution was in the Rules Committee. Will the gentleman answer whether or not he ever asked for consideration by the Rules Committee?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I never heard of it, any more than I ever heard of the other.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment, for the sake of the RECORD?

Mr. McFADDEN. I can not yield further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. He will get him. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOOD. No; you will never get him. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will not interrupt the gentleman any more if he will yield one minute.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. POU. Let us get this matter straight, once for all. I want to be perfectly fair. The only thing the gentleman has ever done was to introduce his resolution and on two occasions ask me privately when it was going to be considered. If anything more has taken place, either in or out of the committee, I do not know of it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, does the chairman of the Rules Committee expect the gentleman from Pennsylvania to hang to his coat tails? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. I do not know. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. JUUL. I realize that. I am asking the Speaker to permit me to ask the gentleman a question, if he will.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will yield for one question.

Mr. JUUL. Very well. The gentleman says he yields for a question.

Mr. SABATH. What is this private conference?

Mr. JUUL. There is no private conference.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania when and how often did the chairman of the Rules Committee notify him to appear before them and prove his charges? Was any opportunity ever given him?

Mr. McFADDEN. He never notified me, and no opportunity was given to me to appear before the Rules Committee.

Mr. SABATH. Did you ever appear before the Rules Committee?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not want to keep on yielding, the Chair will keep everybody off of him. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFADDEN. In further answer to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], I want to make this statement, that twice I called his attention to my resolution, and twice on the floor of the House I have called the attention of the House to the resolution and have set forth statements in here which it seems to me would demand consideration of that resolution. I have now asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], a member of the Rules Committee, whether or not the Comptroller of the Currency, who says that he has been pressing the administration for the facts and the consideration of this resolution, whether he asked the Rules Committee for consideration, and he says he never has. So I think that quite completes the controversy and answers the accusation of the Comptroller of the Currency in this respect—that I have been dilatory.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. McFADDEN. I dislike to be discourteous, but I have only a few moments left, and I want to complete my statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I have a little pride, as a member of the Committee on Rules, in being entirely fair.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman. I know the gentleman is fair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman did not ask me if Mr. Williams had requested an investigation under his resolution. The gentleman asked me simply if Mr. Williams had requested an investigation. I stated that, so far as I know personally, Mr. Williams made no request, either for an investigation under his resolution or for any other investigation. I saw in the papers what was stated, but, so far as I know, he made no more requests of the individual members than did the gentleman from Pennsylvania under his rule, and he made none.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. McFADDEN. Except that I did twice speak to the chairman of the Rules Committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I entered the employ of the First National Bank, of which I am now president, at the age of 16 as an office boy, janitor, and watchman.

For two years I slept in the bank at night, and received for the first two years a salary of $15 per month. In 1896 I was elected assistant cashier of that bank, drawing a salary of $40 a month. In 1899 I was elected cashier at a salary of $100 a month. The deposits of the bank at that time were $150,000, the capital was $50,000. In 1916 I was unanimously elected president of that institution. The capital stock of the bank at the present time is $100,000, the surplus $40,000, and its deposits are in excess of $950,000. [Applause.] At the last annual meeting of the stockholders and directors of that institution I was elected president of it without a dissenting vote. During the period of my connection as cashier and president the bank has paid an average dividend of 8 per cent on the capital stock. Ten years ago when the capital was increased from $50,000 to $100,000 a cash dividend of 50 per cent was declared.

In 1906 I was honored by the bankers of Pennsylvania by being elected treasurer of that association. In 1914 I was elected president of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association, the highest honor the bankers of my State could confer upon one of their number. [Applause.] The same year I was elected to Congress, and have served two terms, and last fall by an increased majority I was reelected to serve in the Sixty-sixth Congress. [Applause.] So far as my record is concerned as a citizen, a banker, and a Member of Congress, it is an open book, and I do not propose to trouble this House with a long denial of the statements that I have already denied, and which denial I do here reiterate; but I do point to the fact that the present Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams, is an unfit public officer, and from information which he has given to the public in this statement he has furnished ample proof of this fact.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McFADDEN. I can not yield further. Now, a word in regard to the letter which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], apparently representing the administration, is pressing. I want to say to this House that that letter contains vituperation and charges which if made public by me might destroy and ruin a financial institution in the United States. Evidently the Comptroller of the Currency is forcing my hand to publish that letter, and I want the gentleman to understand that I refuse positively to make that letter public. If the Comptroller of the Currency wants to do it, let him assume the full responsibility. [Applause.]

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEWALT. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and my colleague, whom I have known for many years, owes it to himself and to his bank to explain the charge that he and his family and his allied interests have borrowed more than the amount allowed by law and that the capital of the bank has been depleted thereby.

Mr. McFADDEN. I deny that statement in toto. [Applause.] I never have borrowed from that institution without giving collateral security, and I do not remember ever exceeding my legal rights in that connection. As a business man, I am connected with business enterprises, and from time to time those enterprises borrow money. I am guilty of borrowing money. I owe money at this time. I have been hounded by the Comptroller of the Currency and his examiners during the last two years until it has been almost unbearable. His examiners have called my loans from banks that were friendly, and I have been greatly embarrassed by this situation. I do not deny that fact; but as an American citizen I think I have the right to borrow money, and I disclaim the right of the Comptroller of the Currency to discredit me and destroy my credit among my friends, and I assert that he has done this, and I have furnished the proof to the Comptroller of the Currency that a bank examiner did that; and in less than two months after I made that assertion the bank examiner was discharged [applause], or at least he left the employ of the Treasury Department.

Mr. PHELAN. Which was it? Was he discharged or did he leave? There is a big difference.

Mr. McFADDEN. I could not tell you as to that. The office of the comptroller probably could tell you.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why does not the gentleman from Massachusetts go down and find out?

Mr. McFADDEN. The fact that he is no longer connected with the department is evidence that there was some criticism, or something of that sort.

At the proper time and place, before an investigating committee, I will lay before the committee such facts as will substantiate fully my reasons for the introduction of the resolution to investigate John Skelton Williams. I am a Member of the House of Representatives, and I have this resolution pending, covering the investigation of this Federal officer, and I resent his suggestion that I should voluntarily go before a committee of another body having under consideration a resolution to abolish the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, because I also had introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution for a similar purpose, and I now reiterate that I am not on trial, but I am discharging the duties of my office as a Representative in Congress to the best of my ability, and propose to continue in that same capacity for at least another two years, during which time it will be my aim and purpose, so far as lies within my power, to see that the Federal officers of this administration and Government administer their offices with fidelity to their trust. It is interesting to note in this connection, however, that there is pending before another body of this Congress, unacted upon by that body, the question of the reappointment of John Skelton Williams as Comptroller of the Currency. Notwithstanding that the partisan Democratic majority of the Banking and Currency Committee have held hearings at which the comptroller was present and testified, the Senate has failed to confirm or take any action whatever on his nomination; and this outburst from the gentleman given to the press on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, just in time to catch the Sunday morning editions, ought to be convincing proof to anyone that this gentleman realizes that his confirmation is not to be had at this session of Congress; and owing to the fact that he is a part of the present administration, I believe he fully realizes that the next Congress is controlled by the Republicans, and I desire to give notice here and now that if this present Congress refuses to consider my resolution——

Mr. WINGO. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not addressing himself to the question of privilege. He is delivering a diatribe against a public official, who is absent and can not answer, and whose letter giving the facts the gentleman and his friends will not permit to be read.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. FESS. The question of privilege has given ground for certain statements that most of us are greatly interested in. This officer is subject to impeachment. Has the gentleman considered at any time the question of asking for the passage of a resolution proposing an investigation with a view to charges for impeachment?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have; yes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order again that that has nothing to do with the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair just ruled in your favor.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; but they are still keeping up the disorderly performance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked a question. The Chair can not shape the question or the answer.

Mr. McFADDEN. It seems to me Congress should investigate that for itself, and the country should also be informed as to whether or not the claims I have set up in my resolution for investigation have any foundation or merit. This Congress and the country should know whether one of its Federal officers has been using his office——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Certainly a gentleman rising to a question of privilege can be required to confine himself to that question.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair has been trying to do now for something like two hours.

Mr. WINGO. I am trying to help the Chair by calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman is discussing a resolution directed at a public official, that has nothing to do with the attack on the character of the gentleman and his bank.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker, after all the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] was the basis of the attack made upon him by the comptroller.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield just a minute? I will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that in the opening part of the letter which Mr. Williams wrote to Mr. McFADDEN——

Mr. MANN. I am not yielding for the gentleman to read.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois has not got the floor, but the gentleman from Arkansas has the floor, and I will ask him to yield.

Mr. MANN. I am discussing the point of order, and the gentleman from Massachusetts perhaps will learn sometime something about parliamentary law.

Mr. PHELAN. I hope that I shall not learn too much, as has the gentleman from Illinois, as recent events have demonstrated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor, and the gentleman will please confine himself to his text.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel if I am permitted to have consideration of this resolution before the Rules Committee——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman proceeding further in the discussion of matters that have nothing to do with the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Did not the original resolution furnish the basis for this question of personal privilege?

Mr. WINGO. No; the gentleman read from a newspaper clipping as to the gentleman making an attack on the floor, and his defense goes, as the Chair has stated on one occasion, to the question of veracity between them; but I think the Chair is in error. The real question is, Has the comptroller attacked the man wrongfully? Has Mr. Williams attacked the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his official capacity wrongfully and charged him, as the president of a bank, with making certain loans to himself unlawfully?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the real basis of this whole controversy is the resolution which the gentleman from Pennsylvania introduced into the House.

Mr. WINGO. How can that be a question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is not a question of personal privilege by itself, but the comptroller comes back and makes some very unpleasant remarks about the gentleman from Pennsylvania growing out of this resolution.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not brought in the resolution; he is predicating his statement on what he read from the newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Partly.

Mr. WINGO. What else?

The SPEAKER. On the Williams letter.

Mr. WINGO. But he has declined to read that.

The SPEAKER. He read a part of it, but would not read the rest of it, and gave his reasons why he would not read it.

Mr. WINGO. He did not read it——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas can not force the gentleman from Pennsylvania to put in a letter on a question of personal privilege that he does not wish to.

Mr. WINGO. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not force the House to listen to charges against a public official under the guise of a question of personal privilege and refuse to permit the letter making the charges to be read.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but he has an absolute right to answer the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. WINGO. I am perfectly willing, and I think he has the right, and I was glad to have him answer the charges against him in the matter of personal privilege, but he can not answer it by charging misconduct against a public official. That does not justify the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he is guilty of the matter the comptroller charges against him. Mr. Williams might be an unfaithful public official, which he is not, but that would not determine the truthfulness or falsity of the charge he has brought against the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. That is perfectly true.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McFADDEN. There is a law on the statute books of nearly every State in the Union making it a penalty for any person to make a statement respecting a bank which would tend to cause a run by depositors on it. But the Comptroller of the Currency, the supposed guardian of the depositors of the national banks, has shown by his misconduct on his part that he has neither respect for the law nor the depositors of a bank. And what inspires this action on his part? The public good or betterment of the banking system? No, no; he was actuated solely but by one motive, and that was to try and destroy a man who dared to introduce a resolution in this body to vacate his office. He is trying to destroy me, just as he tried to destroy the Riggs National Bank a few years ago because one of its officers was his business enemy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will leave out of his speech the controversy about the Riggs National Bank.

Mr. McFADDEN. There is but one statement of fact contained in this tirade of abuse which the comptroller gives out to the press which is worthy of attention, and that reads as follows:

> The comptroller calls attention to the fact that the capital of the bank in Pennsylvania, of which Representative McFADDEN has been continuously cashier and president, shows no change in the past 10 years, but has remained at $100,000, while its surplus and undivided profits have shrunk approximately 25 per cent, while the surplus and profits of all other national banks in the country have increased 62 per cent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant to do it, but I must make a point of order, and I wish I could appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. That which presents a question of personal privilege is anything that reflects upon him in his individual capacity as a Representative in Congress. This deals with his business relations.

Mr. KREIDER. He has charged him with a criminal violation of the laws of the State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me the question of personal privilege is confined to that which reflects on the Member in his official capacity.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. McFADDEN. And I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that the article I have read by the Comptroller of the Currency attacks me as a legislator.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In so far as the gentleman confines his reply to that part of it there will be no objection whatever. Whatever the comptroller has said concerning him as a legislator he is certainly entitled to discuss.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a minute?

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has stated the case correctly. We have a way of whipping the devil around the stump here, however, about things like this by giving unanimous consent to make some remarks. Anybody might charge any Member of the House with being a liar or a horse thief, or anything of that sort, but if he does not attack him in his official capacity it does not become a question of privilege. That difficulty is gotten around frequently, as all Members who have been here any length of time know, by asking permission to address the House on a personal matter for a certain length of time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the Speaker rules on the point of order let me call his attention to this situation: The charge has been made, in effect, so far as I can get it, by the Comptroller of the Currency that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] has been actuated in his official capacity by the proceeding of the comptroller relating to the bank of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is an official. If that be the case, certainly the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a right to make a statement replying to such a suggestion by the comptroller in regard to that bank as a part of this controversy. As far as I can get, the gentleman from Pennsylvania may perhaps claim—and I do not know whether he does or not—that he has been persecuted by the Comptroller of the Currency because of his activities in this matter. The Comptroller of the Currency claims that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been actuated in his official capacity by actions of the comptroller respecting the banks and the borrowing of the gentleman from Pennsylvania there or elsewhere. It seems to me that permits the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a statement at least in reference to his bank and his connection with the bank.

The SPEAKER. The Chair permitted him to make a full statement in respect to that.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman had just started upon his statement when he was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois must be wrong, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania gave facts about the formation of the bank, how long he was there, what salary he received, the capital stock of it, that that capital stock had been increased, that he had been elected the cashier, that he had been elected the president, that he had been elected the president of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association, and it seems to the Chair that pretty much exhausts the subject, though the Chair may be mistaken.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was just stating that the charge was made by the comptroller that the capital stock of the bank had not been increased, but that its surplus had been reduced in the period of a number of years, when all other banks were either increasing their surplus or capital stock, as a reason actuating the official conduct of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in introducing this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois what that possibly has to do with the gentleman's activities as a Member of Congress?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it has anything to do with it or not, but that is the insinuation of the charge of the comptroller.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in ordinary times I would not object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania having unanimous consent to say whatever he pleased to say, in order under the rules of the House, but here it is now in the closing hours of the session of Congress, and the gentleman has risen to a question of personal privilege. It does seem to me that the gentleman should at this stage of the game confine himself to the question of personal privilege. The gentleman understands the rule, as do many gentlemen on the Republican side understand the rule, who are—well——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman understands, as well as I do, that while this matter has taken two hours, it could have been disposed of in an hour under the rules of the House, if gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House had not been constantly interrupting the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania was speaking under the guise of a question of personal privilege—I mean he was presenting a matter of personal privilege—but was violating the rules of the House; and I submit that gentlemen on the Republican side and gentlemen on the Democratic side are entitled to preserve the integrity of the rule touching personal privilege. This is the last day of the session. Ordinarily I should have no objection to the gentleman's having unanimous consent, and I would not now, if the gentleman would confine himself to 15 minutes, in which time he may say whatever he pleases about Mr. Williams.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman and myself have been discussing the point of order and using his time?

The SPEAKER. The time had already run 10 minutes over.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] be given 15 minutes in which to conclude his remarks. During which time he shall not be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Before that is done, let us understand whether it is to be on the matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired, and the gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment, so that I may renew the request that unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to proceed for 15 minutes, during which time he shall not be interrupted, and at the end of which time he shall conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan withhold his point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold that for a moment.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. PHELAN. I hope no one will object to hearing the gentleman for 10 minutes. He has been interrupted and interrupted time and time again, and I ask that he be given 10 minutes.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] demands the regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman withhold that for one minute?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withhold it for a minute.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, since the gentleman has been interrupted so much, that the gentleman have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for 10 minutes.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. In order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, but I shall then insist that we go ahead with the other business.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask if there would be objection——

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the notice served on us by the gentleman from Illinois, I object to the request made by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if there would be objection to my having five minutes. I have been charged here with trying to suppress facts, and I want to present the facts. I ask that I may have five minutes after the gentleman concludes with his 10 minutes, so as to give the facts which some gentlemen seem to want shut out.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes after the gentleman from Pennsylvania concludes his 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the gentleman from Arkansas shall have five minutes after the gentleman from Pennsylvania closes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is now a quarter of 2 o'clock on the last day of the session of Congress, with a very large amount of public business pending.

Mr. WINGO. I will withdraw my request and let the gentleman have his 10 minutes. I have no desire to obstruct business in any way, notwithstanding the charge made that I have been trying to suppress facts, when I have tried to get the facts by reading the letter complained of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, there has been no desire on my part to interfere with the rules of the House, but the Comptroller of the Currency in this statement which he put out accuses me of dilatory tactics and delay. I have been trying to present the facts in every conceivable way to show up this case. What has transpired here to-day I should think ought to prove to any man that the majority side of the House are opposed to considering the facts in this case. This is a serious matter, and I want to say here now in connection with that that I did introduce this resolution to investigate, and because I introduced that resolution the Comptroller of the Currency comes out and tries his case before the public by putting out a public statement in regard to a financial institution of this country which has nothing whatever to do with this investigation. I have attempted, and would if I were permitted here to do it, to show that from all over this country there is a demand and a suspicion in regard to this officer and a desire for his removal. It seems I am to be deprived of the right to put my testimony here before the American Congress, but I want to say to you Members here present to-day if, as the result of the great publicity which has been given to this debate to-day, any stress or financial difficulties come to the institution which is under discussion here to-day, that this has been brought about by John Skelton Williams, the Comptroller of the Currency, to avoid the real issue, I make that statement. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], when asked to put in the RECORD a letter which referred particularly to the question under consideration, used this language——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONTAGUE (reading):

The letter which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], who seems to be the personal representative of the comptroller, refers to.

Which is what I wish to bring to the attention of this House.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a matter spoken on the floor of the House does not present a question of personal privilege. Gentlemen can answer in debate, if they please.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I submit this inquiry to the Speaker: Does not a charge made by a Member of this House that a Member upon this floor in taking an official action is acting personally and not in his official capacity present a question of personal privilege?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, if the man on the floor in debate says something that is unparliamentary it can be answered——

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman on the floor has no time——

Mr. MANN. He can be called to order. The mere fact that two gentlemen in the House do not agree upon a proposition does not permit one to raise the question of personal privilege.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not a question of agreeing; it is a question of imputing to a Representative that he does not appear in his representative capacity but as the personal representative of John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency. I personally represent no interest, and no person on this floor——

Mr. MANN. It does not present a question of personal privilege; but I will say to the gentleman from Virginia there is no one in this House who would for a moment question the integrity of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not so much concerned about that as I am about the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that presents a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Virginia may be permitted to speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia be permitted to speak for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of offending the gentleman from Virginia. I may have misspoken myself, and I desire to withdraw those remarks. I certainly would be the last Member of this House to make such a remark.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is acceptable to me.

Mr. Speaker, may I be indulged for one minute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In view of the fact that the statement has been withdrawn, for which I desire to make acknowledgment, I wish to say I appear here to represent Mr. Williams as I would any other honest and honorable constituent of my district. He is a resident of my own city. I have known him for 25 years. I ask unanimous consent that the letter which was written and delivered to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] may be made a part of the RECORD and that my remarks may be extended by embracing that letter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then it is apparent to the House who desires all the facts of the case.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

THE CENSUS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1023).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] is recognized.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11984.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on H. R. 11984, to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will read the report.

The conference report was read.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings, pages 2523 to 2525, of February 1, 1919.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill as reported by this conference report is substantially the bill that was passed by the House after a lengthy discussion here running through a number of days. There were one or two questions upon which an issue was made in the House when the conference report heretofore was before the House. One of them was in regard to the employees in the office force of the Census Bureau. The objection was that it was not quite clear enough that they would be under the civil-service rules and regulations. The amendment has been agreed to which clears that up and puts the clerical force, or office force, entirely within the classified rules.

Another question was made in this House and an amendment was offered and voted upon by the House in regard to preference being given to soldiers and sailors and widows of soldiers and sailors in employment, not only of those who would be employed in this department but in other departments. That amendment was voted upon in the House and overwhelmingly carried. It was agreed to in conference by the Senate conferees and subsequent to that adopted and agreed to by the Senate.

Now, the amendments that were put on this bill by the Senate are considerable in number, but a very few of them vital. They are matters of small import, such as striking out of commas and changing the spelling of words and changing the singular to the plural, and things like that. There were some items providing for taking a more extended census than was provided for in the House bill, but all of those are stricken out, and by that a saving of $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 in the taking of this census was effected. Expenses consequent upon the office force were increased by the Senate $3,500. In conference that increase was reduced to $1,300; that is, it was cut down until it was only $1,300 more than it was in the bill as passed by the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is not necessary to continue longer in the discussion of this bill. We have discussed this bill, we have discussed the issues thoroughly, and the chief matters in disagreement are those to which I have alluded and which have been passed upon.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I heard part of the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, but not all of it. This bill went to conference a good while ago. In fact, I hold a conference report on this bill in my hand which I got at the Doorkeeper's desk this morning, dated February 1. I suppose that is the conference report they have. That is the one they are giving out to Members who come there for the conference report on this bill. I understand that is the one that is pending, is it?

Mr. HOUSTON. February 1 is the date of the report, No. 1023.

Mr. MANN. Yes. Then, why has not this bill been called up when there was time to consider it? Here is a conference report, which I assume is the one that was rejected in the House. Here is a conference report now called up on the last day of the session at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, with a very large amount of pressing business, and a great deal more that is not pressing, still pending; I will not say a great deal more that is not being pressed.

Mr. CRISP. Will my friend yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a second.

Now, I do not understand—and I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Georgia to tell us—why the conference report, over a month old, should wait to be called up in the very last hours of Congress.

Mr. CRISP. I will be delighted to answer my friend. It is not often that he is not thoroughly familiar with all of the proceedings of both branches of Congress.

This conference report was agreed to on the 1st of February. The Senate had the papers. The Senate had to act on the conference report first. The Senate agreed to it only last Saturday night. That is why it is called up to-day.

Mr. MANN. That is not a very good explanation.

Mr. CRISP. I think it is the best explanation for the House. We could not act until the Senate sent it over here, and it came last Saturday night.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly safe to say that is the general rule—and I will not say that it is the case in this instance, because I do not suppose it is—but, as a general rule, when a conference report is reported to the House by the conferees, and in one body it is held back purposely, where there is no apparent fight over the general proposition, there is a "nigger in the woodpile" somewhere, and they are afraid it will be exposed if people have a chance at it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to say this, that this report came to the House about three days ago. There was no opportunity to get the report up under the order of business that was proceeding. I made the effort to get it up the very first opportunity after it was acted on by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee I know he has been trying to get this conference report up for several days.

Mr. HOUSTON. I tried to get it up on Saturday. Let me say further that it was knocked out by another conference report which was taken up first, and this one was held up for that.

Mr. MANN. Well, after all, here is the situation: I am not going to criticize the gentleman from Tennessee, because I do not think he is subject to criticism, but here is the situation: This conference report was agreed to early in the winter, so far as the conferees were concerned. The conference report was reported to the House. Through a misunderstanding about an agreement that had been made, the House rejected the conference report and sent it back to conference. There was nothing really in dispute at that time. It was all settled then. The only question then over which there was a controversy was the reinstatement of soldiers. That was settled then. I do not criticize the gentleman from Tennessee. I have no doubt he has done the best he could, but it is mighty poor practice in the House. The conferees were appointed months ago, and there is no real controversy apparent between the House and the Senate conferees. To allow conference reports on matters that certainly ought to be disposed of, such as a census matter, to wait on the table for more than a month in order to bring them before the House within a few hours of the final adjournment is no way to legislate. No wonder a Senator of the United States has complained about the power of conferees and the power wielded through conference reports.

If I had known what was in this conference report, as doubtless I did when it was reported to the House—I had read that—I would have had plenty of time in which to forget it. It is more than a month since it was submitted to the House. I do not believe there is a Member here, outside of the gentleman from Tennessee, in charge, who knows what is in this conference report now. It is not anything fresh. It is an old matter, and it ought to have been disposed of when it was fresh.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to add, in addition to what I said in regard to this conference report when it was agreed upon by the conferees, that it went to the Senate, where the papers belonged, and had to be acted upon there first. It was held up in the Senate by the action of a distinguished Republican Senator, who had a number of amendments pending and who insisted on speaking, and under the rules of that body—and it is no purpose of mine to criticize them here, and I think that it is not right to criticize them here—it was held up, and he spoke at two different times between two and four hours each, and as soon as he got through speaking the bill came over, and at once an effort was made to get it before the House, and there has been no delay here on the matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks for a division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall make no official announcement. I suppose that will be made later. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] has charge of this conference report. The gentleman who had charge of this bill in the House when it was before the House was that able, genial, earnest, honest, brave, and noble son of Kentucky, HARVEY HELM. [Applause.] We can all shed a tear for his going, and remember his pleasing qualities, his earnest manner, and bright smile with some solace for our hearts. Another one who has gone to the reward beyond! [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] demands a division.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOUSTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition for the purpose of making a privileged report on a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up his report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is on House resolution 469, providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate as to the officers, and so forth, of the National Security League, a corporation of New York.

Mr. BRITTEN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this report applies to the investigation of the National Security League?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does.

Mr. BRITTEN. There are a great many Members of the House who want to hear it, and who ought to be here to hear it, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my point of order for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withholds his point of order, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will proceed.

HOSPITALS FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] tells me that he will withhold and yield to me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky yields to the gentleman from Florida for a moment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I submit a resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13026) entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines" the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "twenty," where it appears in the last line of section 11 of the bill as agreed upon in conference, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "nineteen."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I now question the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-seven gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Booher	Estopinal	Lunn	Shallenberger
Brumbaugh	Fairchild, G. W.	McCormick	Shouse
Caldwell	Flynn	Mason	Slayden
Campbell, Pa.	Focht	Miller, Minn.	Slemp
Carlin	Frear	Mott	Small
Carter, Mass.	Freeman	Mudd	Smith, Mich.
Cary	Glynn	Nelson, J. M.	Steele
Chandler, N. Y.	Goodall	Park	Stephens, Miss.
Church	Gray, N. J.	Powers	Stephens, Nebr.
Collier	Gregg	Price	Stevenson
Cooper, Ohio	Hamill	Ragsdale	Swift
Copley	Hamilton, N. Y.	Rainey, H. T.	Taylor, Ark.
Costello	Harrison, Va.	Riordan	Templeton
Cox	Hayes	Roberts	Van Dyke
Crago	Heaton	Robinson	Venable
Dale	Heintz	Rouse	Voigt
Decker	Helvering	Rowland	Welling
Denison	Howard	Russell	White, Ohio
Dill	Kennedy, R. I.	Sanders, N. Y.	Williams
Emerson	Lobeck	Shackleford

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado). On this roll call 349 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Your committee present the following report:

[House Report 1173, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session.]

Your committee, authorized and directed under House resolution 469 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, to investigate and make report as to the articles of incorporation, the officers, agents, and employees; membership, financial support, and names of contributors; expenditures, general character, activities, and purposes of the National Security League, a corporation of New York; and of any associated organizations connected therewith, whose activities were directly or indirectly connected with the nomination, election, or defeat of Representatives in Congress during the year 1918; and which committee was further authorized and directed to investigate and make report with reference to certain charges made by the said National Security League affecting the loyalty of Representatives in Congress; and whether or not said Security League had complied with the provisions of the law requiring the filing of expense accounts, make the following report:

Your committee has been actively engaged in the work assigned to it since the 19th of December last. The great length of time which this investigation has taken has been due largely to the evasiveness and lack of candor on the part of some of the active officers of the National Security League when they appeared as witnesses before the committee. The volume of testimony would have been reduced greatly had these witnesses shown more disposition to fully and frankly disclose their knowledge of the activities of the league. These witnesses seemed to take a pride in not being frank and in being evasive.

The testimony discloses that Mr. S. Stanwood Menken is the one who conceived the idea of forming the National Security League. This was done, he says, while listening to certain debates in the House of Commons in England on August 5, 1914.

In the light of other developments brought out in the testimony, it may be well here to note that Mr. Menken testified that he is a member of the law firm of Beekman, Menken & Griscom, and that his firm represents several corporations in New York, and also corporations in New Orleans, La.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Houston, Tex.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Lockport, N. Y.; Bloomington, Ill., and other corporations in Colorado. It is interesting also to state that the testimony shows that Mr. Menken's firm acts as counsel for a corporation known as the "American Cities." When asked in what that corporation engaged, Mr. Menken replied, "In controlling railway and public utility corporations."

Further along in Mr. Menken's testimony this question was put to him (p. 260):

"Mr. JOHNSON. Name some more corporations represented by your firm.

"Mr. MENKEN. Well, our work with corporations is usually in connection with the work of the local bankers and finance companies, and in that way we are brought in contact with them. For instance, take the Gulf & Ship Island Railroad, the Mississippi Central, Southern Lumber, the Woolworth Co., the Louisiana & Arkansas road, the Houston Gas Co.—these different companies, we come in contact with them and act in counsel with them."

Again Mr. Menken states in his testimony (p. 260):

"We represent also the Liverpool, London and Globe insurance corporations, * * *."

He also testified that his firm represents "some sugar companies," and also the "Penn-Seaboard Steel Co."

Mr. Menken further testified in regard to the Liverpool, London and Globe (p. 261):

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know what their holdings are in the way of securities?

"Mr. MENKEN. No; all we do is to attend to their property interests in New York City.

"Mr. JOHNSON. You have neither knowledge nor information concerning its assets?

"Mr. MENKEN. No; nor have I ever been consulted about that. That is attended to by the finance board.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Go ahead about some others—about other estates.

"Mr. MENKEN. I represent the executors of the Cutter estate, which is a large estate here.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know of what that estate consists, in the main?

"Mr. MENKEN. Yes; it consists of bonds and stocks and a good deal of real estate.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know of what corporations the stocks and bonds are?

"Mr. MENKEN. No; I do not. Of course, my clerks would know that. That comes up in connection with the inheritance taxes. Technically I ought to know, but I really don't pay any attention to that. I have a man that attends to that specially. We are never consulted about the investments in these estates, because we don't have anything to do with investments. We are lawyers, not bankers.

"Mr. JOHNSON (after a pause). Go ahead with the naming of the concerns that you represent.

"Mr. MENKEN. We represent some sugar companies.

"Mr. JOHNSON. What sugar companies?

"Mr. MENKEN. Really, I couldn't tell you the names of them particularly. I know the clients when they come in. We represent the Penn-Seaboard Steel Co.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Have you gotten away from sugar entirely now?

"Mr. MENKEN. Yes. There are a couple of important sugar companies. If you want a list, I can give you a list.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; let us not leave sugar so quickly. Do you know the names of the representatives of any of these sugar clients?

"Mr. MENKEN. Yes; this was a company formed by Bertron Griscom & Co., also clients of ours—a banking house.

"Mr. JOHNSON. In what way—are they sugar merchants?

"Mr. MENKEN. They raise sugar in Cuba.

"Mr. JOHNSON. They are Cuban sugar raisers?

"Mr. MENKEN. Yes, sir. I have a tobacco client——

"Mr. JOHNSON (interposing). Do they refine at all?

"Mr. MENKEN. I think not.

"Mr. JOHNSON. How is their sugar brought to the United States?

"Mr. MENKEN. By steamer.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; but I meant in what form—crude?

"Mr. MENKEN. Yes; crude sugar.

"Mr. JOHNSON. To whom is it delivered here? Do you know?

"Mr. MENKEN. I have no idea. I have never been consulted about it.

"Mr. JOHNSON. What is the name of that sugar company to which you have just referred?

"Mr. MENKEN. I think it is called the Cuban Sugar Mills, if I am not mistaken. I will be very glad to submit a list of my clientele, if you want it, and you can make it part of the record.

"Mr. JOHNSON. We will be glad to have it to look over.

"Mr. MENKEN. I will be very glad to submit it.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know who any of the stockholders in this country are, of that concern?

"Mr. MENKEN. Yes.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Who are some of them, please?

"Mr. MENKEN. Mellett, Rowe & Hagan.

"Mr JOHNSON. Where is that concern?

"Mr. MENKEN. In New York City, 52 William Street.

"Mr. JOHNSON. And another?

"Mr. MENKEN. J. G. White, Exchange Place.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Another?

"Mr. MENKEN. I don't like to mention the names of clients, for I fear I might make an error. People would object to it, and I will be very glad to furnish you the details."

The above quotations from Mr. Menken's testimony are made for the purpose of showing at least the possible motive which may first have aroused in him the interest which culminated in the formation of the National Security League. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Menken is a member of a firm of lawyers which represents so many large corporations in this country and abroad, during his stay in London he published a newspaper; for what purpose your committee does not know, but it is hardly reasonable to think it was for a direct profit from the publication itself. Shortly after his return to the United States he set about the organization of the league. One of those with whom he first talked relative to the matter was Mr. Frederic R. Coudert, a prominent lawyer in New York, in regard to whom Mr. Menken testified as follows (p. 268):

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know what class of clients he has—what particular interests?

"Mr. MENKEN. He happens to represent a great many foreign interests. He is a specialist on maritime law. He has had the honor of representing foreign governments in controversies.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know what governments?

"Mr. MENKEN. I have heard he represents Great Britain, France, and Russia in international matters.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. JOHNSON. You have just spoken of this gentleman representing some British clients, or the Government itself. Which is it?

"Mr. MENKEN. I think Mr. Coudert is counsel for the British ambassador.

"Mr. JOHNSON. And was at the breaking out of the war in 1914?

"Mr. MENKEN. I don't know about that.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know when his employment as counsel for the British ambassador began?

"Mr. MENKEN. I really couldn't say. I know little of his private affairs. Henry L. Stimson was another man I talked to.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Do you know whether or not he represents, either directly or indirectly, any other Government, or whether he has or not since the outbreak of the war any foreign government?

"Mr. MENKEN. Why, Mr. Coudert has a very big international practice. I have heard of him representing South American countries and French and Russian, and I think perhaps Italian interests."

It will be impracticable in a report of the length to which of necessity this must be confined to take up all of the "foreign entanglements" of the originators of the National Security League. However, sight must not be lost of the fact that it was conceived in London by an attorney representing sugar, steel, and other large interests both in this country and abroad, and that at its very inception in New York others representing like interests are found among those who became the most active in its organization; and, next, when the organization had thrown aside its pretense of being engaged only in "preparedness," and had reached the real purpose of its undertaking, Mr. Charles D. Orth was selected to take charge of its real activities, which unquestionably were political in nature, as will be shown later in this report.

The testimony shows that Mr. Orth is a member of a New York firm dealing in sisal, from which the farmer's binding twine is made, and who, according to his own statement before a Senate investigating committee, had been engaged in trying to form a combination to increase the price of this product.

Mr. Orth's firm not only has an office in New York, but it has one in London; and Mr. Orth himself admitted that he traveled all over Europe in the interest of his sisal business. Is it not a singular coincidence that the National Security League was conceived in London, nursed to strength and power in New York by foreign interests, and later used in the elections by the same interests?

The principal meeting looking to the organization of the league was held at the Bankers' Club, 120 Broadway, New York City (p. 20 of the record). Mr. Menken was made the first president of the league, but it seems he gave out a newspaper interview which was not entirely satisfactory to the rest of the league, and he resigned, and Mr. Charles E. Lydecker became president in his stead.

Coincident with the organization of the league the thought of properly financing it commenced, and of coupling it with names in which the people of the country would have confidence. Hon. Joseph H. Choate, whom Mr. Menken described as "first citizen of New York and ambassador to Great Britain," was made honorary president. Upon his death Hon. Elihu Root was selected in his stead as honorary president.

Judge Alton B. Parker, prominent throughout the country, was selected as honorary vice president.

No doubt these two gentlemen were selected for several reasons. One reason was to give the league the appearance of being nonpartisan in politics, Mr. Root being a Republican and Judge Parker a Democrat. No doubt another reason was that the league desired the use of their names for the purpose of conjuring up money with which to carry on its contemplated activities.

Among the large subscriptions made to the National Security League is one of $150,000 made by the Carnegie Corporation, to be paid in three equal installments of $50,000 each. At the time testimony concerning it was taken, two of the subscriptions, amounting to $100,000, had been paid; another is that of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, having large interests both here and abroad; another is Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, whose large interests are not confined to this side of the Atlantic.

Among the large contributors to the league are:

Nicholas F. Brady, 54 Wall Street, director in 50 large corporations, many of them making excessive profits on account of the war. Example: Director United States Rubber Co., excess war profits, $5,494,531	$4,500
William P. Clyde, 61 Broadway, New York, director in many railroads and other large corporations	1,250
Arthur Curtis James, director in 42 corporations, many of them manufacturing war munitions; vice president and director of Phelps, Dodge Co.—excessive profits over prewar profits, $14,531,864	29,750
Ridley Watts, 44 Leonard Street, director in many large corporations	15,000
Joseph H. Choate, deceased, 52 Wall Street, formerly ambassador to England, trustee New York Life Insurance Co	4,750
Mortimer L. and Jacob H. Schiff, 52 William Street, New York, of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; connection well known. Director in the Wells Fargo Co., Western Union Telegraph Co., Union Pacific R. R. Co., and many other railroad and navigation companies	3,250
Emerson McQuillan, 40 Wall Street, director in 14 large corporations	4,250
George W. Perkins, 71 Broadway, New York, director in United States Steel Co., International Harvester Co., International Mercantile Marine Co., New York Trust Co., and eight other large corporations, including the Erie Railroad and other railroads	750
H. H. Rogers, 26 Broadway, New York, director in the Standard Oil Co., Amalgamated Copper Co., United Metals Co., and many other large corporations making excessive profits during the war	1,000
W. K. Vanderbilt, Grand Central Terminal, New York, director of 38 large corporations and with his brother director of more railroads than any other capitalist	250
P. W. Vanderbilt, New York, director with his brother in 38 large corporations	750
Clarence H. Mackey, 253 Broadway, director of Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., president of Commercial Cable Co., the North American Telegraph Co., and many other large corporations	1,000
Eversley Childs and William Hamlin Childs, 17 Battery Place, New York, director United States Leather Co., Union Tannery Co., Central Leather Co., Argentine Central Leather Co., and many other large corporations. The Central Leather Co. alone making excessive profits over normal profits of $12,016,397	7,500
B. M. Baruch, whose former financial connections are well known	6,500
James B. Ford, 1770 Broadway, director in 14 large corporations; director in the United States Rubber Co., whose excessive profits over normal profits were over five and one-half million dollars in a single year. Director in the United States Tire Co. and many war-profiting corporations	1,000
Simon, Murray, and Daniel Guggenheim, 120 Broadway, New York, directors and controllers in American Smelting Securities Co., American Smelting & Refining Co., Chile Copper Co., and many other large corporations making excessive profits from the war. Directors in American Smelting & Refining Co., whose excessive profits over normal profits amounted to $12,258,082, or more than double	3,750
T. Coleman Du Pont, 120 Broadway, in "Who's Who," written by himself, president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., 1902–1905, president of Central Coal & Iron Co., McHenry Coal Co., Union National Bank, National Surety Co., Empire Trust Co., and many other large corporations	9,000
Charles Deering (Chicago, Ill.), director in the International Harvester Co. and many other large corporations	1,550
J. P. Morgan, 23 Wall Street, New York, director in the United States Steel Corporation, whose net profits in 1917 were $478,204,343 as against $46,520,467 in 1914; also, director of many railroad companies and insurance companies	2,300
American Exporters' & Importers' Association, New York	2,000
John D. Rockefeller, 26 Broadway; Mr. Rockefeller's large financial connections are too well known to enumerate	35,000
Carnegie Corporation: Andrew Carnegie, president; Elihu Root, vice president; holdings in United States Steel Corporation; income over $6,000,000 per year	100,000
Anna B., William H., and Mrs. William H. Bliss	2,500
Henry C. Frick, director of United States Steel Corporation, Chicago & North Western Ry. Co., Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe R. R., Mellon National Bank, and many other large corporations	3,500
James Stokes, multimillionaire and director in a number of large corporations	1,500
Charles Hayden, 25 Broadway, New York, director of 26 large corporations, among them copper companies that made exorbitant war profits; director in Utah Copper Co., prewar profits, $8,678,491; war profits, $32,005,240; also director in Chino Copper Co., prewar profits, $1,772,421; war profits, $12,527,948	2,500
R. B. Price, United States Rubber Co	$700
J. G. White, 43 Exchange Place, New York; Municipal & General Securities Co., London, England; Cardenas American Sugar Co.; Philippine Ry. Co	2,000

The officers of the league and their connections with large corporations are as significant as that of the large contributors to the National Security League.

"S. Stanwood Menken, representative of large corporations and for many years attorney for the London Globe Insurance Co., London, England.

"Alexander J. Hemphill, 140 Broadway, New York, chairman of the finance committee, director in over 20 large corporations, among them the Guaranty Trust Co., Adams Express Co., American Security Co., California Railroad & Power Co., Fidelity & Casualty Co., the Electric Bond & Share Co., Hudson Manhattan Railroad Co., United States Gas & Electric Corporation, Utah Security Co., and many other corporations.

"Franklin Q. Brown, director of National Security League, 33 Pine Street, New York; director in American Beet Sugar Co., American Light & Traction Co., Augusta-Aiken Railway & Electric Co., Columbia Railway, Gas & Electric Corporation; also director in Electric Properties Corporation, Lima Locomotive Works, and Pierre-Marquette Railway Co.

"Robert Bacon, member of executive committee of the National Security League, one of the directors of the United States Steel Corporation, whose war profits are over $400,000,000 more than they were in the year 1914.

"H. B. Harris, director in the National Security League, New York; director of the American Russian Chamber of Commerce, director in the Haitian American Corporation, and many others.

"Frederick H. Coudert, New York, member of the executive committee of the National Security League; vice president of the Chapultepec Land Improvement Co., the Equitable Trust Co., Federation of the French Alliances in the United States, National Surety Co. of New York, Pennsylvania and Delaware Oil Co.

"Franklin Remington, 233 Broadway, New York, secretary of the National Security League until recently; director of the Great Western Chemical Co., the Western Power Corporation, Employees Mutual Insurance Co., and many other large corporations."

The name of the league and the military title of its president seem not to be the result of accident, but rather of design; as later both were used to deceive the public. Plate matter—frequently called "boiler plate"—was sent by the league to 1,700 or 1,800 newspapers scattered throughout the land. All of this plate-matter literature bore the name of "Colonel" Lydecker, and he was referred to constantly throughout the literature as "colonel." This "colonel" never smelled gunpowder. His title of "colonel" is an empty one, having been bestowed by the mere ipse dixit of the governor of New York State. When this league was in the midst of its activities the United States Government had formed many boards and commissions for the purpose of promoting war activities. Each of these boards and commissions was given a name that would show to the public that it was a creature of Congress, charged with the performance of certain public governmental functions. It is not unreasonable to conclude that the word "national" was put into the name of this league for the purpose of having at least some part of the public believe that the league was a Government organization.

The league, in so far as it shows on the surface, is made up of Mr. Lydecker, Mr. West, Mr. Orth, and Mr. Harvey, the publicity agent. Let us see who these four men are.

Lydecker is a practicing lawyer in New York. When asked to state who his clients are, he declined to answer further than by stating that his clientele was a "private" one.

Harry L. West, the executive secretary, immediately prior to his becoming such, was a well-known lobbyist around the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. Charles D. Orth is an importer of sisal, from which the farmers' binder twine is made.

Mr. E. L. Harvey, the publicity agent, has been described in these hearings as being a young newspaper man without a job.

It must be taken as a matter of course that the people throughout the country would not subscribe money for the purpose of carrying on the activities of a league whose principal officers were a lawyer with a "private" clientele, a professional lobbyist, a sisal importer directly interested in the price of binder twine, and an everyday newspaper reporter, whose mission finally came to be that of critic of the patriotism of such men as ROYAL C. JOHNSON, who left a seat in Congress, volunteered in the Army as a private, went to France, leaving a wife and two small children behind; was severely wounded in the Battle of the Argonne Forest; while he, Mr. Harvey, a much younger man than Mr. JOHNSON, with a wife, but no children, remained safely stowed away on the sixth floor of a large building at 19 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City.

It became necessary, in order to successfully deceive the public, in more ways than one to have the use of the good names of Mr. Root and Mr. Parker.

Upon entering the league's offices in New York one would see only Mr. West, the lobbyist; Mr. Orth, the sisal importer, and Mr. Harvey, the "newspaper reporter without a job." But if the curtain were only pulled back, in addition to the interests heretofore enumerated, the hands of Rockefeller, of Vanderbilt, of Morgan, of Remington, of Dupont, and of Guggenheim would be seen, suggesting steel, oil, money bags, Russian bonds, rifles, powder, and railroads.

No sooner had the league thrown off the mask of "preparedness" and was out actively in the political campaign than it made one great jump, and that was from New York to Chicago. At this time Mr. Orth to it added the harvester and packing interests, street railroad and other public-service corporations, some of which were the clients of the founder of the league.

Immediately the National Security League had found its way to Chicago it was taken into camp by a faction of one of the big political parties at that place, and was used by that faction to further the election of its own candidates for office and to defeat other candidates who did not belong to that particular faction. Some of these candidates were denounced by the Chicago branch of the league in most vigorous terms. They were charged, without reservation or restriction, as being disloyal to the United States; yet after some of these who had been so charged had been nominated in the primary elections their defamers became their supporters.

But the Chicago branch of the league was used for a purpose other than the one just mentioned. Representative KING, of Illinois, who was a candidate for reelection to Congress at the last November election, was called before a committee of the Chicago branch of the league, and when there was tauntingly confronted with a speech which he had made in Congress attacking the methods of the packers. At the same time he was asked by one of the committee, a Mr.

Moses, why he had used the name of J. Pierpont Morgan in his speech. The ostensible purpose of calling Mr. KING before that committee was to ask explanations of him concerning his votes upon certain matters which had been before Congress. However, the real object was disclosed when he was asked by the spokesman of that committee how he stood on the question of Government ownership of railroads.

Representative NIELS JUUL, also a Member of Congress from the State of Illinois, was a candidate for reelection. He, too, was summoned before this committee of the Chicago branch of the league. For a number of years Mr. JUUL had been a member of the Illinois State Senate, and, while such, opposed the greed of the corporations which were represented by men in the Chicago branch of the league. They sought the defeat of Mr. JUUL for reelection to Congress. Therefore Mr. Orth, who was in charge of the league's political bureau, had issued a chart wherein eight matters which had been before Congress were set out, and upon which chart the vote of each and every Member of Congress was shown. Those who had voted as Mr. Orth, the sisal importer, and Mr. West, the lobbyist, felt they should have voted, were marked as having voted "right," whereas, upon the other hand, those who had voted contrary to the views of Mr. Orth and Mr. West were marked upon the chart as having voted "wrong." The chart had no "wrong" votes charged up to Mr. JUUL; but, as it was apprehended that Mr. JUUL might not be a tool in the hands of those who desired to elect a Congress willing to do their bidding, and, as the opposition to him could not be based upon the votes in the chart, they got up another set of questions for him. Of course they must have previously looked through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to see how Mr. JUUL had voted, in order to prepare a new set of questions, and upon those questions, according to their notions, he had voted wrong. For that reason, and the fact that he belonged to an opposing political faction, he was opposed.

It seems quite conclusive, from a study of the whole situation, that the chart which was gotten up by Mr. Orth and by Mr. West was most adroitly and cunningly done. One of the big items to come in the days of reconstruction following the war—and with which the next Congress must deal—is the income tax. Out of the 435 Members of the House of Representatives Mr. Orth's chart gave credit for full patriotism to only 47 Members. Out of the 47, 45 represented congressional districts along the Atlantic seaboard, where the income tax gathers the largest revenue.

Mr. Menken, who sat in the House of Commons in England and conceived the idea of forming the National Security League in America, stated in his testimony before the committee that he wished to see the income tax lessened at the upper end and enlarged at the lower end. He even went so far as to say that he thought an income tax should be imposed upon every man's income, even down to the one who worked for a dollar a day.

The league's "congressional chart" was made up of eight measures which had been before Congress. The first related to the McLemore resolution; the second to the Kahn amendment to the Hay Army bill; the third to the Brandegee amendment to the Hay-Chamberlain Army bill; the fourth to section 56, providing for a volunteer reserve army wholly under Federal control; the fifth to a motion to recommit the naval appropriation bill; the sixth to the Cooper amendment; the seventh to the declaration of war against Germany; and the eighth to the Kahn amendment to the conscription act.

As already stated, that chart was gotten up principally by Mr. Orth. Prior to that time he had never been called upon to construe legislation, nor had he ever been connected with parliamentary or legislative procedure in any way. Mr. Orth was permitted by the league to select such legislative matters which had been before Congress as, in his judgment, would best serve the purposes of the league; to place his construction upon both the legal and practical effects of such legislation; to pass his opinion on the votes of Members of Congress thereon as to whether such votes were "right" or "wrong"; and to prepare a chart showing: First, the legislative matters; second, the construction of the laws incorporated in the chart; third, the vote of all Congressmen on the same; and fourth, his expression of opinion as to whether or not such votes were "right" or "wrong." This chart was used as the basis of a contest by the National Security League for and against the reelection of Members of Congress.

Immediately following the issuance of the chart there was issued by the National Security League certain matters for the press, which they called a "digest" of the chart, which stated, in substance, that the chart was issued for the purpose of securing the election of "loyal" men to Congress.

So far as the testimony discloses the only persons who saw this chart before it was given to the public were Orth, West, and Lydecker. Hon. Elihu Root, honorary president of the National Security League, and who stated that he was not connected with the activities of the league, testified that he had no knowledge of the issuance of the chart, nor of the fact that it was contemplated, until he received a copy of it through the mail. He further said that in some respects the chart was misleading and was incorrect, and had done injustice to Members of Congress, and that, had he known such a chart was contemplated, it would not have met with his approval.

Hon. Alton B. Parker, honorary vice president of the league, testified that he had not actively concerned himself with the activities of the league; that he knew nothing of the contemplated action of the league in issuing the chart until after it had been given to the public; that immediately upon it being called to his attention he protested that it was unfair and unjust and demanded that it be corrected. He was unable to secure a correction of it, but his efforts were productive of vital changes being made in a similar chart sent out regarding the votes of Senators, which was issued subsequently.

Your committee reports that Mr. Orth, to whom the duty of preparing and distributing this chart was assigned, was utterly unqualified for such work; that the eight measures which he selected in the chart as vital tests were in many instances measures which reflected party policies rather than national issues of patriotic import; that six of the eight measures antedated our entrance into the war, in some instances more than a year. But little concern, if any, was given to the records of Congressmen made after the United States became a party to the war. This chart was distributed by the National Security League to individuals, newspapers, and political committees.

Mr. Orth testified that the league selected 169 congressional districts in the United States in which to be "active," and 47 districts in which to be "intensely active"; yet each and every one of the officers of the league swore positively and repeatedly that the league did not enter politics. They qualified that statement, however, by saying that they were not in "partisan" politics. If their real and ulterior motives have been ascertained, they were not in "partisan" politics in the common acceptation of the word. In other words, they were neither for nor against a candidate because he was a Democrat; neither were they for or against a man because he was a Republican. As a matter of fact, the league cared nothing whatever for a candidate's party affiliation. What chiefly concerned them was how his attitude would affect certain interests that would be the subject of legislation by Congress during the reconstruction period. The active agencies in the league was not concerned about the politics of the party in power so long as they felt "the interests" would be protected. What they wanted is disclosed both by the "questionnaire" which they sent out to candidates for Congress and by the business interests of those who furnished the money with which they operated.

By the "questionnaire" the league assumed to itself the right to pass upon a candidate's ability and other qualifications for a seat in Congress, leaving nothing to the people themselves. Particularly were they anxious to know his attitude in the past, as well as for the future, concerning the reconstruction matters to which reference has just been made. They sought either to elect or defeat candidates for Congress from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Mr. Orth, the importer of sisal, from which the farmer's binder twine is made, with an office in New York and another in London; and Mr. West, the lobbyist, sat down in New York and selected eight questions which were to determine the fitness of a member for reelection. Those eight questions, as already stated, were really not selected for that purpose. Those eight measures were selected out of one hundred and twenty odd war measures, because those eight better served their purposes than did any of the remaining ones of equal or greater importance.

Mr. Orth, as a sisal importer, from which the farmer's binder twine is made, laid much stress upon the McLemore resolution and the Cooper amendment. Both of these propositions related to shipping; and Mr. Orth, the sisal importer, was directly interested in shipping.

Mr. Menken, who sat in the House of Commons in England and conceived the idea of forming the National Security League in America, is attorney for Cuban sugar interests and for large steel-manufacturing interests. Consequently he, too, was interested in shipping. It is not difficult to see how Mr. Orth, the importer of sisal, from which the farmer's binder twine is made, and Mr. Menken, whose clients are sugar importers and steel exporters, should be interested in those two shipping propositions and should desire to incorporate them in the chart. As illustrating Mr. Orth's unfitness to prepare a chart which passed on the loyalty and judgment of Members of Congress, attention is called to the fact that Senator Root and Judge Parker, honorary officers of the league, testified that the construction placed upon some of the legislation comprehended in the chart was unjustified and misleading, and resulted in injustice to Members of Congress and to the public, which is entitled to true conditions in determining the fitness of public servants.

As hereinbefore indicated, the real purpose of the league was to elect a Congress the majority of which would entertain their views on the great questions of reconstruction which follow the war, and that conclusion is not too far-fetched when the whole record has been read. The interests herein referred to sought to supersede the people themselves throughout the country and tell them who should and who should not be elected to Congress.

The league had to have money with which to operate. The parent institution at New York collected $619,165.28 prior to September 30, 1918. The branch at Chicago collected about $57,000. It is known that the Philadelphia branch collected a large amount, and so did other branches throughout the country; but of the $619,165.28 collected by the parent house in New York with which to finance the activities of the league $95.40 out of every $100 was collected in New York. The league called that its "general fund." When Mr. Orth commenced his political activities as chairman of the congressional committee of the league another fund was collected for that particular activity. Just here the question may be asked, If the league is not in politics, why was a special fund collected and put into the hands of Mr. Orth as chairman of the congressional committee of the league? It is interesting to note, however, that out of all the money collected by Mr. Orth for this particular activity all of it was collected in New York except $38.

The following statement of disbursements by the National Security League is inserted in this report for the purpose of showing how the expenditures increased until the last of September preceding election and how they decreased immediately following the time after it was too late for them to be advantageously used in election contests. These expenditures commenced to increase as the election approached; but when the 1st of October arrived and the fight had virtually been made by the league the expenses then commenced to decrease.

The expenditures of the parent institution of the National Security League at New York between July 8, 1915, at which time the active work of the league appears to have begun, and December 31, 1915, were $38,181.59.

The amount expended from January 1, 1916, to December 31, 1916, was $94,840.43.

The amount expended from January 1, 1917, to December 31, 1917, was $111,324.59.

The amount expended from January 1, 1918, to December 31, 1918, embracing what was spent by Mr. Orth from his congressional campaign fund, amounted to $235,667.56.

The expenditures of 1916 increased over the expenditures of 1915, considering time and amount, by 12 per cent; the expenditures of 1917 increased over the expenditures of 1916 by about 12 per cent; the expenditures of 1918, the year of the election, increased over the expenditures of 1917 by 112 per cent; the expenditures of 1918 increased over the expenditures of 1916 by 148 per cent; and the expenditures of 1918 increased over the expenditures of 1915, considering time and amount, by 194 per cent.

Both their greatest activity and their greatest expenditures were shortly prior to the elections of 1918. Would it not appear that the league engaged in politics, when at the time their activities were greatest and their expenditures were largest, "preparedness," which was their avowed purpose, was no longer a live question in this country? At that time Congress had appropriated billions of dollars for the work of "preparedness"; cantonments had been built in the various sections of the country; great quantities of food supplies had been gathered together; millions of tons of shipping had been built; all of our coast defenses had been strengthened; and nearly 2,000,000 American soldiers were in France.

It is therefore unbelievable that in view of all these facts that the aim of the National Security League was "preparedness" rather than political? It is just as conclusive for what purpose the league was in politics. The congressional committee of the National Security League, of which Mr. Orth was the head, was not formed until June, 1918, which was only six months before the recent congressional elections. If "preparedness" was the purpose of the league, why was the congressional committee of the league formed so late as June, 1918, when everything that human endeavor and money could do had been done along the line of "preparedness"? It is obvious that Congress at that time had done everything possible in the way of preparedness, yet at that time we find Mr. Orth collecting money for a "special fund" to be used by himself as chairman of the congressional committee of the league.

Among the papers of Mr. Orth was found a most interesting one. That paper had the States listed in alphabetical order. Attention to that list is invited. It is to be found on page 2066, part 30, of the hearings, February 20, 1919. The first State treated in that paper was Alabama. Opposite the names of some of the candidates the word "fight" was written. There was no such notation opposite the names of other candidates. Does not that clearly and conclusively show that some were to be fought by the league and that others were not?

The next State on that list was Arizona. Opposite the name of one of the candidates the word "fight" is written. Nothing stands opposite the name of the other.

Arkansas is the next State on Mr. Orth's alleged nonpolitical list. Immediately under the name "Arkansas" in brackets is the following notation: "(No Republican nominees, 1918.)" That is significantly meaningless if the National Security League was not in politics.

Colorado is the next State on the list. By the use of the word "fight," it is shown that some of the candidates were to be fought. Opposite the name of another, instead of the word "fight," was the notation "no fight." Still they were not in politics.

California is the next State on Mr. Orth's list. In that State we find the notation "no fight" used six times opposite the names of candidates. Also opposite some of the names in California are found the two letters "N. M." Mr. Orth explains that those two letters should not be "N. M.," but should be "N. N.," meaning "no nomination." Still they were not in politics.

In California the word "fight" is used opposite the names of two candidates.

In Montana the word "fight" is opposite the name of one candidate, while the words "no fight" are opposite the name of another.

In North Dakota the words "no fight" are opposite the names of two candidates. In two districts the words "N. M." are used, meaning, as heretofore explained, "no nomination." Still they were not in politics.

In South Dakota two men had the word "fight" written opposite their names. One of these was ROYAL C. JOHNSON, who at the time was at the battle front in France.

In Nevada one was marked "no fight." There were no notations opposite the names of any of the others in that State.

In Illinois the notation "fight" appears opposite the names of 11 of the candidates. The words "no fight" appear opposite the names of 9. Still they were not in politics.

In Indiana the notation "no fight" appears opposite the names of nine, while the word "fight" appears opposite the names of four.

The entire list of States is treated just as those above set forth. Still they were not in politics. If the league had certain men designated which they were to "fight," and others which they were "not to fight," can they truthfully insist that they were not in politics? Yet all active officials of the league except one who went upon the stand testified that they were not in politics. Mr. Orth's explanation of the words "fight" and "no fight" and "no nomination" is ridiculous in the light of the testimony before the committee. His explanation is found on page 2065 of the hearings, part 30, and reads as follows:

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE (INC.),
CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
New York, February 12, 1919.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON, Chairman,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: With respect to the evidence from our records which Congressman SAUNDERS asked us to file (p. 732, lower part), I believe that there is an error in the record. My recollection is that what Congressman SAUNDERS really asked for and what he wanted was a copy of the brown sheets from which I was reading at the time. These are inclosed herewith.

Explanation of the various notations follows:

"Fight" was a key word, indicating that an intensive educational campaign was indicated by the record.

"No fight" was a key word, indicating that no intensive educational campaign was indicated by the record, or because the candidate whose record was bad had not been renominated, or for such other reasons as the tabulation itself makes obvious.

"N. M." indicates "No nomination"—a slip of the pen in using "N. M." instead of "N. N."

"No contest" indicates the same as "No nomination."

"Any opponent?" (Missouri sheet only) was intended to question the correctness of our information to the effect that there had been "No nomination" in the districts in question.

"(?)" indicated further inquiry necessary.

Very truly, yours.
CHAS. D. ORTH.

It is interesting to note here that when the word "fight" was being used by Mr. Orth in his alleged nonpolitical records, the expenditures of the league had increased 194 per cent over the expenditures of 1915, and that the amount of money spent by the league during that year had grown from $38,181.59 in 1915, when "preparedness" was really up, to $235,667.56. The smaller expenditure was made when, at least for appearance' sake, they were adhering to their preparedness avowals, while at the time of the larger expenditures they had thrown those avowals to the winds and were actually in politics, notwithstanding all these denials.

As soon as Mr. Lydecker saw that the testimony disclosed that the league was in politics, he undertook to prejudice the public mind against the anticipated report of your committee by sending a telegram to the chairman of the committee, reading as follows:

NEW YORK, February 5, 1919.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON,
Room 377, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Please register distinct protest of the National Security League at the failure and refusal to give notice of the resumption of sessions of the committee of the House of Representatives of which you are chairman, and the taking of testimony without opportunity given to the league to cross-examine witnesses. The league requests that opportunity be given to rebut any testimony which has been given or may be given in the absence of a representative of the National Security League. In view of the attempt to distort a great patriotic movement on the part of the thousand constituting the National Security League into a selfish organization, the officers of the league are obliged to take official notice and action. CHARLES LYDECKER, President.

The chairman of the committee answered that telegram as follows:

FEBRUARY 6, 1919.

Col. CHARLES LYDECKER,
President National Security League.

Your telegram is one of complaint at the committee for not giving you notice of the resumption of its hearings, and also for refusing to permit you to cross-examine witnesses. When your telegram was sent, no witnesses had been introduced except officers of your league. I can not possibly see why you can complain that you did not have an opportunity to cross-examine yourself and the other officers of your league who have testified. You, yourself, were on the witness stand several days, and so were several of the officers of your league. If you had any desire to cross-examine yourselves, you had ample opportunity to do so. The committee is not giving formal notice of its hearings to anybody, taking it for granted that everybody who may be interested will exhibit enough interest to ascertain when the hearings will be held. You know of your own knowledge that the hearings have been conducted from day to day when it was at all practicable to do so. You, as president of the league, and Mr. West, as executive secretary of the league, were present at the hearing in Chicago, which was the last one preceding the day on which your telegram was sent. Your telegram indicates that you had knowledge of the fact that a hearing was to be had on the day when your telegram was sent. You are within a few hours' ride from Washington and easily could have gotten here for the afternoon session of the committee on the day your telegram was sent.

The investigation is continuing to-day. The honorable chairman of your league, Hon. Elihu Root, is testifying to-day. Your telegram implies that you would like to be present for the purpose of cross-examining him. I think I can safely say for the committee that it was not anticipated that the league contemplated cross-examining themselves.

Very truly, yours,
BEN JOHNSON, Chairman.

There was no doubt in the minds of your committee that Lydecker entertained the hope that in that telegram he could make a statement that would go unchallenged by the committee; and that he would then, through Harvey, circulate it to the public with the view of having it believed that the representatives of the league were really "prevented" from being present at the hearings. The conclusion to that effect, which was reached by the committee immediately upon the receipt of the telegram, turned out to be correct, for Lydecker was subpœnaed to return from New York to Washington and testify concerning it. By the time he appeared before the committee the committee had some of the facts in hand, and Mr. Lydecker was compelled to admit that he dictated the telegram in his office, and that Mr. West, the executive secretary of the league, immediately telephoned it over to the office of the league on Forty-fourth Street, and that instantly a copy of the telegram was gotten by Mr. Harvey and by him sent to the press, even before the telegram itself had been delivered to the telegraph company in New York to be transmitted to the chairman of your committee, for whom it was only pretendedly intended.

With the same purpose in mind, Mr. Lydecker, on the 11th day of February, 1919, wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee in which he reiterated and enlarged upon the false statements contained in the telegram, not knowing that the committee then possessed some information as to how the telegram had been handled. The letter reads as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
19 West Forty-fourth Street, New York, February 11, 1919.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON,
Chairman Committee on Investigation of the National Security League, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Understanding that at hearings when, without notice, it was beyond the power of the National Security League to attend, testimony has been taken, as I am informed, of Messrs. MCCULLOCH, SHERWOOD, COOPER, FREAR, MASON, BRITTEN, KING, and JUUL, the league again enters its protest against the fact that the committee has prevented the presence of the league at such hearings, and now requests that the league have the opportunity to read the testimony given by these witnesses, and if any charge has been made of any participation by any person connected with the National Security League in any one of the sections represented by any of these gentlemen and by the name of the field secretary has been brought in in connection therewith under any such charge, that the opportunity be given to give testimony in rebuttal thereof.

Very truly, yours,
CHARLES E. LYDECKER, President.

Thereupon the chairman of the committee answered that letter, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1919.

Col. CHARLES E. LYDECKER,
President National Security League, New York.

DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your letter of yesterday addressed to me as chairman of the congressional committee which is investigating the National Security League, wherein you state that the committee has prevented the presence of the league at its hearings. The committee has directed me to say in reply that all the hearings have been conducted publicly, and that your gratuitous statement that the league has been prevented by the committee from being present at any of the hearings is wholly and unqualifiedly false, and known by you to be so when you made the statement. On the 5th instant you sent a telegram to me, as chairman of the committee, asserting that the committee had refused to notify the league that the hearings had been resumed, thereby falsely stating by implication that the league did not know that the hearings were not still being conducted; while, as a matter of fact, on the day before you sent the telegram the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives served a subpœna on Hon. Elihu Root, the honorary president of the league, summoning him to appear before the committee in Washington for the purpose of testifying, and that the next day thereafter, which was the very day on which you sent the telegram, Mr. Root left New York and came to Washington, and that the next day—the 6th instant—he testified before the committee.

Further, on the day before you sent the telegram saying, in substance, that the league was without knowledge that the hearings were going on the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives served a subpœna on Hon. Alton B. Parker, the vice president of your league, summoning him from New York to Washington, to which summons he responded and testified yesterday, which happens to be the very date of your letter containing the false statement that the committee has prevented the presence of the league at the hearings. The appearance before the committee, at the hereinbeforestated times, of the honorary president and the honorary vice president of the league not only refutes the statement that the league did not know that the committee was still conducting hearings but it shows beyond dispute that you knew when you made it that the statement was a falsehood out of whole cloth.

The committee will resume its hearings next Friday morning at 10 o'clock in room 377 of the House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at which hearing, or at an adjourned meeting thereof, any officer of the league may testify, and you, the president of the league, are directed to appear before the committee for further examination at the time and place herein indicated.

Yours, truly, BEN JOHNSON, Chairman.

The admissions of Mr. Lydecker were not made until Mr. Harvey had appeared upon the witness stand, and, in answer to questions put by Mr. REAVIS, had told how the telegram and letter had been handled by him. It developed in the testimony that the letter of February 11 was written very late in the afternoon, and that Mr. Harvey did not see it until the next morning, but that immediately he did see it he endeavored to get it into the afternoon papers of New York on that day.

It is high time that the people throughout the country who have contributed their dimes, their quarters, and their dollars to this league should know the uses to which these contributions are being put, and the character of the men conducting the activities of this organization. Very many of the small contributions to the league have been made by people full of patriotism, little suspecting that their contributed earnings would be used to thwart and defeat the very principles of government for which they stand.

There were many of these, but the representation publicly made by the officers of the league as to the number were always greatly exaggerated.

In a letter addressed by the National Security League to the Carnegie Corporation, asking for the subscription of $150,000, the statement was made that there were 185,000 members of the league. From the testimony given by Mr. West, who keeps the books, it appears that that representation was nearly 100,000 too many.

Reverting to the congressional chart: About 125 laws were enacted by Congress that related intimately to the war or to the preparation for war. Mr. Charles D. Orth, who selected the eight measures out of this vast number as tests of loyalty, was not even remotely familiar with the legislative conduct of Congress on these measures, many of which he had never heard of, and of none of which did he have more than a superficial knowledge. He selected, most arbitrarily, those eight measures, making them the test of loyalty of those who acted officially upon them, and then construed those eight measures in his chart in a misleading manner, justifying such conduct in his testimony with the unjust statement that if he had wronged anybody the one wronged could make any defense he desired. When the attention of the league was called to the manifest injustice of the chart, that it had wronged a number of men and had put them in a false light, no effort was made by the league to make any corrections; but, on the contrary, the league continued to send out the chart on its own motion, as well as wherever request was made for it.

The New York organization was responsible for most of this injustice.

To follow the effects of the political activities of this league into all the channels which they entered would be impossible. The false and misleading chart issued by the league was sent broadcast to individuals, to newspapers, and in some instances to political campaign committees, and its subject matter was utilized freely by them. The greatest injustice has been done to many loyal, patriotic men who have given the Nation the benefit of commanding ability, unquestioned courage and unalloyed patriotism, by men seeking partisan ends, and undertaking to hide their self-interest beneath the cloak of public service and national good.

The National Security League and like organizations in their political activities constitute a serious menace to representative Government. Ordinarily their real purpose is concealed and their appeal is made to the public on some principle in harmony with dominant sentiment. Usually, as in this instance, they have access to almost unlimited wealth, and borrow respectability by the use, in honorary positions, of the names of men of national prominence. If their real purpose were apparent, the danger would be relieved.

Men in public life are given by them to understand that they must be subservient to the demands of such institutions and, upon their failure to do so, they will be held up to public scorn and humiliation by false accusations. Under such circumstances the best-intentioned candidate for office realizes that he has one of two alternatives: He must be either subservient to the demands of these camouflaged organizations, or be put on the defensive by false charges. Such activities on the part of organizations similar to the National Security League have a tendency to compel obedience to the wishes of special interests, rather than obedience to a real concern for the welfare of the people. This condition is not at all fanciful, since its baneful effects have been fully demonstrated by the activities of the National Security League.

The "fight" made by the National Security League upon the loyalty of men of the highest patriotism was so glaringly unjust, and so patently false that it failed of its purpose; but the failure was due to an error of judgment on the part of the league, and not because of the lack of vicious purpose. In times of war, organizations avowing patriotism, such as the National Security League did, will receive many adherents, and for that reason the league secured a membership of nearly 90,000 people throughout the United States. It was the duty of the league, therefore, to exercise the greatest care and caution in its publicity matter, where the good names of men were involved.

Section 1 of the Federal act, generally known as the "corrupt-practices act," approved June 25, 1910, is as follows:

The term "political committee," under the provisions of the act, shall include national committees of all political parties, the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which Representatives in Congress are to be elected.

Sections 5 and 6 of the act, as amended by an act approved August 19, 1911, require that such political committees as are defined in section 1 shall file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., certain itemized statements which shall be verified by oath.

In the judgment of your committee the National Security League has violated the provisions of that act; the penalty for which is a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not longer than one year, or both.

BEN JOHNSON.
PAT HARRISON.
E. W. SAUNDERS.
T. H. CARAWAY.
C. F. REAVIS.
E. E. BROWNE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report on the matter now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed to do so.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BROWNE. I rise to a question of information. When these reports are presented, how long a time will be allowed for discussion—one hour?

Mr. WALSH. There is no recommendation in the report.

The SPEAKER. If any motion is made, the gentleman who makes the motion will be entitled to an hour under the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is it in order now to move to proceed to call up a conference report? And if a conference report should be called up now and disposed of, would the gentleman from Massachusetts at the end of the conference report be entitled to the floor on this matter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], it seems to the Chair, is clearly entitled to read his report.

Mr. MANN. I am not raising that question. The rules provide that a conference report can take a man off his feet in debate. I think a conference report could have taken the gentleman from Kentucky off his feet while he was reading the report; but I make the parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that construing the rule strictly that would be the case.

Mr. MANN. If a conference report should be taken up now, after it is disposed of will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] then have the right to the floor on this matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize him; yes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will yield to me, I should like to make this suggestion——

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Under the ruling of the Chair the gentleman from Massachusetts will be entitled to the floor after the disposition of conference reports. Now it is 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Bills have to be enrolled. We have conference reports pending on the Military Academy bill, the Diplomatic and Consular bill, the Indian appropriation bill, and after these reports are disposed of there is the wheat bill. There are a couple of House private pension bills with Senate amendments and Senate private pension bills, and after all of these things we still have the general deficiency bill to dispose of.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that there are two or three little resolutions from the Committee on Accounts that ought to be acted upon. For instance, there is one reimbursing the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO], who paid money out of his own pocket, that ought to be passed before we adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Those will be taken care of, undoubtedly.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman will keep that in mind, so these things will not be clogged up.

Mr. MANN. I am trying to prevent their being clogged up. It seems to me we ought to dispose of these conference reports that are ready. That will not deprive the gentleman of his opportunity, and perhaps he will yield until something else is disposed of without losing his rights.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Here are these long reports, pages and pages, taking hours to read and making no recommendation. Why could not those reports be printed in the RECORD without reading?

The SPEAKER. Because the resolution appointing that committee had a peculiar tail to it, and that was that it could report at any time, and the report from the floor carries with it the right to read the report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts as an individual offered a minority report. How did he get the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has as much right to read his report as the gentleman from Kentucky had to read his report. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts is willing to yield for the purpose of taking up conference reports.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can take the gentleman from Massachusetts off the floor for a conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield until all these conference reports are disposed of, with the understanding that when they are disposed of I am entitled to recognition. But if I am to give way, I want the Speaker to recognize some one who has a conference report.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1165).

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood that the Speaker would recognize me to call up the conference report on the Military Academy bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has called up the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama in plenty of time to get his conference report through.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 16, 18, 19, 20, 22, 25, 26, and 30.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 15, 17, 23, 27, 28, and 29, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "including such loss on bills of exchange to officers of the United States Court for China"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "not exceeding $50,000 of the"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC AND PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

"The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for the payment of compensation to and the necessary expenses of the representative or representatives of the United States on the International Commission of Jurists, organized under the convention signed at the Third International American Conference August 23, 1906, approved by the Senate February 3, 1908, and ratified by the President February 8, 1908, for the purpose of preparing drafts of codes of public and private international law; and for the payment of the quota of the United States of the expenses incident to the preparation of such drafts, including the compensation of experts under article 4 of the convention, made in the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, is hereby made available for the fiscal year 1920."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. D. FLOOD,
J. CHAS. LINTHICUM,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1, 2, 5, and 6: Appropriate $17,500 per annum for the ambassador to Peru, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 3: Provides an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at $12,000 per annum each from March 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, both dates inclusive, for Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 4: Provides an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at $10,000 each from March 1, 1919, to June 30, 1919, both dates inclusive, for Bulgaria and Serbia, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 7: Make a total correspond to the preceding change.

On amendment No. 8: Appropriates $289,458.33 for salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $269,125, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 9: Corrects a total according to a previous change in the bill.

On amendment No. 10: Authorizes certain persons formerly connected with the American Embassy at Berlin to accept pieces of plate presented to them by the British Government.

On amendment No. 11: Authorizes the officers of the United States Court for China to share in the appropriations for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 12: Appropriates $1,310,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available, for contingent expenses of foreign missions, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,300,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 13: Appropriates $700,000 for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, as proposed by the House, instead of $600,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 14: Appropriates $50,000 for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, instead of $62,700, as proposed by the House, and $20,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 15: Strikes out the appropriation for the International Prison Commission, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 16: Restores to the bill the appropriation for the International Commission on Annual Tables of Constants, etc., proposed to be stricken out by the Senate.

On amendment No. 17: Strikes out the appropriation for the Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 18 and 19: Restore to the bill certain appropriations for International Institute of Agriculture proposed to be stricken out by the Senate.

On amendment No. 20: Restores to the bill the appropriation of $25,000 for the International High Commission proposed to be stricken out by the Senate.

On amendment No. 21: Makes $50,000 of a former appropriation available for the fifth international conference of American States instead of $25,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 22: Restores to the bill the appropriation of $1,500 for the International Geodetic Association for the measurement of the earth proposed to be stricken out by the Senate.

On amendment No. 23: Strikes out of the bill the provision making certain unexpended balances available for the fiscal year 1920 for the nineteenth conference Interparliamentary Union, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 24: Restores to the bill, with certain verbal changes, the provision for the International Commission on Public and Private International Law, making certain unexpended balances available for the fiscal year 1920, proposed to be striken out by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 25 and 26: Appropriates $1,974,500 for salaries of the Consular Service, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,849,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 27: Appropriates $5,500 to Mrs. Natalie Summers, widow of Madden Summers, late consul general to Moscow, said sum being one year's salary of her husband, who died at his post of duty.

On amendment No. 28: Strikes out of the bill a certain limitation on the appropriation for post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 29: Appropriates $600,000 for post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $700,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 30: Appropriates $1,200,000, as proposed by the House, for allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates, instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

H. D. FLOOD,
J. CHAS. LINTHICUM,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the Acting Secretary of State in reference to questions asked in the House about Mr. Hale, American minister to Costa Rica, not being at his post of duty, but being in this country.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 21, 1919.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: In response to your request for a statement in explanation of the reasons for the presence in the United States, under salary, of Mr. E. J. Hale, our minister to Costa Rica, I take pleasure in communicating to you the facts as follows:

Mr. Hale reported in December, 1916, that inasmuch as during his three years and a half of service he had been absent from his post in Costa Rica but 70 days, 10 days of which absence was on account of illness, he felt the need of a vacation and asked for leave of absence of 60 days. His request was immediately granted, but he was not able to leave until April, 1917, because of having to await the arrival of a secretary of legation to relieve him. He arrived in the United States on April 27, 1917.

In January, 1917, before Mr. Hale's departure, Gen. Federico Tinoco, who was then the minister of war of Costa Rica, obtained for himself the support of the army of Costa Rica, and at a time when there was still about a year and a half for the term of the President of Costa Rica to run, he forced the President to leave the country through a treasonable coup d'état. The Government established by a revolt and by force in place of the constitutional government could not be recognized by the United States, and it was felt that the return of Mr. Hale to his post at the expiration of his leave of absence would indicate an intention on the part of the United States to recognize the Tinoco government. On the other hand, it was not known how long the Tinoco government would continue or when a government might be established which could be considered by the United States as entitled to recognition, but it was thought that this possibility might develop at any time. In any event the post of minister to Costa Rica could not well be vacated without carrying the implication that the United States had severed all friendly relations with the people of Costa Rica, whose confidence and good will it was most important to retain. Hence it seemed obvious that the course to pursue was to detain Mr. Hale in the United States temporarily and utilize his services in an advisory and consultative capacity from time to time in relation to the developments of affairs in Costa Rica. Therefore, on June 19, 1917, the Secretary of State instructed Mr. Hale as follows:

"By authority of the President you are hereby ordered to remain in the United States until otherwise directed for the purpose of conferring with the department on matters pertaining to your official mission."

The elections for President as provided by the constitution of Costa Rica, which was in existence at the time of the coup d'état, have never been held. Acting through the control which he exercised over the agencies of government and through the army, Tinoco placed his brother in office as secretary of war in charge of the army and called a general election to adopt a new constitution, under which a so-called election was held, by which he now claims title to the office of President. In this election it is understood that Tinoco did not see fit to allow anyone else to stand as a candidate but himself. Therefore, it has not yet been feasible for the United States to recognize a government in Costa Rica and to direct the minister to resume his residence in San Jose.

Besides serving, by his absence from his post, the diplomatic purpose described, Mr. Hale has been in Washington on a number of occasions, and at various times has been in correspondence with the department in regard to the situation in Costa Rica. It should also not be overlooked that Mr. Hale during the period of his enforced absence from his post has been required to hold himself in readiness to return to Costa Rica at any time, and therefore has not been free to engage in any other pursuit.

In regard to the legality of the payment of salary to Mr. Hale during his absence from Costa Rica, under orders, it may be said that there is no law which forbids the President to order a diplomatic representative abroad to come to the United States for conference or to absent himself from his post for purposes connected with his official duty, and it has long been the practice of the Government to pay the salary of officials when so absent from their posts. On various occasions it has been held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that the payment of salary of officials absent from their posts under orders and in the performance of their duty should be continued and, in a decision of May 18, 1908, after referring to section 1742, to the effect that no diplomatic or consular officer should receive salary for the time during which he may be absent from his post, by leave or otherwise, beyond the term of 60 days in any one year, stated that—

"It is not clear that Congress intended thereby to deprive a consul of his salary in case he is ordered by the Secretary of State, acting for the President, to transact some important and necessary consular duties at a place which required his physical absence from his post. * * * The right of a consular officer to be absent from his post on official business, under orders from the Secretary of State, is recognized impliedly by Congress in the act of February 22, 1907, where provision is made to meet the cost of transportation of 'consular officers in going to and returning from their posts, or when traveling under the orders of the Secretary of State.' * * * I am of the opinion that in case a consular officer is ordered to come to this country, under proper authority of the Department of State, to perform duties in connection with his office for a limited period, and in pursuance to such orders actually performs and discharges duties for which he is appointed, though physically absent from his post, is still holding such office, and while so discharging the duties thereof is entitled to receive the salary provided by law." (14 Comp. Dec. 791.)

This decision is applicable both to diplomatic and consular officers.

It is considered that, so far as relates to payment of salary, the absence of Mr. Hale from his post was an absence within the meaning of the law as construed by this decision of the Comptroller, and that Mr. Hale's absence and receipt of salary during that absence differed in no way from many similar cases except in the length of his stay in this country, which, as has been explained, was due to conditions in Costa Rica of a delicate as well as unique character, calling for the exercise of the utmost discretion and courage for the purpose of retaining friendly relations with the people of the country and yet making it manifest to the world that the United States is not in sympathy with governments imposed upon people by force.

Hoping that you may find in the foregoing a satisfactory explanation of the incident described, I am, my dear Mr. FLOOD,

Very sincerely, yours,

(Signed) FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, in the latter part of January I charged in this House that Mr. Hale, our minister to Costa Rica, had come to the United States in April, 1917; that he had remained at his home in North Carolina from April, 1917, until the present moment; that he had been drawing his salary at the rate of $10,000 a year during the intervening period of almost two years; and that he had performed no diplomatic functions at any time during those two years.

I have listened with interest to the letter of the Acting Secretary of State. I think it may be well to read to the House also the statute which is referred to in the letter of the Acting Secretary, and which reads in part as follows:

Revised Statutes, section 1742. No diplomatic or consular officer shall receive salary for the time during which he may be absent from his post by leave or otherwise beyond the term of 60 days in any one year.

For the time during which he may be absent from his post by leave or otherwise.

The only way by which the Comptroller of the Treasury is able to say that this man has been within the terms of the law so as to make it proper to pay him during these two years is by saying that he has been performing diplomatic functions during the period. That is a question of fact, and on that the letter of the Secretary of State and the statement of the Comptroller of the Treasury do not help us at all. I will give you the facts. I challenge the gentleman from Virginia, I challenge any member of the North Carolina delegation, who rushed to the defense of this gentleman when I was making my observations the other day, to say what diplomatic function of any kind, large or small, Minister Hale has performed during the past two years. The man is still on the pay roll. If the condition exists which is dealt with in Secretary Polk's letter he is likely to continue on the pay roll for two years more to come, or until Tinoco is recognized, which may be far in the future. If there should be a Democratic President in the White House for four years after that he would be likely to continue on the pay roll for six years to come.

Is there no end to this practice of paying a minister $10,000 a year for doing absolutely nothing? Because, gentlemen, I assert with confidence that this man has discharged no duty whatever. He may have been in Washington once or twice or more; he may have had a letter or two on diplomatic matters while at his home in North Carolina, and have replied; but he has done nothing; he has performed no real services, for which he is being compensated. I assert this not on my own authority, but on the authority of Assistant Secretary of State Phillips, who told me within a week that as far as he knew this man had performed no actual service during the period of his sojourn, with pay and without work, in North Carolina.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, as construed by the department, the law is absolutely a dead letter.

Mr. ROGERS. Absolutely a dead letter, and if something is not done by Congress the practice is likely to continue indefinitely. If the practice is permitted in this case, it will be used as a precedent by an ambassador who wants to take a long vacation in the United States. Or a minister will come home from Persia, Belgium, or Holland who wants a little longer rest cure at home. The State Department will write him a letter or two from time to time asking his advice; he will reply, "Yours of such an instant received, and I would say," and so forth; and he will be paid $10,000 or $12,000 or $17,500 a year for doing that and no more. This is a most dangerous precedent. Now is the time to give it its quietus.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. How long has the gentleman known about this man drawing his pay and performing no service?

Mr. ROGERS. The first time I heard of it was about Christmas, 1918.

Mr. GORDON. Why did not the gentleman impeach him?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman surely does not ask that question seriously, does he?

Mr. GORDON. I do.

Mr. ROGERS. I brought the matter to the attention of the House in January at the first moment at which I had opportunity. I laid it very fully before the House; yet six weeks have elapsed since that time, and this man is still on the pay roll. His presence on the salary list is even condoned by the Secretary of State. It is scarcely the duty of a Republican Representative to suggest to a Democratic administration what the remedy should be for a violation of law.

Mr. GORDON. What action did the gentleman suggest that the House take in the premises?

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest the exact action that the chairman of the committee, Mr. FLOOD, suggested should be taken. I brought this question to the attention of the House on January 22. Mr. LONGWORTH said in the course of the debate, after reciting what he had just learned at the Department of State—

That disposes of the question of fact, and if the law is as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]—

Who had recited the provisions of section 1742 of the Revised Statutes, which I have read—that the salary would not continue for more than 60 days after the minister or diplomatic officer absents himself from the position, then it is a clear violation of the law.

Mr. FLOOD. Absolutely, and the gentlemen who are responsible for it should be exposed and proceeded against.

Mr. Speaker, I welcomed that statement from the gentleman from Virginia, although I had not at that time myself cared to make the positive assertion that there had been a violation of the law.

I think the House assumed, and I think we had the right to assume, that the condition would instantly be corrected by the Department of State. Yet within a day or two—five or six weeks have elapsed since that time—a letter comes from the State Department, which has just been read from the Clerk's desk, in which an attempt is made to say that the law has been complied with. As I say, the man is still on the pay roll of the United States. I question whether any man, after listening to the reading of the statute and of that letter, would say that there was a fair and aboveboard compliance with the intent of Congress as expressed in the clear and unequivocal words of the statute.

I should like to go into the question concerning the recognition of the Tinoco government. I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that within a few days a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, made up of a majority of Democrats, has reported to the full committee that, in its judgment, Tinoco ought to be recognized; but that is beside the point. It is an important point, I think, but it is not the point that I sought to make. My single, sole, narrow point, which I want to emphasize to the House, is the shocking revelation admitted by the State Department that a minister of the United States can be paid two full years' salary without doing, I charge, a stroke of work. Mr. Speaker, that may be Democratic economy, but it savors very much to me of looting from the Treasury. I hope that as a result of this discussion to-day some action may be taken which will clear the State Department of this infamy. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] contemplates that any action will be taken as the result of this discussion, because he has proposed none. The statement of facts that he has made would not justify any action if he did propose it. The case of Minister Hale does not come within the purview of section 1742 of the Revised Statutes, and it was so held by the Comptroller of the Treasury during President Roosevelt's last administration. Mr. Hale was kept in this country by order of the President to perform duties in connection with his office, and has actually been discharging those duties. But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] says he has not performed any of his official duties since he has been in this country. This seems to be the whole of the issue between us. The gentleman [Mr. ROGERS] says that the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Phillips, stated to him that Maj. Hale has done no work during these two years. Against the statement of the Assistant Secretary of State I place the statement of the Acting Secretary of State, who I should think on a matter of this kind had more accurate information than his assistant, and who has sent to this House over his signature a statement that Maj. Hale had been rendering to the State Department services in connection with his office and with the Costa Rican situation. He has been in Washington to confer with the President and the State Department whenever he was needed. He has been in communication with and advised the State Department in reference to the situation in Costa Rica whenever advice was sought or wanted. He was performing the duties of minister to Costa Rica in the way the President desired him to perform them, and I place the statement of the highest official we have in the State Department against the statement of his assistant as to the duties performed by Maj. Hale.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think it is true, as I understood the reading of the letter, that he has rendered service, but there is no statement that he is rendering it now or has been within the past year.

Mr. FLOOD. He is rendering it now just as he has within the past year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Where and how?

Mr. FLOOD. He is at present at his home in North Carolina. He has a home in Costa Rica and is paying rent for it. He has it furnished, and he has his servants there keeping it ready for his return. He is kept in North Carolina by the order of the President, ready to go to Costa Rica on a day's notice, and certainly no one can criticize him for performing the duties of his office where the President orders him to perform them and for accepting the salary which he is entitled to for the discharge of those duties.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the situation in Costa Rica, diplomatically, so far as our Government is concerned, since Mr. Hale has come to this country our interests there have been represented by a chargé d'affaires. Is that the fact?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think by a chargé d'affaires. We have no such officer there.

Mr. ROGERS. There was until a few months ago, but there is none now.

Mr. FLOOD. He left there some time ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. If our Government maintains relations by having a chargé d'affaires look after its diplomatic relations, why was not Mr. Hale sent there as principal to look after those relations?

Mr. FLOOD. The President has refused to recognize the revolutionary government in Costa Rica, and after Maj. Hale came back on leave of absence the Government thought it would be a recognition of the revolutionary government to send a minister to Costa Rica back at that time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If we have refused to recognize the Government of Costa Rica, how can we have diplomatic relations with it and what do we need with a minister?

Mr. FLOOD. We will send the minister back there as soon as relations are such that we can recognize the government. The gentleman knows that that has been the policy of this administration. He knows that Mr. Fletcher, our ambassador to Mexico, was kept here for months and months under similar circumstances to those under which Maj. Hale is kept here, the only difference being that Maj. Hale is a Democrat and Mr. Fletcher happened to be a Republican.

Mr. ROGERS. The difference was that Mr. Fletcher was actually in the State Department performing diplomatic services.

Mr. FLOOD. He performed the same service to the State Department in reference to Mexico that Maj. Hale has performed in reference to Costa Rica. He preferred to live in Washington, as he was a bachelor, to going home, whereas Maj. Hale went home to be called upon when his services were needed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman assert that Mr. Fletcher is a bachelor?

Mr. FLOOD. When the State Department wanted information in reference to Costa Rica, Maj. Hale would come to Washington and give that information. If occasion arose, and the State Department needed information in regard to Mexico, Mr. Fletcher gave it, but he preferred to be in Washington and Maj. Hale preferred to wait in North Carolina.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman assert that Mr. Fletcher is a bachelor?

Mr. FLOOD. That was my understanding.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I happen to know Mrs. Fletcher, and she is a very charming lady.

Mr. FLOOD. Well, on a subject of that kind I yield to the superior knowledge of the gentleman from Ohio. At any rate he preferred to live in Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would yield to me to ask him a question.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia, if we have no diplomatic relations with the Government of Costa Rica, what diplomatic function can a minister to Costa Rica living in America perform?

Mr. FLOOD. The President has not recognized the existing Government of Costa Rica. Our minister happened to be in this country, and the President preferred that he should not go back to Costa Rica, believing that would constitute a recognition of the Tinoco government. He has never recognized that government, but our relations with the people of Costa Rica are mostly friendly, and the minister is now here as an American minister to Costa Rica to go back there as soon as the conditions are such that we can recognize the Government of Costa Rica. At the present time we have no diplomatic relations with Costa Rica because our minister is here, and we are not recognizing the existing government in Costa Rica. But the minister is advising the executive department of the country as to affairs in Costa Rica, which he is capable of doing, because he has been there for some time and is an experienced diplomat and is familiar with the conditions.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I simply want to ask the gentleman whether there is still a minister from Costa Rica accredited to the United States but lingering in Costa Rica?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know whether he is in Costa Rica or not.

Mr. ROGERS. For a long time there has been no representative of Costa Rica in Washington. I wanted to ask whether there was a representative to the United States from Costa Rica now in Costa Rica?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know.

Mr. ROGERS. The fact is that there is not, so that I think the point of the gentleman would scarcely be well taken.

Mr. FLOOD. We are not controlled or influenced by what the Tinoco government in Costa Rica does, but our Government has taken this position in relation to revolutionary governments in Central and South America. We had exactly the same case in Mexico. When we did not recognize the Carranza government in Mexico, Mr. Fletcher stayed here in this country and drew his salary, just as Maj. Hale is drawing his now. I want to say that Maj. Hale—I do not know him; the North Carolina gentlemen know him well—has been at great expense by reason of having to keep up a home in Costa Rica and a home here. He was ordered to stay here by the President. The order reads:

By authority of the President, you are hereby ordered to remain in the United States until otherwise directed for the purpose of conferring with the department on matters pertaining to your official mission.

He has been here all of that time under that order, conferring with the department about matters pertaining to his mission whenever there was any necessity for the department getting information in reference to Costa Rican affairs. Surely he should be free from criticism. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. POU. I know it to be a fact that Major Hale has kept himself in readiness to go to Costa Rica at any moment it became necessary to do so, and that he has not undertaken any other business because of that uncertainty. I have a statement from him to that effect.

Mr. ROGERS. The fact that he is 80 years old, perhaps, makes him less unwilling to refrain from entering business.

Mr. POU. I do not think it is becoming to the gentleman to allude to that fact; I do not think that is becoming to the gentleman to allude to that fact, when this gentleman is hale and hearty and able to attend to his duties, to have it thrown in his face that he is 80 years old, if he is able to attend to his duties, as he is. He is as vigorous, I will say, as the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then he is a wonder.

Mr. FLOOD. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that certainly acquits Maj. Hale of any act that could justly be criticized, and it certainly relieves him of any criticism which these gentlemen seek to make upon him.

Now, as to the right of the executive department to pay these diplomatic and consular officers after the 60 days have expired in violation, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, of section 1742 of the Revised Statutes, I thought, as the gentleman did, until I learned that Minister Hale had rendered services to the State Department, and, until I learned that, that very matter had been considered and passed upon by the Comptroller of the Treasury as the gentleman thought. But that ruling has been made and followed ever since. So that when a diplomatic or consular officer has been in this country rendering service in connection with his mission or consulate, section 1742 does not apply, and the official is entitled to his salary. And by reason of that ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury in the Roosevelt administration, the Acting Secretary of State says in this letter that there is no law preventing Maj. Hale from receiving his salary.

So it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is no ground for criticism of the administration or of the State Department. Precedent has been followed and no law violated. The gentleman may have one view with reference to the Tonico government, and the administration another. As for me, I am going to stand by the administration with reference to that government and every other revolutionary government that is set up in Central or South America. [Applause.]

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. McKINLEY. Is it not a fact that Minister Hale recommended to this administration that it recognize Tonico?

Mr. FLOOD. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me 5 or 10 minutes?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the law already quoted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] reads as follows:

No diplomatic or consular officer shall receive salary for the time during which he may be absent from his post by leave or otherwise beyond the term of 60 days in any one year, but a time equal to that usually occupied in going to or from the United States in case of return on leave of such diplomatic officer to the United States may be allowed in addition to such 60 days.

Where is the post of a diplomatic officer? This diplomatic officer is an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Costa Rica, provided for along with a list of others. The statute says that he may be allowed his salary while absent for 60 days in a year and for an additional absence equal to the time necessary to go from the United States to his post, or, if he has leave, to come from his post to the United States. It is just as plain as black ink is on white paper, and if the Comptroller of the Treasury or the Secretary of State or any other official has construed that language to mean that when a man is appointed as a diplomatic officer he can draw his pay anywhere he pleases to stay, regardless of his going to the place to which he is appointed, the man who made such a ruling ought to be discharged from any official duties under the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will for a very brief one.

Mr. BLANTON. Where diplomatic relations are withdrawn between the United States and a foreign country because of war or trouble and the diplomatic representative is commanded by this Government to remain in a certain place and give certain information to the Government, does not that command place him at a post of duty wherever the Government commands him to stay?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not.

Mr. BLANTON. Then his post of duty ceases?

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about his post of duty. I am talking about his post. That is a location. It is expressly so provided by the statute. It may be that we ought to pay the man. I do not undertake to say that. But the law says he shall not be paid. It is just an utter disregard of the law, such as very frequently happens with administrative officers.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman is aware of the fact that 11 years ago the Comptroller of the Treasury decided in a similar case that the officer was entitled to his pay.

Mr. MANN. I was not aware of it, but I take the gentleman's statement.

Mr. FLOOD. I have it here.

Mr. MANN. I take the gentleman's statement. That is the reason why I said that the comptroller who made such a decision ought not to occupy any place with the Government. It is another violation of the words of the statute and the letter and the meaning of the statute.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that only provided in the cases of consuls who were temporarily absent from their posts abroad, and that even under the decision, as the gentleman read it, it might be valuable to the department that they be temporarily absent from their posts abroad, not in this country at all.

Mr. MANN. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, they have got, up in these administrative offices, so in the habit of disregarding the law and acting as they wish of their own will that they do not know what the statutes are and care less. [Applause.] And I do not think it is confined wholly to the Democratic administration, either.

Mr. FLOOD. No. That was under a Republican administration, and the gentleman from Ohio is in error in saying that they were officers in this country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I may be.

Mr. MANN. However, Mr. Speaker, I rose to discuss another matter. I do not know whether I have time enough left or not.

Mr. FLOOD. I will yield to the gentleman more time.

Mr. MANN. One of the items in this bill as it passed the House was "Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration."

That is the heading, and it reads:

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration at Brussels, Belgium, $2,000.

The Senate struck out the item and the conferees have left it out.

Mr. Speaker, in passing I want to make a remark. I have not read carefully, and I do not desire to express any opinion as to the terms in the proposed league of nations' treaty, if that is what it is. I want to say this: There seems to me to be quite a tendency on the part of many of my fellow Republicans not only to criticize severely the President of the United States for his part in reference to a league of nations, but to criticize the idea that the United States shall enter into any arrangement which may tend to prevent war in the future.

We come out of this war owing many billions of dollars. We will leave that heritage to our children, very likely to our children's children and perhaps a generation further on. If the only heritage which this generation gives to those who come after it is an indebtedness of billions of dollars for them to pay at least the interest on, and part of the principal, without at the end of the war doing something to prevent future wars, we will not in the future receive the blessing of mankind, but its condemnation. [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. The gentleman confines his criticism to the Republicans; but I want to say that among the Members in another body and in this body I hear as much criticism by one side of the House as the other.

Mr. MANN. I am not undertaking to criticize any gentleman who has spoken upon this subject. I am only saying that in my judgment it is desirable, and I think essential, that something shall come out of the war which may tend to prevent future wars, and not merely leave us as the result of the war almost hopelessly in debt. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report on S. 3797 and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, how long is the report?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The report is very short.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the reservation of the objection, may I inquire if there are any new claims added to the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. The conference report merely passes upon House amendments to the Senate bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are only two amendments, one of them very unimportant, and the other to one item.

Mr. MADDEN. I insist on the report being read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the issuance of patent shall not release the Milwaukee Lumber Co. from its obligations to pay the value of the timber cut from this land, with a reservation in the Government of the United States of an easement across said land for roadway or other purposes which the interests of the United States may require."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow George E. Windecker to make homestead application for the east half, section 21, township 34 north, range 14 east, Montana meridian, in the State of Montana, subject to reconveyance of the said land to the United States by said George E. Windecker."

And the House agree to the same.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
WILLIAM L. LA FOLLETTE,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. MYERS,
JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this conference report should be defeated. Its passage will mean that Congress proposes to barter away the property of the people of the United States.

I maintain that the people should keep and develop this property themselves instead of turning it over to rapacious private interests to be used in further exploitation of the public.

There are billions of dollars represented in these vast deposits of oil, gas, coal, potassium, and other valuable products covered in this bill. The Government of the United States owns the land and has the finances and the facilities to develop the agricultural lands, the forest lands, the water power, and all the wealth underground.

Is it possible that Congress shall now say to the people of this country, pinched by high prices for fuel, power, and so forth, "We intend to take the public domain, with all its coal and gas and oil, and distribute it among the interests which will raise the prices still higher"?

Mr. Speaker, there are vitally important uses to which these public lands may be put to-day which did not obtain a few years ago. The victorious veterans of the world's war are returning from Europe, after deeds which outshone those of the period when knighthood was in flower.

Many thousands of them, after months spent in the great outdoors, are anxious to secure homes and farm lands and opportunities for life in the open. I have received many letters from city-bred youths who say that they will never go back to the shops and mills again. They want to become producers from the earth, working under the open sky.

Are we to meet their worthy desire with the statement that after a 10 years' fight to prevent the alienation of public property we at last surrendered just as the boys in khaki were coming to claim their own?

Some time ago I introduced a measure providing for a public construction service which should offer opportunities to the soldiers, sailors, and marines and workers in war industries to secure immediate constructive employment upon the public domain. My plan was to organize bodies of workers who should prepare these lands for the establishment of agricultural, forest, and mining communities. They would receive wages while doing the work and would then have a chance to secure permanent homes on the very lands they had prepared.

The organization of these communities would mean possession of all those advantages the lack of which has caused the ceaseless drift from country to city. The plan would include the advancement, on long-time loans, of sufficient funds to assure success, and would thus offer an opportunity to everyone who desired it, whether he had money in large amount or not.

Hearings were held on this bill before the House Committee on Labor. Assistant Secretary of Labor Post appeared in behalf of it and strongly urged favorable action. Representatives of farm organizations and the American Federation of Labor expressed themselves most favorably upon its principles.

Patriotic Americans everywhere have urged that some such action be taken at once. The "farms for soldiers" movement is gaining strength everywhere as the steps taken by other nations are understood.

Canada proposes to give a farm to every soldier who desires it, and if there are not enough Government lands to expropriate idle private lands and turn them over to the soldiers and sailors, to be paid for on an amortization plan. For the working of these farms $1,500 is provided for stock and equipment, with no interest for the first two years and 5 per cent thereafter.

New Zealand, England, France, Italy, and other allies of ours in the great war are busy planning such opportunities for the returned soldiers.

Now, in the face of this splendid possibility to extend opportunities for permanent homes to those who carried the Stars and Stripes in the fighting line, we are confronted with this conference report on a so-called leasing bill, which in reality means new privileges to great combinations of capital.

For instance, E. J. Justice, special assistant to the Attorney General, said in a memorandum to the Attorney General dated April 18, 1916:

> From 66⅔ to 75 per cent of all the lands referred to above as having been reported on adversely are controlled by a few large interests. Among them are the Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Co., the operating company of the Sante Fe Railroad Co., and the Standard Oil.

The Attorney General, writing to the chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, January 15, 1916, said:

> Many powerful oil companies are interested in the multitude of claims set up to withdraw land.

The Secretary of the Navy, in a letter dated January 16, 1916, to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, said:

> The following are the companies operating in the naval petroleum reserves who will be benefited:
>
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Associated Oil Co., capital stock | $40,000,000 |
> | General Petroleum Co., capital stock | 50,000,000 |
> | Standard Oil Co., capital stock | 100,000,000 |
> | Union Oil Co., capital stock | 50,000,000 |
>
> And nine other companies of large capitalization.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in time of war we were forced to authorize the President to seize and operate private wells and mines, thus condemning the inefficiency of uncontrolled private ownership and operation, I do not believe we should now turn over the public resources to the companies named above and others like them.

The evils of absolute private ownership of mineral fuels, sources of power, and so forth, have been proved beyond question.

It is well known that the labor situation in the mining industry is becoming constantly more serious. No one knows this better than the mine operators themselves. One of the biggest operators in the United States, Mr. Francis S. Peabody, of Illinois, chairman of the committee on coal production of the Council of National Defense, in testifying regarding this bill before the Senate Public Lands Committee, June 13, 1917, spoke about labor and other conditions in the coal-mining industry as follows:

> * * * We have the cheapest production of coal in the world * * * and have had for years and years, and have used it like drunken men. We have wasted our substance by taking the nearest coal because we could produce it cheapest. We have had no thought of conservation of life. We kill three men in this country for every one man killed on the other side, with more dangerous mining conditions on the other side * * * on account of having not one thought of either the conservation of life or the mineral resources that are in the ground or of the capital invested. There is no industry that needs so much general national laws as the coal industry. There are no two States in the United States which have similar laws in regard to mining. Instead of taking out 90 per cent of the coal in the ground, we are taking out hardly 60 per cent, leaving the rest to be wasted, and no future generation can get it, while it would be just as economical and cheaper to take out the 90 per cent. But we have got to wait four or five years for a return on our investment, and we want to get the dollars back the moment we put the dollars in. * * * I can see this waste to-day. We are taking only 60 per cent of coal out of the ground; then, after that, the consumer wastes over 50 per cent of that. We are not getting 20 per cent of the heat units that are in the ground into use. * * * I do not like Government paternalism, but I think we need it to preserve what we have got in the ground that God put there, that we did not have anything to do with putting there, and which is needed for the use of all the people.

Mr. Speaker, there are masterful, able men in this country who have urged the passage of this legislation. But they are blind men, who can not see in the determined purpose of the American people more than a "momentary gust of popular passion."

They are the unconscious, blind breeders of violence and hatred and destructive revolution. They can not see that such ravaging of the people's resources is not only hurtful to the people, but if continued guarantees destruction of their own fortunes and power.

To-day this question faces us: Shall the national resources, including coal, oil, and other miner deposits, forests, and water-power sites be given to capitalists for private development or retained in the possession and under the control of the Federal Government to be developed for the benefit of all the people?

Let us not follow the sightlessness of the policy embodied in this conference report. Rather, let us see what fills the air around us—a clear, determined desire of the American citizenship that, having made democracy safe round the world, we shall make democracy sure at home by making certain that these God-given products of sun and ocean, winds, and mountains shall be secured to all the people and not to a few of the privileged.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the Senate agree to all the additions that were made on the floor of the House?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; they agreed to all those, and we have receded from our amendment striking out the claim of Laura Graves, because, as was stated when the bill passed the House, the facts were not all obtained, but since that time and before the conference committee there has been a very full and complete showing that this woman is entitled to that land. So we restored that item. The other two amendments are trivial. One of them is to protect the Government more. In fact, both of them protect the Government better than the bill in the form in which it passed the House.

If no other gentleman desires to ask any questions I will move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1145).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 15462, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, and 7 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$780,000: Provided, That the pay of cadets for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall be fixed at $780 per annum and one ration per day or commutation therefor at the rate of 68 cents per ration, to be paid from the appropriation for the subsistence of the Army." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "For cadet hospital and nurses' quarters, $390,000." And the Senate agree to the same.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The House yielded to the Senate provision increasing the pay of cadets from $600 to $780 per year. The Senate yielded as to the pay of chief engineer, on page 12, line 14, making the amount $2,700, as fixed by the House, instead of $2,400, as fixed by the Senate. The House yielded, on page 29, lines 5, 6, and 7, to the Senate amendment providing $400,000 for the construction of hospital and nurses' quarters with an amendment reducing the amount to $390,000. This reduction was made on account of the item immediately preceding providing $10,000 for an elevator. The House receded, on page 34, relative to the provision retiring George R. Rogers as a second lieutenant on account of injury received while serving as a cadet in the academy. On page 34 the House also receded relative to the retirement of Col. S. E. Tillman, the present superintendent, with the rank of brigadier general. On page 34, line 18, the Senate receded. This is a provision authorizing private parties or corporations to erect a hotel on the academy grounds. The House also receded, on page 35, as to the provision authorizing the retirement of Col. Maus as a brigadier general. This bill has been favorably reported by the Military Committee of the House.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. What was done with the three amendments placing men on the retired list—amendments 4, 5, and 7?

Mr. DENT. The House receded from its disagreement to those amendments.

Mr. MANN. Were any of those amendments for men who were overseas in the war?

Mr. DENT. They were not.

Mr. MANN. What was done with Senate amendment No. 6 about the hotel?

Mr. DENT. The Senate receded and yielded to the House on that proposition.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that that particular item in the bill will probably result in a great improvement in the hotel accommodations at West Point.

Mr. DENT. As I understand, the gentleman inquires what was done. The Senate receded and yielded to the House.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will recall, I did what I could to have that put in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, on the whole, the Government is rather liberal about retiring Army officers. What the exceptional cases may be to which I shall refer I can not state as to the facts, except in one case.

Here are three Senate amendments, one authorizing the appointment of George R. Rogers to go upon the retired list with the pay of a retired second lieutenant in the Cavalry; one to promote Col. S. E. Tillman and put him on the retired list with the rank of a brigadier general, and one to put Col. L. Mervin Maus on the retired list with the grade of a brigadier general, which I suppose means the same as rank. In one place they say "rank" and in the other "grade."

I heartily disapprove of this method of special Senate legislation. It is unfortunately true that, as a rule, on the consideration of an appropriation bill in the Senate it seems very easy to add an amendment granting to some individual a personal favor. I do not think the House would agree to these propositions. I do not think the House is in favor, as a general thing, of picking out somebody's friend, somebody who is a pet, and putting him on the retired list of the Army, where he is not entitled to it under the law. Of course, it is a very agreeable sensation to receive a gift of that kind. There are a good many gentlemen going out of this House who have served the country well, faithfully, intelligently, and all the other adjectives you can apply, but they will not go on any retired list with pay.

The man that is entitled under the law to go on the retired list with pay ought to congratulate himself that he is entitled to it, and not to try to be a hog and want to get higher pay than the law allows him, when other people who are entitled to it do not get any.

I think it is a shame that these things are constantly occurring. I know the House conferees ran up against a stiff proposition. I have known a distinguished Senator of the United States to say in conference that if he could not have his own way about some little item on the bill it would be defeated. But my own experience is that they have always backed down from that bluff before we got through, and I think they always would if the conferees would tell them so. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. From what department in the Army was this gentleman?

Mr. DENT. Which gentleman?

Mr. LITTLE. All of them.

Mr. DENT. One case is that of a young cadet who was thrown from his horse, resulting in paralysis. That was young Rogers, of California. He was paralyzed from being thrown from a horse. He stood up near the head of his class, and had he remained a few months longer he would have been graduated as a second lieutenant. There is precedent for that proposition. Another is the case of Col. Tillman, who has been superintendent of the academy for the last four years. He was called back from retirement for position as superintendent several years ago after serving in the academy in various positions as professor of science.

Mr. LITTLE. Cavalry or Artillery?

Mr. DENT. He was in the Artillery, I think. The third man was in the Medical Department. I do not think that had any business on the Military Academy bill, but in order to get the bill in the eleventh hour the conferees yielded.

Mr. LITTLE. Is he able to make a living as a doctor?

Mr. DENT. He has been 45 years in the service, been retired, and when the war broke out he tendered his services and has been in the service during the war.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the conference report been adopted by the Senate?

Mr. DENT. It has not.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Was the cadet the gentleman refers to under military training at the time of the accident?

Mr. DENT. He was. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. DENT. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Eagle	Kelley, Mich.	Shackleford
Barnhart	Emerson	London	Sherley
Blackmon	Estopinal	Lufkin	Slayden
Booher	Fairchild, G. W.	Lunn	Slemp
Britten	Fairfield	Mann	Smith, Mich.
Brumbaugh	Flynn	Miller, Minn.	Smith, C. B.
Butler	Frear	Mondell	Stedman
Caldwell	Gandy	Mott	Steele
Carter, Mass.	Garner	Neely	Stephens, Miss.
Cary	Godwin, N. C.	Nelson, J. M.	Stephens, Nebr.
Chandler, N. Y.	Gould	Overmyer	Stiness
Church	Gray, N. J.	Park	Swift
Collier	Gregg	Pou	Taylor, Ark.
Cooper, Ohio	Hamill	Price	Towner
Copley	Hamilton, N. Y.	Ragsdale	Van Dyke
Costello	Hardy	Rankin	Voigt
Cox	Heintz	Roberts	Walsh
Crago	Hollingsworth	Robinson	Webb
Decker	Hood	Rowland	Winslow
Denison	Houston	Russell	Zihlman
Dies	Howard	Sanders, N. Y.
Drukker	Johnson, Ky.	Scully

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and forty-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

APPROPRIATIONS, EXPENDITURES, ETC., DEPARTMENT OF STATE (H. DOC. NO. 1842).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department and ordered printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit here a statement by the Acting Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriaitons, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 February, 1919.

OVERMAN ACT (H. DOC. NO. 1841).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the request contained in the resolution of the House of Representatives of January 28, 1919, requesting the President "to inform the House of Representatives of the result, in detail, of his administration of the provisions of the so-called Overman Act, approved May 20, 1918, entitled, 'An act authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government,'" I transmit herewith reports from the heads of the executive departments, independent Government establishments, boards, bureaus, and commissions, showing the action taken under the provisons of said act in regard to the executive departments and other establishments.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 3 March, 1919.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. The report has not been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What report?

Mr. GOOD. The report referred to in the message of the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman surely does not want that read.

Mr. GOOD. Under the rules of the House it must be read. The Clerk has read only a portion of the report. The House is entitled to know what is in the message.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it has already been referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules the report was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1187).

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 16, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 57, 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 71, 72, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 86, 89, 94, 96, 97, 106, 110, 117, 118, 119, 122, 127, 130, and 131.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 21, 26, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 42, 48, 56, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 73, 74, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 91, 92, 93, 95, 98, 99, 100, 102, 104, 105, 107, 108, 109, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 121, 123, 124, 125, and 129, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$36,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$253,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$375,000, of which $10,000 shall be used to care for old and indigent Indians in western Washington, and of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$135,000: Provided, That $5,000 of this amount shall be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$153,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 may be expended from Indian moneys, proceeds of labor, Sherman Institute, for the purchase of land and water rights, the title to which is to be held in the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment restore the House provision, but in line 25, page 26, of the engrossed bill strike out "$50,000" and insert "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "three hundred and fifty," and on page 33, line 23, of the engrossed bill strike out the word "hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$75,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$98,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 19, line 5, of the engrossed amendments, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$10,000"; also, in line 10, on page 19, of the engrossed amendments, strike out the words "of Congress" and insert: "entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That this provision shall not prohibit other sales as provided by existing law, except that such tracts of coal and asphalt deposits shall not again be offered for sale until after the expiration of six months from November 15, 1919"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 23, line 4, of the engrossed amendments, strike out "$100," and insert "$75,000"; and on page 24, line 1, strike out the words "and to remain available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 27 of the engrossed amendments strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and the words "of Indian Affairs in," on line 4 of said amendments and insert "For"; and in line 12, page 27, of the engrossed amendments, after the word "session," insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert:

"For the construction of a road from the village of Odanah, in the Bad River Reservation, to the south line of said reservation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians on the Bad River Reservation, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said Indians until paid: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may cooperate with the State of Wisconsin in the construction of said road: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Wisconsin satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said State of at least one-half of the cost of the construction of said road."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$151,000," and on page 57, line 24, of the engrossed bill strike out "$2,325,000" and insert "$2,175,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 30, line 22, of the engrossed amendments, strike out the figures "27" and insert "26"; on page 31, line 3, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 32, line 3, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 32, line 11, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 32, line 17, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 32, line 18, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 32, line 18, of said amendments, strike out the word "thirty" and insert "twenty"; on page 33, line 4, of said amendments, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 33, line 10, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 33, line 10, after the word "lease," insert a comma and the following: "subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than $1 per acre"; on page 33, line 12, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 33, line 21, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 33, line 23, strike out the word "approval" and insert "lease"; on page 34, line 1, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 34, line 3, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 34, line 8, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 34, line 18, after the word "of," insert "not less than"; on page 34, line 19, after the word "thereafter," insert "not less than"; on page 34, line 20, after the word "and" where it occurs the second time, insert "not less than"; on page 35, line 22, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 36, line 8, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 36, line 11, of said amendments strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 36, line 13, of said amendments strike out the word "State" and insert "States"; on page 36, line 17, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 36, line 23, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; on page 37, line 1, strike out the word "act" and insert "section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

C. D. CARTER,
CARL HAYDEN,
DENVER S. CHURCH,
P. P. CAMPBELL,
HOMER P. SNYDER,
Managers on the part of the House.
ROBERT L. OWEN,
A. A. JONES,
A. J. GRONNA,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The bill as passed by the Senate increased gratuity appropriations over the amount allowed by the House by $422,726. This Senate increase was decreased in conference by $376,200, leaving, as carried in this report, a net increase over appropriations as originally made by the House of $76,526.

On amendment No. 1: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, as it reduces the appropriation $1,000.

On amendment No. 2: This is a change in total only.

On amendment No. 3: The House appropriated $6,000, and the Senate reduced the amount to $1,000, but your conferees compromised and made the appropriation $3,000.

On amendment No. 4: The Senate struck out the provision for the Papago pumping plants in Arizona, $5,000, and your conferees accepted the same.

On amendment No. 5: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which reduced the appropriation $1,500.

On amendment No. 6: The House provision was restored.

On amendment No. 7: Corrects the total to $36,700.

On amendment No. 8: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, as it reduced the appropriation $2,000.

On amendment No. 9: This item reduced the appropriation $1,000, and your conferees accepted it.

On amendment No. 10: The House appropriated $20,000, and the Senate reduced this item to $18,200, which your conferees accepted.

On amendment No. 11: This item is a change in total only.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment changes the final total only.

On amendment No. 13: This item is a reduction of $25,000.

On amendment No. 14: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which provides that the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors to the Nez Perce Indians of Idaho shall be extended for the period of 10 years.

On amendment No. 15: Your conferees restored the House appropriation and accepted the Senate amendment, which allows $10,000 to care for old and indigent Indians in western Washington, and makes $25,000 of the total appropriation for the relief and care of destitute Indians immediately available.

On amendment No. 16: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 17: Your conferees recede, as it reduces the appropriation $15,000.

On amendment No. 18: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which changes the method of determining the number of pupils entitled to per capita allowance.

On amendment No. 19: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which increases the appropriation for telegraph and telephone messages for the Bureau of Indian Affairs at Washington $2,000.

On amendment No. 20: Your conferees restored the House provision and accepted the Senate proviso, which allows $5,000 to be immediately available.

On amendment No. 21: This is simply the addition of the word "further" after a proviso.

On amendment No. 22: The Senate recedes and restores the House provision.

On amendment No. 23: The Senate recedes and restores the House provision, which reduces the appropriation $150,000.

On amendments Nos. 24 and 25: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 26: The House recedes so as to include the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin.

On amendments Nos. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32: Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 33, 34, and 35: The House recedes, as it reduces the appropriation in these items $5,000 and changes the total.

On amendment No. 36: Your conferees recede, as it reduces the appropriation $21,000.

On amendment No. 37: The amendment changes the total and makes the appropriation immediately available.

On amendment No. 38: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment because it made the appropriation reimbursable by the Indians benefited only.

On amendment No. 39: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment restores the House appropriation and adds a proviso so that $20,000 may be expended for the purchase of land and water rights for the Sherman Institute.

On amendment No. 41: The House recedes and accepts the Senate amendment because it allows the purchase of land and water rights at Greenville Indian School, Calif.

On amendment No. 42: The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 43, 44, 45, 46, and 47: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 48: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which provides for the support and education of 80 Indian pupils at the Indian School, Kickapoo Reservation, Kans.

On amendments Nos. 49, 50, and 51: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 52: The House provision is restored, but reduces the appropriation to $10,000.

On amendments Nos. 53, 54, and 55: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 56: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which allows the expenses of legislative committees to include the present session of Congress.

On amendment No. 57: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 58: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which appropriates $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the completion of the enrollment of the allottees within the White Earth Reservation, Minn.

On amendment No. 59: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which provides for retaining the mineral rights on ceded lands for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

On amendment No. 60: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which provides for the erection of homes in the State of Minnesota which were destroyed by fire during the year 1918.

On amendment No. 61: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 62: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which appropriates $20,000 of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for the construction and repair of roads on their reservation.

On amendment No. 63: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to pay the amounts assessed against tribal and allotted lands of the Indian reservations of Minnesota on account of benefits accruing to said lands by reason of the construction of a drainage ditch or ditches under the laws of the State.

On amendments Nos. 64, 65, 66, and 67: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 68: Your conferees compromised this item by providing for the support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian School at Carson City, Nev., instead of 400, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 69: Your conferees changed the appropriation so as to conform to the foregoing statement.

On amendment No. 70: Change in total only.

On amendments Nos. 71 and 72: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 73: Your conferees accepted the Senate provision for the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico.

On amendment No. 74: This amendment appropriates $4,226.14 to pay for the completion of the construction of a bridge across San Juan River at Shiprock, N. Mex.

On amendments Nos. 75, 76, 77, 78, and 79: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 80: Your conferees accepted this amendment appropriating $8,000 for the construction of a bridge across the Ocona Lufty River, in North Carolina, which was authorized by law.

On amendment No. 81: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 82: This amendment provides for a shop building at Wahpeton, N. Dak.

On amendment No. 83: Change in total only.

On amendment No. 84: This amendment authorizes the sale of 2 acres of land for school purposes in certain townships in the State of North Dakota to the public-school district in which the land is situated at not less than the appraised valuation.

On amendment No. 85: This amendment appropriates $676 to reimburse Benson County, N. Dak., for moneys actually expended for the care of three insane Indians, and your conferees accepted the same.

On amendment No. 86: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 87: This amendment authorizes the improvement of the water and engineering system at a cost of $20,000 for the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., and your conferees accepted the same.

On amendment No. 88: Change in total only.

On amendment No. 89: Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 90: Your conferees compromised the appropriation for necessary expenditures of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma by making the amount $30,000 instead of $35,000.

On amendment No. 91: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which provides that not exceeding $35,000 of the unexpended Osage tribal funds may be used in the construction of a fireproof building.

On amendment No. 92: Your conferees accepted the Senate item, which authorizes the payment to Victor M. Locke the sum of $1,290.26, due him for salary and expenses as principal chief of the Choctaw Nation.

On amendment No. 93: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which provides for the payment of interest upon certain interest-bearing trust funds belonging to the Cherokee Nation.

On amendment No. 94: Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 95: Your conferees accepted this amendment, which increases the appropriation for the expenses of the administration of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, $20,000, and makes the same immediately available.

On amendments Nos. 96 and 97: Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 98: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate a claim of John Calvin Gray, which is not to exceed $200, and if it is found to be valid the Secretary may apply the amount found due to the payment of a fee due Henry W. Blair.

On amendments Nos. 99 and 100: This is a change in phraseology only.

On amendment No. 101: Your conferees accept the Senate amendment but authorize only $10,000 to be used for the payment of salaries of employees and other expenses in connection with the further sales of tribal lands belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes.

On amendment No. 102: Your conferees accept this amendment, which authorizes the payment of $7,000 due Stuart, Lewis, Gordon, and Rutherford in full settlement of a claim against the said Creek Nation.

On amendment No. 103: Your conferees accepted the language used in the law with reference to not prohibiting the sale of land now provided for by law.

On amendment No. 104: This amendment reimburses William R. McIntosh in the sum of $1,666.65 for services rendered as coal and asphalt mining trustee for the Choctaw Nation, which your conferees accepted.

On amendment No. 105: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment reimbursing Jacob B. Moore $392.60 for probate expenses incurred by him as attorney for the Chickasaws, as per contract entered into between him and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, which was approved by the President of the United States.

On amendment No. 106: Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 107: Your conferees accepted this amendment, as it reduces the appropriation $1,000.

On amendment No. 108: This amendment provides for the investigation of the claim of Charles S. Hood.

On amendment No. 109: Your conferees accepted this amendment, which confers discretionary power on the part of the Secretary of the Interior regarding allotments in the Klamath Reservation, Oreg.

On amendment No. 110: Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 111: This amendment authorizes an increase of $2,000 for general repairs and improvements at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., which your conferees accepted.

On amendment No. 112: This is a change of total only.

On amendment No. 113: This amendment authorizes the appropriation of $10,000 for an artesian well at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., which your conferees accepted.

On amendment No. 114: This is change in total only.

On amendment No. 115: Your conferees accepted the Senate provision, which reduces the pay for subsistence of the Yankton Sioux Indians of South Dakota.

On amendment No. 116: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which allows the withdrawal of $140,000 from the tribal funds of the Rosebud Sioux Indians for the purpose of making a $25 per capita payment to the Indians entitled thereto.

On amendments Nos. 117, 118, and 119: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 120: The Senate amendment appropriates $100,000, to remain available until expended, for the beginning of the construction of diversion dams and canal systems for irrigating certain lands on the Yakima Indian Reservation, at a total cost not to exceed $150,000. Your conferees allow only $75,000 to be immediately available, and do not allow this sum to remain available until expended.

On amendment No. 121: This amendment authorizes the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior to report to Congress the advisability of returning to the dispossessed Indians several tracts of land taken from the Nisqually Indians by the War Department.

On amendment No. 122: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 123: Your conferees accepted the Senate amendment, which allows $2,500 for the drainage of school lands at the Indian school at Tomah, Wash.

On amendment No. 124: Change in total only.

On amendment No. 125: This amendment is a change in phraseology from the House text relating to the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan.

On amendment No. 126: This amendment authorizes the appropriation of $1,000 to relieve cases of actual distress and suffering among needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin.

On amendment No. 127: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 128: This amendment authorizes the construction of a road from the village of Odanah, in the Bad River Reservation, at a cost of $20,000, which your conferees accept, with the customary provision that no part of this money shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Wisconsin satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the State of at least one-half of the construction of said road.

On amendment No. 129: This amendment validates the relinquishment by John Stone of certain lands in the State of Wisconsin.

On amendments Nos. 130 and 131: The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 132: This amendment reduces the appropriation for the equalization of allotments on the Crow Reservation in Montana $150,000, as the item was provided for elsewhere in the bill.

On amendment No. 133: This is an amendment providing for the mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations. Your conferees provided that the rentals should not be less than $1 per acre, that the period of leases should be reduced to 20 years, and made certain changes that were necessary in the phraseology.

C. D. CARTER,
CARL HAYDEN,
DENVER S. CHURCH,
P. P. CAMPBELL,
HOMER P. SNYDER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the National Board of Vocational Education.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the question of Zionism.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of Zionism. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. SABATH. No; it is a proclamation that was issued yesterday.

Mr. WALSH. By whom?

Mr. SABATH. By a special committee in session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the bill H. R. 16213, which I introduced. I will state that they are my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. It there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, we had better find out what this proceeding out of order is. Everybody's mind is in a rather woolly condition.

Mr. CROSSER. I am just going to talk about matters which are more or less of a personal nature. This is my last day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, lest I should not have time at the close of my remarks, I desire to refer, briefly now, to a matter of a personal nature.

I retire from Congress on the 4th of March and return to the practice of law in Cleveland. The Members of Congress have been so insistent, so irresistible, in their appeals to me to return to the practice of law, so that they might employ me to help them out of the troubles which the laws passed by Congress have brought upon them, that to accommodate them I have opened a law office in the Garfield Building, at the corner of East Sixth Street and Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, America's best city. Remembering how enthusiastically Members have complimented me as a man and as a lawyer, I know how eagerly they will seek my services, and therefore caution them not to jam the doorway as they rush into my office.

Pleasantry aside, however, I wish to assure you that I shall be genuinely pleased to welcome you to Cleveland whenever you find it possible to go there.

Mr. Chairman, we hear lately much prating about democracy, in the broad sense of the word. Many of those who always have been and are opposed to genuine popular government are now pretending to favor control of the Government and parties by the people. If, however, you suggest to these people that the way to accomplish this would be to provide the initiative and the referendum, so that the people might procure measures which they want, and reject those which they do not want, and that laws be passed assuring free expression by the people in nominating and electing public officials, they immediately take panic and will have none of it.

They then inform you that the people are too ignorant to decide what laws they should have. These are the men who are endeavoring to procure the repeal of the direct primary laws of the States, while insisting at the same time that they want the will of the people to be law, and that they be enabled to make their own selection of public officials. As a matter of fact, they oppose the direct primary because it hampers the special advantage seekers and their agents, the political bosses, in their effort to dictate absolutely who should or should not be placed in public office. The excitement caused by the war has prevented the public from watching the tactics of these men, and the people must now prepare to oppose them. It will, however, be no answer and no remedy to apply offensive names to men whose ideas of government are so clearly intended to benefit those seeking special advantage by law. Those who have made the science of government a special study should not allow the abuse of ignorantly selfish men to cause them to call names. They should expose the selfishness of such men rather than imitate their bigotry and indecency.

Everyone, of course, who has given any serious study to questions of government realizes that it is only because of the tendency of men to serve their own interests, regardless of the equal rights of others, that government is necessary. We must, therefore, always strive to devise laws to prevent, as far as possible, one individual or class from trampling upon what, according to the best conception of justice, are the rights of others.

With this object in mind, the founders of our Government, and particularly such men as Thomas Jefferson, insisted strongly upon the principle that what the majority of the people should favor as a rule of human conduct, should be made law. History had taught Jefferson and his associates that the absolute monarch, who was but human, would, with his unlimited power, serve his own interests to the detriment of the rest of the people. In like manner, it had taught them that in an oligarchy—which means government by the few—the few would do just as the absolute monarch had done; that is, serve primarily their own self-interests. It seemed, therefore, common sense to require as far as possible the consent of a majority of all the people to any law, and thus make as certain as possible the binding force of the will of most of the people.

This plan is sure, of course, to dissatisfy the few who believe that their views should be forced upon the majority, but it is nevertheless a plan which gives all of the people more nearly what they want.

Under monarchies, oligarchies, and like systems the more powerful and clever members of society generally obtained the special advantage which they wanted under the law by securing the favor of the monarch or oligarchy by flattery or by corrupt means. When the new theory of government called "democracy" was established such men were, as usual, resourceful, and began planning how they would retain their advantage.

The question, then, was how to get from the people what they had originally procured from the monarch, or the few. It was easy to see that the first thing necessary was to have public opinion favorable to themselves. To accomplish this they had to control the agencies most influential in forming public opinion. It was evident that the control of publications, in which governmental policies were discussed, was most necessary in order to have public opinion favor those seeking such special privilege as the monarchs and oligarchies had granted before. The assistance of publishers was sought in the same way that the favor of the monarchs and oligarchies had been sought, in accordance with the laws of human nature—by appealing to their self-interest.

In like manner the public speaker and men, who for any reason had influence with their fellow men, were sought and offered inducements to have them use that influence in favor of the man or men seeking special advantage. All this retarded the success of what was called "popular government," and led to such phrases as "democracy is a failure" and "too much democracy is dangerous." The very opposite of such statements is true. It is the lack of means by which to give effective expression to their wishes which has prevented popular government from being a greater success.

In order to have the best public opinion we must encourage sincere discussion; we must assure every individual of the greatest possible freedom in the expression of his ideas. We can not, of course, compel all men to be sincere and honest in the expression of their opinions. Everyone knows that many men, believing it to be to their advantage, advocate what they do not believe rather than what they believe to be justice, although the desire for justice shows, after all, enlightened self-interest.

We can, however, guarantee to everyone the right to advocate what he believes to be justice, and what he believes to be better laws; and we can also, to a great extent, prevent the use of methods and influences which induce men to advocate what they know to be wrong and inimical to the public welfare. It is far more important, of course, to guarantee to every individual the right to advocate what he believes to be right and oppose what he considers wrong. The enjoyment of this right is one of the essentials of democracy, and the denial of this right is the distinguishing characteristic of autocracy. Under autocracies the people are prevented from expressing their views to each other unless they should be the views of the autocrats. This prevents material, mental, and moral progress, for if the human mind is prevented from expressing itself it fails to develop.

The material progress of any people depends, of course, on their mental progress; and while it is unfortunate that men suffer so much injustice in the distribution of wealth it is a still greater wrong that the mind is prevented from attaining that higher development, from striving toward that high ideal which is the ultimate goal of the human race.

The greatest difference between the people who have been reared under an autocracy and those who have lived under a government approximating a democracy is that the people of a democracy have more independence of spirit, greater initiative, and are more resourceful than those who have been compelled to live under an autocratic government.

We have heard much lately about the great value of European military systems in developing men. Although people who have lived under an autocracy may, perhaps, perform routine duties accurately and obey orders willingly, they do not progress well without orders. They are more the creatures of habit than men of free minds. We should, therefore, do everything possible to encourage the best possible expression of the individual. Unfortunately, however, we seem to have taken the opposite course. The expression of any opinion or ideal contrary to that held by the powerful and special privilege-seeking few has been hampered, not by the use of arguments, for the right to argue even for special privilege must be conceded by the advocates of democracy and tolerance, but rather by coercion and terrorism. When dealing with those who do not know their rights, this class of men simply threaten and intimidate.

When confronted by men who know their legal rights and how to present views opposed to special privilege, the special-privilege seekers resort to verbal abuse and social ostracism. Their only arguments are epithets. If you suggest that the basis of democracy is the interchange of opinion between man and man, their only attempt at argument is the use of such terms as "anarchist," "socialist," "bolshevist," or some other term, the meaning of which they ordinarily do not understand. These attacks are generally directed against men in public life. They reached the depths of indecency in the recent onslaught against Members of Congress who held views opposed to the opinions of men of autocratic tendencies. Every effort was made to stir up hatred in the minds of the people against Members who did not agree with those who seek and enjoy special privilege, and offensive names were applied to them. All this was for the purpose of destroying Members who dared defy the special-advantage seekers. Men, in the belief that they were serving the best interests of their country, which, after all, is the meaning of "patriotism," and who knowingly opened themselves to abuse by those who are greedy for wealth and grasping for excess profits, were denounced as disloyal, unpatriotic, and so forth.

Abuse in the public prints was not, of course, the only method adopted. Men who honestly approved public officials who had angered the special interests were intimidated and threatened by the agents of the special interests if they should express approval of the man or men whom the interests were opposing. The election machinery was interfered with, election laws were violated, men were threatened with the destruction of their business, and all of this was winked at by publishers who were determined, at all costs, to have their own views accepted and the men, whom they selected, placed in power. In more than one instance men were counted out after having received a majority of the votes of the people, but the election laws provided no remedy.

The lack of proper election laws is one of the most serious obstacles to clean elections. In some States, including Ohio, no provision is made for a recount in primary elections for Congress. If the States refuse to safeguard elections to Congress, then Congress must do so.

Men must, however, be willing to suffer this sort of thing for the privilege of upholding what they believe to be right, because if the evils referred to are not combated our system of government will be in danger. It has been truly said that intellectual alertness and agility are not hard to find, but moral fiber, moral courage, is a rare gem.

For the want of something more sensational during the lull in the world of news since the war ended, we find newspapers howling about the shortcomings of city and county officials throughout the country, their lack of moral backbone to uphold the right, to enforce the law, and so forth; and yet, considering the methods and tactics they have pursued, should these publishers be surprised at this "moral breakdown," as they call it? If public officials can be forced, by misrepresentation and abuse, to obey the commands of newspaper publishers whom they believe to be wrong on any subject, however right the publishers may believe themselves to be, how can we expect such officials to resist the demands or temptations of other political agencies? Men who will sacrifice their principles to gain or retain the support of one influential man or class of men will, in like manner, sacrifice what is right to gain or hold the support of others. Thus it is that we find the political parrot in office, yielding to this influence or that, and so making justice a mockery. The wonder is, not that we have spineless men in office, but, rather, that we have so many men of strong character in public office.

Like other private citizens, before I entered public life I had read much about the alleged trickery practiced in Congress, but one of the greatest pleasures I have derived from my service here is to be able to say sincerely that with very, very few exceptions the men with whom I have served are as far above temptation and as free from deceit as it is possible for men to be. The statements of 99 per cent of the men in Congress, as to official matters, are as good as their bonds. I shall always cherish as one of the finest experiences of my life my association with the Members of the House, practically all of whom are men of great ability, and who, almost without exception, are men of real character and fine impulse. While, like most men who have served here, I leave in financial circumstances no better, if, indeed, as good as when I came here, my association with the membership of the House I value more than words can express. The kindness and good fellowship which have been invariably shown me I shall treasure during the remainder of my life, and I appreciate, more than I can tell, the expressions of esteem. [Applause.]

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 1 minute and 59 seconds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the conference report now under consideration has to do with the support of the Indian Service for the ensuing year. It is a conference report that has been agreed to with greater ease with the Senate than any conference report that has been brought in from this committee for many years. There are very few things in it that are objectionable. The matter to which I wish to direct especial attention is the fact that this bill, in charge of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], is probably the last of its kind that he will have charge of on the floor of this House as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I do not expect that he will be here when the Democratic Party gets back into power again. [Applause.] He is showing some signs of age——

Mr. STAFFORD. We hope that he will, no matter how distant that may be in the future.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Of course, if he lives to be a hundred, he will probably be here. CHARLEY CARTER, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, took to the chairmanship of that committee a genuine love for the Indians and an interest in Indian affairs that has characterized his services on that committee from the time he became a member of it until this very hour. [Applause.] And whether he is chairman of the committee or not, I am sure that he is interested in the Indians and the Indian Service and will continue to be of service on the Committee on Indian Affairs. He has rendered great service to the Indians and to the country. He is interested that the service should be for the benefit of the Indians. Unfortunately for the Indians and for the country, there are a good many who have the impression that the Indian Service is for the benefit of the white man who is rendering the service to the Indian. Unfortunately, there is more to be said upon that subject than I can say in three minutes, but I congratulate the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] upon the splendid service that he has rendered to the original American, the American Indian, of whom he is one, during his service on the Committee on Indian Affairs and during the time he has been chairman of that great committee. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I assume the gentleman is going to make some explanation of the amendments agreed to in conference, as this bill was taken from the Speaker's table before the Senate amendments had been printed and without any opportunity on the part of Members to study the various amendments. I am quite interested in amendments 96 and 97, which were strongly contested in the House, which authorized the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes to pass final judgment on oil and coal leases.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Gas, not coal.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been advised unofficially that it is the understanding among the conferees that this amendment is provisionally adopted with the understanding that if this work is not satisfactory during the coming fiscal year that it will be open to further consideration when the next annual Indian appropriation bill is considered. Is there any basis for that understanding?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that question was raised in the conference on the bill and the gentleman will note that this amendment only applies for the current year and it was so held last year by the chairman then presiding over the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is not permanent law. It simply obtains for the coming year and the House still has the right to avail itself of such action as it sees fit at the next session of Congress. If this appears to be bad administration to the Indian and the service, then the House has it all before it again.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there any understanding that this arrangement was merely provisional?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That point was raised. There was no hard and fast understanding about it. The law itself only carries this provision for the next fiscal year so it would not be necessary to have any understanding. The law speaks plainer than an understanding among the conferees could speak.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wished to bring that out in the RECORD so that if this new rule is not satisfactory, it will be easy to show that it was not agreed to for all time to come.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows from the reading of the language that can be done very easily at the next session of Congress.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one additional statement which I do not believe has ever been emphasized in this House. Now, as well as our distinguished chairman, I am a member of the Cherokee Tribe, as is our colleague here [Mr. CHANDLER]. We are deeply interested in the Five Civilized Tribes. Now, everybody knows down in Oklahoma that it is in the interest of the Indian to have the uncontested leases approved down there, for the reason the delays in sending them to Washington makes the departmental leases of less value and sell for less than commercial leases. Now, my friend and colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] knows that is true, and I ask him if that is not true?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have had that question up on the floor of the House here at different times of taking from the Bureau of Indian Affairs this authority. The Indian Rights Association——

Mr. HASTINGS. But the Bureau of Indian Affairs never wants to give up any jurisdiction. They want to concentrate all of its power here and never want to give any jurisdiction to any local authority. In reference to this amendment, it only applies to the uncontested leases. You have a superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, with 250 civil-service employees there with a splendid oil bureau and all the information can be gotten there and no additional information comes here to Washington, except the report of the superintendent.

And the delay in sending these leases to Washington makes the leases less valuable to the Indian, and the Indian is the loser instead of the gainer by departmental approval of leases, and every oil man in our country knows that is true. I do not believe I have ever had an opportunity to emphasize before that this amendment is in the interest of the Indians of that country. And let me say to you while I am on my feet now that there is not a single solitary Indian, let him be lawyer, banker, laborer, farmer, or whatever he may be, in Oklahoma that is not in favor of this legislation. There is not a white man in Oklahoma that is not in favor of this legislation, and all the members of the Oklahoma delegation favor it.

Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin if the two and one-quarter million of people in Oklahoma, if all the Indians in Oklahoma, if all the white men in Oklahoma, if all the editors and lawyers, all of them, favor this legislation, certainly it can not be very wrong.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that during the four years on the committee I have listened to this argument many times, and I am convinced that since the Indian Office maintains in Oklahoma a bureau with all the powers that exist in the bureau here in Washington, it is absolutely unnecessary to pass upon a purely business proposition the second time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. SNYDER. Therefore I favor this proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the motive that causes the contesting of this proposition on the part of the Indian Rights Association, which is purely a voluntary association and existing for the protection of the Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. The only answer I can give to that is that there might be a case out of a thousand that ought to come on here, and that might not get here if this proposition is conceded and becomes a law. But at the very worst it can only be for one year, and I can say to the gentleman that the conference committee assumes, and it was practically agreed, that this could be readily taken up within the next year in case there were objections filed against it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct further attention to the Wisconsin item, amendment No. 26, on page 17, in which you except the Menominee Indians from being privileged to having new permanent rolls and the receiving of allotments based on such rolls.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What amendment is that?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. 26.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. On that amendment the House receded and accepted the Senate plan.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am now seeking information as to why the House conferees saw fit to except the Menominee Indian Reservation so that their affairs can not be settled.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Wisconsin asked that that amendment be made by the Senate, because the Menominee rolls were completed, and they did not want to duplicate the rolls. The rolls as now made are satisfactory, and we did not want to do the work over again.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not only have they been made, but they are judicially authenticated. A decision has been handed down by the court saying which Indian is of Indian blood and which is not. So, it is a question of res adjudicata, which we did not wish to disturb.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, I wish to inquire about amendment No. 93, as found on page 51. That is the payment of interest on certain trust funds of the Cherokee Indians, and which has been reported in a bill from the Committee on Indians Affairs and has been up for your consideration in this House under unanimous consent, and objection to which was raised to that part which authorized the payment to the attorney of the tribe. The Secretary of the Interior objected to the bill as reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, because they provided payment of this interest fund to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation. As I recall the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, it was provided that this fund should be paid to members of the nation. Am I in error as to that position?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, I can not say as to that. I do not recall. The bill was reported some time ago from the committee, and while the Committee on Indian Affairs, like other committees of the House, is always glad to have any information and any recommendation the Secretary of the Interior may give, we do not always feel impelled to follow those recommendations. As a rule we do, but sometimes we disagree with the Secretary, and in that case we usually go contrary to his recommendation.

Now, for the specific information the gentleman wants, I refer him to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], who proposed the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. As the gentleman knows, there were four items in this judgment of the Court of Claims which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, as to items 1 and 4, the Secretary of the Interior agreed that they ought to be paid, and he recommended that they be paid. And this amendment is in the same language as the bill that was introduced in the Senate and favorably reported by the Senate committee, and is in the same language as the bill introduced in the House and reported by the House committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. And when it was presented for consideration on the floor on the Unanimous Consent Calendar——

Mr. HASTINGS. It could not be considered because the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] would not permit it to be considered.

Mr. STAFFORD. It did receive some consideration on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman would not allow it to be considered. I tried every time to get it, and, as the gentleman knows, I sat in my seat here every unanimous-consent day and tried to get it up, and I had no objection from anybody else in the House except my genial friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. My objection, I will state to the gentleman, was only to that part which authorized the payment of the interest on this fund to the agent, because the Secretary of the Interior had protested against it.

Mr. HASTINGS. We follow the Secretary of the Interior in a great many instances, but do not always follow him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state some reason why the interest on these trust funds should be paid over to an individual of the Cherokee Nation and not, as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, paid to the Cherokee Nation as a tribe?

Mr. HASTINGS. In the first place, it does not make any difference to the United States, if it is paying its honest obligations, what is the name of the agent for the Cherokee Nation it pays it to. In the second place, it is quite a long story. If the gentleman will give me enough time, I will give him an explanation that will be entirely satisfactory, I think. It is satisfactory to my mind, at least, and I think it would be to the gentleman's mind if the gentleman knew the facts about that tribal fund. The trouble is the gentleman gets up and asks me a question on the floor of the House involving a long answer and expects me to answer it in a single sentence. This claim grew out of the treaty of 1835.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I only wish to have information as to why you are paying it to the attorney rather than, as the Secretary recommends, to the Nation itself.

Mr. HASTINGS. I can give it to you. It grows out of the treaty of 1835. Part of it was paid in 1852 by an appropriation by Congress. Finally, when we provided for the opening of the Cherokee strip the accounting officers appointed under the agreement found that the amount due was something over $4,000,000, which, with the interest, finally became approximately $4,800,000. The Government would not pay it. The attorneys of the Cherokee Nation remained here about 8 or 10 years, and gentlemen objected to it, and finally the case was sent to the Court of Claims. One representative of the Cherokee Tribe was here, and hung about the halls of Congress, and haunted the committee rooms, and worked in behalf of this claim, to my certain knowledge, for 20 or 25 years. It finally got to the Court of Claims. That court rendered an opinion in our favor in 1905, and on appeal the case went to the Supreme Court in 1906, and was there affirmed.

This man was not the attorney of record, and when the appeal was allowed he was not paid as other attorneys, under the decision of the Court of Claims, because he was not technically an attorney of record. Now, he has been here for 14 years contending that that judgment was erroneously paid. He contends it was not paid in full. He has been in conference with the Interior Department and with the Committees on Indian Affairs of the House and Senate and other committees of Congress trying to get relief in the matter for the past 10 or 15 years. Now he is going into the courts on items 2 and 3, and this is a small amount that is going to be received by him. In the final accounting, when the final judgment is rendered, he will have to account for it. In the other bill sending this matter to the Court of Claims we provide that he shall not have more pay than is allowed by the Court of Claims and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, so that the Secretary of the Interior will have the final approval of the matter of his compensation in the end.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House what is the total amount under the interest charge that will be paid to him under the bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not figured it up. The interest continues to increase the amount, and I have not figured it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. According to the report on the House bill, the amount on item No. 1 will be $2,195.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not paid to him according to my recollection of his agreement filed with the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. This amendment in the bill provides for interest on item No. 1 and interest on item No. 4.

Mr. HASTINGS. He will not get it all under his contract. Anyway, that is the explanation. It is a long story.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] tells me it does not apply to item No. 1. But let me call the attention of the gentleman to the item on line 20.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am sure that he does not get that under the contract that has been filed before the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under item 4 the interest is $20,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is an increasing amount as time goes on.

Mr. STAFFORD. In addition to that, the interest on these sums that accrued since then has been added. Is the gentleman going to get all this money and the Cherokee Nation get nothing?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no. I have tried to explain it to the gentleman. We sent those other items 2 and 3 to the court.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not talking about items 2 and 3. I am talking about items 1 and 4.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have been trying to explain to the gentleman that that part of it, items 2 and 3, goes to the Court, and in the final settlement and the allowance for the whole work done that has to be approved by the Court of Claims and the Secretary of the Interior. The matter can then be adjusted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am calling the gentleman's attention to items 1 and 4 in this provision, and the minimum amount is something like $25,000. You propose to pay that to a man who has been hanging around the corridors of Congress——

Mr. HASTINGS. For twenty-odd years he fought for this claim, and for the last 12 or 14 years fought it alone and single handed, and he deserves the credit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Like the colored messenger represented in Hoyt's "Texas Steer," the Ambassador to Dahomey, who hung around.

I think the gentleman in fairness to the House should allow the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to refer to a very important item which was agreed to. I think there should be a little explanation, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the conferees agreed to an important amendment, the last amendment in the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the last amendment in the bill, Senate amendment No. 133, consists of the language of S. 385, an act to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations, as reported to the House on July 1, 1918, the several amendments to that act recommended by the House Committee on Indian Affairs being included. This is practically the same bill which passed the House in the Sixty-fourth Congress, and meets with the approval of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Board of Indian Commissioners, the Indian Rights Association, and other friends of the Indians. On February 3 of the present year S. 385 was considered in the House on a motion which I made to suspend the rules and pass it. But 12 votes were lacking of the required two-thirds majority, the result of the roll call being yeas 168, nays 90.

This legislation as originally introduced by me was derived from applicable sections of the coal, oil, and gas leasing bill, which has passed this House in three successive Congresses. A few days ago the House adopted the conference report on that general measure, and no one objected to its leasing provisions. All of the controversy was over the sale of certain areas of coal lands. Now, under the terms of the Senate amendment No. 133 not an acre of Indian land can be sold. Provision is made for leasing unallotted lands the title to which remains in the Indian tribes.

Inasmuch as the House had so recently approved the conference report on the coal, oil, and gas leasing bill, your conferees compared this Senate amendment with that report and changed it in several particulars to conform thereto. Coal leases are for 20 years, so the leasing period has been reduced from 30 to 20 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the provision substantially like that of the House leasing bill as it passed, not as it was changed in conference?

Mr. HAYDEN. The leasing provisions of the coal, oil, and gas bill were not changed in conference at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. The conference report on the oil leasing bill provided for allowing one-fourth of the claim in fee to the person who prospected.

Mr. HAYDEN. No fee title is provided for in this bill. The title to all leased lands remains in the United States in trust for the Indians. The provision of this amendment which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant to the lessee the right to use a tract of land for camp sites, milling, smelting, or refining works, and so forth, was further amended at the request of the House conferees to require the payment of an annual rental of not less than $1 per acre. The rental to be paid on the land covered by the lease was also made not less than 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1 per acre a year. With these changes all rentals and royalties are now mere minimums, thus conforming to the general leasing bill, and the Secretary of the Interior has full authority to charge the lessee as much as he pleases for the privilege of mining ore from any claim on any Indian reservation. Anyone who is at all familiar with the business methods of the Indian Office knows that the officials of that bureau will be sure to charge all if not more than is warranted. They never overlook an opportunity to show that they have fully protected the interests of the Indians.

There is nothing to prevent the Secretary of the Interior from providing in the lease that the royalties shall be based upon the value of the total metallic content of the ore as mined, payable on a sliding scale, so that the rate of royalty will automatically increase if a rich pocket should be struck and will decline if leaner ores are encountered. The railroads vary their transportation charges according to the value of the ore as shown by the smelter returns, and through an arrangement with the smelters the freight payments are deducted from the producer's net returns. It would be very easy for the Secretary of the Interior to make an arrangement with the smelters for deductions of royalties on a similar sliding scale. If the plan just suggested is not adopted the Secretary has the undoubted right to inquire as to the richness of the ores, the quantity in sight, the nearness to transportation, and every other factor entering into the value of the mining claim before he makes any such lease.

Gentlemen say that there is no hurry about this matter, that this legislation can wait, that the minerals on Indian reservations will not deteriorate in the ground, and that they should be conserved for the benefit of future generations. I do not wonder that such gentlemen are sometimes called reactionary, for a more unprogressive argument was never advanced. The Indians need the money from royalties and rentals to provide them with schools, with more sanitary homes, and for their general advancement in civilization. Every dollar that is received from this source will relieve the Treasury by just that much, because Congress does not make gratuity appropriations where tribal funds are available.

The 30,000,000 acres of unallotted Indian lands in the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming affected by this amendment, are by no means all mineral bearing, probably not a tenth of it would be looked at twice by a prospector. But where valuable minerals that can be mined do exist, the deposits should be made available as provided in this legislation. Not an acre of that land can now be taxed to support the State and county governments. The people of those States, Indian and white alike, have a right to ask that these resources be developed, and when a carefully considered plan of operations is presented to Congress, a plan approved by every friend of the Indians, it is our duty to act favorably upon it. To do otherwise is to deny that there shall be advancement by either the red man or the white man in the West.

Suppose, for example, that what is now Cook County had been set aside in the early days as a reservation for the Indians of Illinois and those who claim to be guardians of the Indians had insisted that it remain a primeval wilderness for their use and enjoyment in accordance with their savage customs, does anyone doubt for a moment that instead of the great city of Chicago there would be an Indian agent in charge at Fort Dearborn and the site of the Auditorium Building would still be a frog pond? If another reservation had been established a little farther north for the Indians of Wisconsin, I can assure the gentleman who so ably represent that State and city in this House that Milwaukee would never have had an opportunity to become famous.

Some gentlemen may prefer to see the Indians living amid disease and squalor in their wickiups and hogans, because such barbaric surroundings are always considered picturesque. Those who have really studied the Indian problem know that we should adopt another policy. The resources of the reservations must be developed and, paying their own way, the Indians can thus be advanced in civilization until they become fitted for citizenship.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and that I may speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD, and also that he may speak out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, since my return from Europe last week I had hoped that I might be able to secure in the House time to give in detail some of the experiences that I had and some of the observations I was able to make while visiting the battle fronts in France, Belgium, and Germany. With the congestion of legislative work before us I realized that time can not be spared for any long address now before the close of the session, so in the time that has been so generously given me I wish briefly to call your attention to one of the most important problems now confronting the allied nations for solution.

The center of the greatest interest in Europe during the past two months has been at the beautiful building of the French foreign office, on the Quai d'Orsay, in Paris, where is being held the peace conferences.

Of all the subjects of the conference the one that seems in the minds of the people of Europe to overshadow in importance all others is the proposed league of nations. The people of Europe are weary and tired of war. The experience that they have lived through during the last four years has burned deep in their souls the unspeakable horrors, cruelties, and sufferings of war. Their hearts cry out more for some organization or power that will lessen the future possibility of war than for a mere peace pact between the allied and central European powers, drawing down the curtain on the great war, in the fiery cauldron of which they and theirs have suffered indescribably. It was my very great privilege to be able to visit during the last two months in Paris and London and throughout the war-torn regions of France, Belgium, England, and Germany, including in the latter country the territory now occupied by the allied armies. My eyes have seen the devastation and ruin that the war has wrought in Belgium, in France, and in England and in Germany. My ears have heard the pitiful, heart-rending tales of those who have suffered and who are suffering from the fierce, hot, blighting breath of war, which has so terribly scarred and defaced the fairest lands and the most beautiful structures that the will of God and the genius of man have produced in all the centuries of time in the Old World. Having seen and heard what they have endured and what they have suffered, the great cry from the souls of the masses against future wars did not come to me with any surprise.

Seated at one end of the three great tables around which the seventy-odd members of the peace conference were gathered in the clock room of the French foreign office in Paris, I had full opportunity to note the profound and reverent attention each member of the conference gave to every argument or discussion which dealt with the question of the formation of the league of nations to promote international cooperation and to secure peace and the maintenance of justice between the nations of the earth. Their attitude and their attention toward the subject reflected the ardent hope and desire of the hundreds of millions of people whom they represented, for a new and better era of world relationship and for a reign of lasting peace between all nations and all peoples. While the rank and file of the people of the allied nations in Europe are united in their hopes and desires for a league of nations, not all the politicians and statesmen in Europe are in favor of this great movement. Personal selfishness and desire for personal preferment and gain seems to impel a considerable number who now hold the scepters of power in Europe to oppose the formation of a league of nations, the underlying principles of which are altruism, justice, and humanity.

The leadership in the fight for a league of nations has been accorded by common consent of all its supporters at the peace conference to President Wilson, on account of his wide and thorough knowledge of world history, his unswerving fidelity to the underlying principles and purposes of the league of nations, his thoughtful tact in dealing with opposition, and his outstanding and unequaled ability to present in forceful and convincing language the reasons and arguments in favor of the league. [Applause.] It is generally recognized in France that the great victory won in securing from the special committee of the peace conference which had been assigned the work of considering and preparing a draft for a constitution for the organization of the league of nations unanimous recommendation to the peace conference in favor of the adoption of a definite covenant for the league of nations, which covenant, with the report of the special committee, President Wilson presented to the peace conference in full session on Friday, March 14, was not only a memorable victory for the honest and sincere advocates throughout the world of a league of nations, but was the highest compliment that could be paid to the matchless arguments of President Wilson in behalf of the league. [Applause.] None of the sponsors at Paris for the draft of the constitution of the league of nations considers it letter perfect or without need of some changes. It does, however, represent the most significant collective achievement for the prevention of war yet attempted by civilized nations. Its submission to the court of public opinion of mankind before adoption by the delegates of the various nations represented at the peace conference shows that old-time secret diplomacy is being discarded and that a new era of fair and just covenants openly arrived at is to take its place. [Applause.]

I want to impress upon you that to-day the eyes of the people of Europe and Asia are turned toward this great Nation. Without the cooperation and assistance of this Nation there can at this time be no effective league of nations. The peace that is soon to be made, ending the great war, is to set up a great number of new nations. Anyone who has made any careful study of conditions in Europe knows that unless some organization is formed at the same time that the peace terms are signed, to protect and guide these new nations, Europe will be in a turmoil of war again within a very few years. That is why those who have carried on the war, that is why those who have offered up supreme sacrifices in the war during the past four years, feel more deeply on the subject of the league of nations than they do on that of the mere ending of the war.

I had the privilege and good fortune to be present at the opening of the general meeting of the peace conference at the French foreign office in Paris on Tuesday, February 14. This memorable meeting was called to order by the quick, sharp words of the distinguished chairman of the meeting, the most commanding French statesman of the hour, the most powerful citizen in all France that the war has produced, M. Georges Clemenceau. Almost immediately after M. Clemenceau had called the conference to order President Wilson began his address, including the reading of the covenant for a league of nations, which it had been unanimously agreed upon by the committee appointed to the work of drafting a constitution for the formation of a league of nations should be reported to the full conference, with the recommendation that the covenant be adopted by the full conference. The fact that the report was signed by 14 of the powers represented at the conference seemed to make almost certain that the covenant will finally be ratified and become an integral part of the terms of peace to be signed at Versailles. Following President Wilson, Lord Robert Cecil, for England, sounded a clear note in support of the league and its principles. Then, Mr. Orlando, for Italy, and M. Leon Bourgeois, for France, and Baron Makino, for Japan, voiced the approval of the millions of people they represented for the proposed league of nations. These speeches were followed by short speeches by Mr. Barnes, of England, representing organized labor in England, and by Mr. Venizelos, for Greece, who, it was generally considered, made the most effective address at the great meeting of the conference, excepting the address of President Wilson, which was unanimously considered to have been far superior in thought and in force to any of the others. The conference, which began at 3.30, was brought to a close at 6.55, following an interrogatory by Mr. Hughes, of Australia, who wanted to know when time would be given to debate particular items of the covenant and offer amendments thereto.

M. Clemenceau replied at length to Mr. Hughes, stating that the covenant would be laid on the table during the absence of President Wilson in the United States and would be taken up again on the President's return.

No one who witnessed the scene of that great gathering at the French foreign office on the afternoon of the 14th of February and heard the earnest words spoken from the very hearts of the greatest and most distinguished statesmen of our time, spoken with the fullest knowledge and thought of the responsibilities they owed to more than seven hundred millions of people throughout the world whom they represented, could entertain any doubt as to the tremendous need and importance to the future peace of the world of a league of nations, or as to the present timeliness and practicability of the formation of such a league. While the awful din and roar of the great war has been stilled in western Europe, since the armistice became effective on November 11, a number of wars have been continued and are still going on in eastern Europe and in the Balkan Peninsula. These minor struggles in themselves would in ordinary times greatly engage the attention of the world, as the loss of life and the destruction of property is large. Following so soon the greatest of wars, we seem not to be able to properly comprehend their importance or to measure their effect. This warring condition between the different nationalities over boundaries and commercial relations will continue in the future as it has in all past centuries unless some tribunal is provided by the leading nations of the world where all nations, both great and small, may have their differences and claims against other nations passed upon and settled in fairness and justice. That is what the covenant for the league of nations provides for.

The working organization of the league, as provided by the covenant or proposed constitution, is to consist, first, of a body of delegates representing the nations that are members of the league. These delegates are to assemble in meeting at specified times, and are to carry out the purpose of the league of nations, which, as stated in its preamble, are "to promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another."

The body of delegates are empowered to choose an executive council consisting of representatives of the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, together with representatives of four other States, members of the league. The executive council is to meet at frequent intervals and it is given power to consider and to act upon any matter within the sphere of action of the league affecting the people of the world. A permanent secretariat is to be established at the seat of the league and a secretary general is provided, whose duty it is to preside at the meetings of the body of delegates and also at the meetings of the executive council.

A study of the preamble and the 26 articles of the covenant, which I shall place in the RECORD, makes clear that the purpose of the league is chiefly twofold:

1. To prevent war, and
2. To remove the cause of war.

Viewing the causes and circumstances that have led up to most of the wars of the world, it is well understood that war can generally be prevented by a full and free discussion of the questions involved by the parties interested and by full and open consideration of the consequences of war to those to be affected by it. It is now generally conceded that if even a short consideration of the issues involved and the probable consequences of the great war which began in August, 1914, had been given by representatives of Germany, France, England, and Russia before an open tribunal at the time of the threatened beginning of this war, the war would never have occurred. Such consideration before an open tribunal would have disclosed to Germany and to the world that England would resist to the fullest extent of her power and of her resources any attempt by Germany to overthrow and destroy the Republic of France and extend over France, Belgium, and other European nations her monarchal and military form of government. In the light of this disclosure, the Imperial German Government and her people would not have ventured on the easy conquest of France that her war lords thought they saw before them in 1914.

Article 12 of the covenant recognizes the power of open inquiry and arbitration to avoid war and offers one of the most potent means that could be devised or suggested for the prevention of war. The article is in the following terms:

ART. 12. The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy, they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the questions and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council; and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

In any case under this article the award of the arbitrators shall be made within a reasonable time, and the recommendation of the executive council shall be made within six months after the submission of the dispute.

No nation in the future will be likely to go to war if it knows that the public opinion of the large part of the world is against its action and if it further knows that a severance of all its trade and financial relations with a large number of States and members of the league will be made.

The terms of article 16 of the agreement places a tremendous moral and economic force back of the league, by means of which wars may be prevented without resort to any use of naval or military forces. If the influence of social, financial, and economic forces fail to stop an outlaw nation from waging war upon another nation, the league has, as a gun behind the door, the combined military and naval forces which may be contributed by its members.

Article 16 provides:

Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under article 12, it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not.

It shall be the duty of the executive council in such case to recommend what effective military or naval force the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league.

The high contracting parties agree, further, that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which are taken under this article in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures and that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State and that they will afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the high contracting parties who are cooperating to protect the covenants of the league.

It was seen early in the consideration of the work of the formation of the league of nations that it would not be sufficient that the scope of the league be confined to that of a vigilance committee or jailer. It would not be sufficient that the scope of the work of the league of nations should be confined to dealing with disputes after they had arisen. Peace, it was recognized, will be lasting only when nations unite in so dealing with the causes of war that disputes will not arise. This brings us to the second of the two objects for which the league of nations is to be founded and for which the covenant provides, and that is to remove the cause of war.

The crux of the whole problem of reconstruction and lasting peace is to reduce to the minimum the friction of social, economic, and political relations between the nations, which are among the well-known chief causes of war. Unless the administration of raw materials, markets, shipping facilities, trade relations, backward regions, and investments in these regions are carried on so as to administer equitably to the necessities and to the welfare of all nations they will be certain to continue to give rise to trouble. The league of nations as proposed is clothed with authority to deal with these problems and to adjust them so that all avoidable feelings of unfairness and injustice may be removed.

One of the main objections that at present is being sounded in this country to the United States becoming a member of the league of nations is that the league of nations would break down the Monroe doctrine. I can not see that there is any real grounds for such opposition. Instead of breaking down the Monroe doctrine the league of nations, as proposed, will strengthen it and will in its operation, both in spirit and in letter, prevent the setting up of any autocratic governments on this Western Hemisphere. The whole underlying spirit of the league is opposed to autocratic governments everywhere. The Monroe doctrine announces opposition to the acquiring of any part of this continent by any foreign State. The league of nations is opposed to and is designed to prevent the taking of territory by force or by intrigue to the injury or disadvantage of any other nation. The entire spirit and purpose which animates the formation of a league of nations tends to strengthen and perpetuate the Monroe doctrine rather than to weaken or destroy it. All of the nations, I am sure, that are to be charter members of the league of nations would readily agree to a specific acceptance and approval of the Monroe doctrine if any such specific acceptance and approval were deemed to be needed in addition to the general terms of the covenant proposed.

Another criticism that is made to the United States joining the league of nations is that the league will limit the sovereignty of our Nation. As a matter of fact, the covenant for the league does not diminish our sovereignty to any greater degree than it is now limited by outstanding treaties. It nowhere proposes to take away from Congress the power to declare war or to do anything else that Congress now has power to do. In joining the league this Nation would agree to certain things contained in the constitution of the league. It would then be for our Nation to carry out these agreements through its constitutional power or to disregard them and break the treaty if it so chose. The covenant would not limit our legal freedom of action, but it would diminish our moral freedom of action, as does every treaty. All treaties are in a measure moral limitations on the sovereign freedom of States. There is no treaty which any State has made which, in so far as it establishes obligations to another State, is not a limitation to the sovereignty of that State. If after the war there should be no league of nations and we should make treaties as we should need to, separately, with every single State, we would thereby accumulate a collection of individual limitations upon our national sovereignty. These would, in all probability, be a confused collection, parts of which would be in conflict with others, so that our obligations to one State might on the basis of a treaty easily interfere with the obligations to another, and we then might find ourselves in more troubles instead of fewer in carrying out separate treaties with separate States. Incomparably better and safer for our own peace and for the peace of the world it will be if a league of nations is agreed upon, which in itself will be a great, free, openly-made treaty of justice and good will between all nations, which will put an end for all time to diplomatic intrigues and secret treaties between nations.

The present demand and need for a league of nations is not revolutionary, but rather evolutionary. A few years ago the United States was to a great extent isolated from Europe by both distance and comity of interests. To-day that condition no longer exists. The steamship, the submarine, the aeroplane, the cable, the telephone, the wireless telegraph, and a hundred other marvelous modern inventions have bridged the distance between Europe and America so that any disarrangement or disorganization of the social and economic conditions of the people of Europe quickly affects the welfare of our people in this country. We can not longer, if we would, isolate ourselves from Europe, as we were so fortunately able to do in the days of Washington and Jefferson and down almost to the present time. Nearly two years ago we went into the great war courageously and cheerfully, with a singular elevation of purpose, for the preservation of chivalry, for the expansion of democracy, and for the undergirding of the future security of the world. Our American boys, with a glory unparalleled in the history of the world, carried our starry emblem to victory at Cantigny, at Chateau-Thierry, and in the Argonne Forest. In these victories they broke the throttling grasp of monarchy from the throat of democracy. In these victories, as history will record, they won the great war for chivalry and for democracy. Let no part of the great victories they won be lost. Let us in the same broad, generous, and patriotic spirit with which we gave our support and encouragement to our brave boys in their wonderful work on the long, hard battle line from Flanders to Switzerland give our loyal support and encouragement to the five admirable American citizens who represent our beloved Nation at the great peace conference in Paris, that they may be victorious in all their efforts for humanity, that they may be successful in securing in the peace negotiations an agreement for a league of nations that will redound for all time to the glory of the democracy of the United States and prove to be the most potent instrument the world has ever had for the maintenance of peace and good will among all nations and all peoples. [Applause.]

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS COVENANT.

The epochal draft of the proposed covenant of the league of nations, formulated by the special commission which was authorized by the peace conference on January 25, unanimously adopted by representatives of 14 nations on the commission, reported to the full conference on February 14, 1919, by President Wilson, and now submitted to the public opinion of the world before final action shall be taken on it by the peace conference:

COVENANT.

PREAMBLE. In order to promote internal cooperation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, the powers signatory to the covenant adopt this constitution of the league of nations:

ARTICLE 1. The action of the high contracting parties under the terms of this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of a meeting of a body of delegates representing the high contracting parties, of meetings at more frequent intervals of an executive council, and of a permanent international secretariat to be established at the seat of the league.

ART. 2. Meetings of the body of delegates shall be held at stated intervals and from time to time as occasion may require for the purpose of dealing with matters within the sphere of action of the league. Meetings of the body of delegates shall be held at the seat of the league or at such other places as may be found convenient and shall consist of representatives of the high contracting parties. Each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote, but may have not more than three representatives.

ART. 3. The executive council shall consist of representatives of the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, together with representatives of four other States, members of the league. The selection of these four States shall be made by the body of delegates on such principles and in such manner as they think fit. Pending the appointment of these representatives of other States representatives of (blank left for names) shall be members of the executive council.

Meetings of the council shall be held from time to time as occasion may be required and at least once a year at whatever place may be decided on, or, failing any such decision, at the seat of the league, and any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world may be dealt with at such meetings.

Invitations shall be sent to any power to attend a meeting of the council at which such matters directly affecting its interests are to be discussed, and no decision taken at any meeting will be binding on such powers unless so invited.

ART. 4. All matters of procedure at meetings of the body of delegates or the executive council, including the appointment of committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the body of delegates or the executive council and may be decided by a majority of the States represented at the meeting.

The first meeting of the body of delegates and of the executive council shall be summoned by the President of the United States of America.

ART. 5. The permanent secretariat of the league shall be established at ———, which shall constitute the seat of the league. The secretariat shall comprise such secretaries and staff as may be required under the general direction and control of the secretary general of the league, who shall be chosen by the executive council; the secretariat shall be appointed by the secretary general subject to confirmation by the executive council.

The secretary general shall act in that capacity at all meetings of the body of delegates or of the executive council.

The expenses of the secretariat shall be borne by the States members of the league in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the international bureau of the Universal Postal Union.

ART. 6. Representatives of the high contracting parties and officials of the league when engaged in the business of the league shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities and the buildings occupied by the league or its officials or by representatives attending its meetings shall enjoy the benefits of extraterritoriality.

ART. 7. Admission to the league of States not signatories to the covenant and not named in the protocol hereto as States to be invited to adhere to the covenant requires the assent of not less than two-thirds of the States represented in the body of delegates and shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies.

No State shall be admitted to the league unless it is able to give effective guaranties of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations and unless it shall conform to such principles as may be prescribed by the league in regard to its naval and military forces and armaments.

ART. 8. The high contracting parties recognize the principle that the maintenance of peace will require the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations, having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State, and the executive council shall formulate plans for effecting such reduction.

The executive council shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament, and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council.

The high contracting parties agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war lends itself to grave objections and direct the executive council to advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of those countries which are not able to manufacture for themselves the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

The high contracting parties undertake in no way to conceal from each other the conditions of such of their industries as are capable of being adapted to warlike purposes or the scale of their armaments and agree that there shall be full and frank interchange of information as to their military and naval programs.

ART. 9. A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the league on the execution of the provisions of article 8, and on military and naval questions generally.

ART. 10. The high contracting parties shall undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

ART. 11. Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the executive council to any circumstance affecting international intercourse which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

ART. 12. The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the questions and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators, or a recommendation by the executive council, and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

In any case under this article the award of the arbitrators shall be made within a reasonable time, and the recommendation of the executive council shall be made within six months after the submission of the dispute.

ART. 13. The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole matter to arbitration. For this purpose the court of arbitration to which the case is referred shall be the court agreed on by the parties or stipulated in any convention existing between them. The high contracting parties agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered. In the event of any failure to carry out the award the executive council shall propose what steps can best be taken to give effect thereto.

ART. 14. The executive council shall formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice, and this court shall, when established, be competent to hear and determine any matter which the parties recognize as suitable for submission to it for arbitration under the foregoing article.

ART. 15. If there should arise between States members of the league any dispute likely to lead to rupture which is not submitted to arbitration as above, the high contracting parties agree that they will refer the matter to the executive council; either party to the dispute may give notice of the existence of the dispute to the secretary general, who will make all necessary arrangements for a full investigation and consideration thereof. For this purpose the parties agree to communicate to the secretary general as promptly as possible statements of their case, with all the relevant facts and papers, and the executive council may forthwith direct the publication thereof. Where the efforts of the council lead to the settlement of the dispute a statement shall be published indicating the nature of the dispute and that of settlement, together with such explanations as may be appropriate.

If the dispute has not been settled, a report by the council shall be published setting forth with all necessary facts and explanations the recommendation which the council thinks just and proper for the settlement of the dispute. If the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the parties to the dispute the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendations, and that if any party shall refuse so to comply, the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the recommendations.

If no such unanimous report can be made, it shall be the duty of the majority and the privilege of the minority to issue statements indicating what they believe to be the facts and containing the reasons which they consider to be just and proper.

The executive council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the body of delegates. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request must be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute. In a case referred to the body of delegates all the provisions of this article and of article 12 relating to the action and powers of the executive council shall apply to the action and powers of the body of delegates.

ART. 16. Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under article 12 it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, which hereby undertakes immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not.

It shall be the duty of the executive council in such case to recommend what effective military or naval force the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league.

The high contracting parties agree further that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which may be taken under this article in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures, and that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State, and that they will afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the high contracting parties who are cooperating to protect the covenants of the league.

ART. 17. In the event of disputes between one State member of the league and another State which is not a member of the league, or between States not members of the league, the high contracting parties agree that the State or States not members of the league shall be invited to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute upon such conditions as the executive council may deem just, and upon acceptance of any such invitation the above provisions shall be applied with such modifications as may be deemed necessary by the league.

Upon such invitation being given the executive council shall immediately institute an inquiry into the circumstances and merits of the dispute and recommend such action as may seem best and most effectual in the circumstances.

In the event of a power so invited refusing to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of the league which in the case of a State member of the league would constitute a breach of article 12, the provisions of article 16 shall be applicable as against the State taking such action.

If both parties to the dispute when so invited refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purpose of such dispute, the executive council may take such action and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

ART. 18. The high contracting parties agree that the league shall be intrusted with general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary in the common interest.

ART. 19. To those colonies and territories which, as a consequence of the late war, have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world, there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization, and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in the constitution of the league.

The best method of giving practical effect to this principle is that the tutelage of such peoples should be intrusted to advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience, or their geographical position can best undertake this responsibility, and that this tutelage should be exercised by them as mandatories on behalf of the league.

The character of the mandate must differ according to the stage of the development of the people, the geographical situation of the territory, its economic conditions, and other similar circumstances.

Certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire have reached the stage of development where their existence as independent nations can be provisionally recognized subject to the rendering of administrative advice and assistance by a mandatory power until such time as they are able to stand alone. The wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatory power.

Other peoples, especially those of central Africa, are at such a stage that the mandatory must be responsible for the administration of the territory subject to conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience or religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses such as the slave trade, the arms traffic, and the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military and naval bases and of military training of the natives for other than police purposes and the defense of territory, and will also secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other members of the league.

There are territories such as southwest Africa and certain of the South Pacific isles which, owing to the sparseness of their populations or their small size or their remoteness from the centers of civilization or their geographical contiguity to the mandatory State, and other circumstances, can be best administered under the laws of the mandatory State as integral portions thereof, subject to the safeguards above mentioned in the interests of the indigenous population.

In every case of mandate the mandatory State shall render to the league an annual report in reference to the territory committed to its charge.

The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatory State shall, if not previously agreed upon by the high contracting parties in each case, be explicitly defined by the executive council in a special act or charter.

The high contracting parties further agree to establish at the seat of the league a mandatory commission to receive and examine the annual reports of the mandatory powers and to assist the league in insuring the observance of the terms of all mandates.

ART. 20. The high contracting parties will endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and to that end agree to establish as part of the organization of the league a permanent bureau of labor.

ART. 21. The high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States, members of the league, having in mind, among other things, special arrangements with regard to the necessities of the regions devastated during the war of 1914–1918.

ART. 22. The high contracting parties agree to place under the control of the league all international bureaus already established by general treaties if the parties to such treaties consent. Furthermore, they agree that all such international bureaus to be constituted in future shall be placed under control of the league.

ART. 23. The high contracting parties agree that every treaty or international engagement entered into hereafter by any State, member of the league, shall be forthwith registered with the secretary general and as soon as possible published by him, and that no such treaty or international engagement shall be binding until so registered.

ART. 24. It shall be the right of the body of delegates from time to time to advise the reconsideration by States, members of the league, of treaties which have become inapplicable, and of international conditions, of which the continuance may endanger the peace of the world.

ART. 25. The high contracting parties severally agree that the present covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and solemnly engage that they will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof. In case any of the powers signatory hereto or subsequently admitted to the league shall, before becoming a party to this covenant, have undertaken any obligations which are inconsistent with the terms of this covenant, it shall be the duty of such power to take immediate steps to procure its release from such obligations.

ART. 26. Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the States whose representatives compose the executive council and by three-fourths of the States whose representatives compose the body of delegates.

—

PRESIDENT WILSON'S FOURTEEN POINTS.

THE "FOURTEEN POINTS" OF JANUARY 8.

1. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

2. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

[The allied governments reserved to themselves complete freedom on this point, November 5, and stated their understanding that the word "restored" in the paragraph below dealing with invaded countries means compensation by Germany for damage to civilian population of the allies and their property. To the latter point President Wilson formally assented.]

3. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

4. Adequate guarantees given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

5. A free, open-minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined.

6. The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy, and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing, and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

7. Belgium, the whole world will agree, must be evacuated and restored, without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they have themselves set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.

8. All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored, and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly 50 years, should be righted, in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

9. A readjustment of the frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

10. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

[On October 19 the President notified the Austro-Hungarian Government which had requested an armistice that certain conditions had changed since January 6. Quoting point 10, Secretary Lansing's note said: "Since that sentence was written and uttered to the Congress of the United States, the Government of the United States has recognized that a state of belligerency exists between the Czecho-Slovaks and the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires and that the Czecho-Slovak National Council is a de facto belligerent government clothed with proper authority to direct the military and political affairs of the Czecho-Slovaks. It has also recognized in the fullest manner the justice of the nationalistic aspirations of the Jugo-Slavs for freedom. The President is therefore no longer at liberty to accept the mere "autonomy" of these peoples as a basis of peace, but is obliged to insist that they, and not he, shall be the judges of what action on the part of the Austro-Hungarian Government will satisfy their aspirations and their conception of their rights and destiny as members of the family of nations."]

11. Roumania, Serbia, and Montenegro should be evacuated, occupied territories restored, Serbia accorded free and secure access to the sea, and the relations of the several Balkan States to one another determined by friendly counsel along historical established lines of allegiance and nationality, and international guarantees of the political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan States should be entered into.

12. The Turkish portions of the present Ottoman Empire should be assured a secure sovereignty, but the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undoubted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development, and the Dardanelles should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guarantees.

13. An independent Polish State should be erected, which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

14. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

THE "FOUR POINTS" OF FEBRUARY 11.

[Address to Congress.]

First. That each part of the final settlement must be based upon the essential justice of that particular case and upon such adjustments as are most likely to bring a peace that will be permanent.

Second. That peoples and provinces are not to be bartered about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were mere chattels and pawns in a game, even the great game, now forever discredited, of the balance of power; but that—

Third. Every territorial settlement involved in this war must be made in the interest and for the benefit of the populations concerned, and not as a part of any mere adjustment or compromise of claims among rival States; and Fourth. That all well-defined national aspirations shall be accorded the utmost satisfaction that can be accorded them without introducing new or perpetuating old elements of discord and antagonism that would be likely in time to break the peace of Europe, and consequently of the world.

FOUR POINTS IN ONE, JULY 4.

[Address at Mount Vernon.]

There can be but one issue. The settlement must be final. There can be no compromise. No halfway decision would be tolerable. No halfway decision is conceivable. These are the ends for which the associated peoples of the world are fighting and which must be conceded them before there can be peace:

1. The destruction of every arbitrary power anywhere that can separately, secretly, and of its single choice disturb the peace of the world; or, if it can not be presently destroyed, at the least its reduction to virtual impotence.

2. The settlement of every question, whether of territory, or sovereignty, of economic arrangement, or of political relationship, upon the basis of the free acceptance of that settlement by the people immediately concerned, and not upon the basis of the material interest or advantage of any other nation or people which may desire a different settlement for the sake of its own exterior influence or mastery.

3. The consent of all nations to be governed in their conduct toward each other by the same principles of honor and of respect for the common law of civilized society that govern the individual citizens of all modern States in their relations with one another; to the end that all promises and covenants may be sacredly observed, no private plots or conspiracies hatched, no selfish injuries wrought with impunity, and a mutual trust established upon the handsome foundation of a mutual respect for right.

4. The establishment of an organization of peace which shall make it certain that the combined power of free nations will check every invasion of right and serve to make peace and justice the more secure by affording a definite tribunal of opinion to which all must submit and by which every international readjustment that can not be amicably agreed upon by the peoples directly concerned shall be sanctioned.

These great objects can be put into a single sentence. What we seek is the reign of law, based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind.

THE FIVE POINTS OF SEPTEMBER 27.

[Address at Metropolitan Opera House, New York.]

As I see it, the constitution of that league of nations and the clear definition of its objects must be a part, is in a sense the most essential part, of the peace settlement itself. * * * It is necessary to guarantee the peace, and the peace can not be guaranteed as an afterthought.

First, the impartial justice meted out must involve no discrimination between those to whom we wish to be just and those to whom we do not wish to be just. It must be a justice that plays no favorites and knows no standard but equal rights of the several peoples concerned.

Second, no special or separate interest of any single nation or any group of nations can be made the basis of any part of the settlement which is not consistent with the common interest of all.

Third, there can be no leagues or alliances or special covenants and understandings within the general and common family of the league of nations.

Fourth, and more specifically, there can be no special, selfish economic combinations within the league and no employment of any form of economic boycott or exclusion except as the power of economic penalty by exclusion from the markets of the world may be vested in the league of nations itself as a means of discipline and control.

Fifth, all international agreements and treaties of every kind must be made known in their entirety to the rest of the world.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a friend of mine recently asked me, knowing that I was going out of Congress, when I should sing my swan song. I told him there would be no swan song, so far as I was concerned. I leave this House absolutely voluntarily, and I desire at this time to say something to the membership of the House. I might say as a man said at one time—

Farewell my friends, farewell my foes;
My love with these, my peace with those.

But I can not say that, because there are none of "those"; they are all "these," my friends. [Applause.]

I would like to say something about the new subject, the league of nations, but I shall only refer to it; and what I want to do more than anything else is to talk against a swan song by any Member of this House, coming in, being here, or going out. The swan may be a fitting emblem for the loose confederacy that men expect to organize on this earth in place of the American Republic; but if we want an emblem and a song we do not want a swan song; let it be the song of the American eagle. [Applause.]

Most of us are in favor of closing this war as it should be closed now. Some of us have suffered in this war most sadly. We are all in favor of gathering the legitimate fruits of this war; but I trust our sons who lie beyond yonder sea did not make their sacrifice for the purpose of surrendering American sovereignty as we find it in the pact produced. [Applause.] We are in favor of a league of nations, but not necessarily the league of nations concerning which the public talks.

Swan song! No. Fancy our great Speaker, as he retires from yonder chair, singing a swan song. Think, if you can, of him drifting down the turgid river in the current and finding a place on some sand bar to deposit his political remains.

No, my friends, if a song were to be sung and ornithology should be the inspiration, it should come not from Cygnus but from Aquila. It would be the song of the American eagle and not a swan song. Let me tell you, fellow Republicans, in the next four years, as he guards that side of the House, beware. Do not expect him to be coming up from the reeds and rushes of the river, as described by the international poet, Tennyson. You will find him swooping down upon you from the crests of the lofty trees and the peaks of mountains, to your undoing. [Applause.]

Fancy, if you can, our matchless minority leader, MANN, singing a swan song! Why, not long since there was a distinct clamor going up here and throughout this country for a swan song from him. They got the song, but it did not come from turgid waters—

From creeping mosses and clambering weeds
And waving swells of the soughing reeds.

It came from that pure upper and lonely air. It came in the clear and magic notes, inspired and strengthened by the rich upper air, where the eagle sweeps on tireless pinion, while unblanched eye looks into the face of the sun. Where his friends expected a tragedy he wrought a distinguished triumph. [Applause.]

When I was a boy I read in an old book of a general in the old time leading his forces against the enemy. Outnumbered, overpowered, still retreating, amid threatened demoralization and almost panic, in the critical moment he rushed across the line of combat, seized the standard of the opposing general, and led not only his own forces, but those he had been opposing, to a substantial victory. [Applause.]

I do not need to make the application. You have already done so.

Fancy that man singing a swan song! No; he would better sing the song of the American eagle. I will read it:

SONG OF THE AMERICAN EAGLE.

I build my nest on the mountain's crest,
Where the wild winds rock my eaglets to rest;
Where the lightnings flash, and the thunders crash,
And the roaring torrents foam and dash;
For my spirit free henceforth shall be
A type of the sons of liberty.

Aloft I fly from my aerie high,
Through the vaulted dome of the azure sky;
On a sunbeam bright take my airy flight,
And float in a flood of liquid light;
For I love to play in the noontide ray,
And bask in a blaze from the throne of day.

Away I spring with a tireless wing,
On a feathery cloud I poise and swing;
I dart down the steep where the lightnings leap,
And the clear blue canopy swiftly sweep;
For dear to me is the revelry
Of a free and fearless liberty.

I love the land where the mountains stand,
Like the watchtowers high of a patriot band;
For I may not bide in my glory and pride,
Though the land be never so fair and wide,
Where luxury reigns o'er voluptuous plains,
And fetters the free-born soul in chains.

Then give to me in my flights to see
The land of the pilgrims ever free!
And I never will rove from the haunts I love:
But watch, from my sentinel track above,
Your banner free, o'er land and sea,
And exult in your glorious liberty.

O, guard ye well the land where I dwell,
Lest to future times the tale I tell,
When slow expires in smoldering fires
The goodly heritage of your sires—
How freedom's light rose clear and bright
O'er fair Columbia's beacon height,
Till ye quenched the flame in a starless night.

Then will I tear from your pennon fair
The stars ye have set in triumph there;
My olive branch on the blast I'll launch;
The fluttering stripes from the flagstaff wrench;
And away I'll flee, for I scorn to see
A craven race in the land of the free!

[Applause.]

My friends, to my mind our elder statesmen did their patriotic duty and did it well when they refused to stand lip locked at this hour and proceeded to discuss the great pact that clashes with our Constitution, regardless of the prohibition of the sponsor of that pact. What matter if there is autocratic gnashing of teeth and intemperate language used because they have torn to tenuous tatters the newly presented constitution. Let those rave and rage who will. This Republic was brought to its proud place at too great expense to surrender its sovereignty, independence, and treasure at the bidding of man or men, American or European.

When Xerxes invaded Greece with a bridge of boats across the Dardanelles, called the Hellespont, and a storm destroyed the boats and scattered his ships, he caused them to be lashed and fetters placed upon them in his mad fury. This is what the poet says about it.

'Tis said that Persia's baffled King,
In mad, tyrannic pride,
Cast fetters on the Hellespont
To curb its swelling tide.

But freedom's own true spirit heaves
The bosom of the main;
It tossed those fetters to the skies
And bounded on again.

The scorn of each succeeding age
On Xerxes' head was hurled,
And o'er that foolish deed has pealed
The long laugh of a world.

Thus, thus, defeat and scorn and shame
Is his who strives to bind
The restless, leaping waves of thought,
The free tide of the mind.

[Applause.]

In closing let me say apart that after eight years of the most interesting portion of my life, I, like the other boys in the service who are permitted to come home, go back to the old job. Mine is farming in the morning and the evening and the law office between 8 and 6, and my spare time for diversion and other toil. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

OMNIBUS PENSION BILL.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that it will not interfere with the rights of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I ask to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 14894, an omnibus pension bill.

Mr. MANN. A House bill with Senate amendments?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; and I intend to move to concur in the Senate amendments. I ask to take it from the Speaker's table and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum here to consider this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-seven Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Almon	Estopinal	Kiess, Pa.	Rowe
Anthony	Fairchild, G.W.	Kincheloe	Russell
Barkley	Farr	La Follette	Sanders, Ind.
Benson	Flynn	Lampert	Saunders, Va.
Birch	Focht	Langley	Scott, Iowa
Black	Foss	Lazaro	Sells
Booher	Frear	Linthicum	Shackleford
Britten	Fuller, Mass.	Little	Sherley
Brodbeck	Gard	Lunn	Sherwood
Brumbaugh	Glynn	McAndrews	Shouse
Buchanan	Godwin, N. C.	McArthur	Slayden
Caldwell	Goodall	McCormick	Smith, Mich.
Cary	Gould	McKinley	Smith, C. B.
Chandler, N. Y.	Gray, N. J.	Magee	Snell
Church	Gregg	Martin	Stafford
Clark, Fla.	Griest	Mason	Steele
Cleary	Griffin	Mays	Steenerson
Collier	Hamill	Merritt	Stephens, Nebr.
Connelly, Kans.	Hamilton, Mich.	Moon	Sumners
Copley	Hamilton, N. Y.	Nelson, J. M.	Swift
Costello	Harrison, Miss.	Nolan	Taylor, Ark.
Cox	Heaton	Norton	Temple
Crago	Heintz	Oliver, Ala.	Tilson
Crosser	Helm	Osborne	Towner
Curry, Cal.	Hilliard	O'Shaunessy	Treadway
Dale	Hood	Padgett	Van Dyke
Decker	Houston	Paige	Walker
Denison	Howard	Park	Ward
Dent	Hull, Iowa	Parker, N. Y.	Watson, Pa.
Dickinson	Humphreys	Peters	Webb
Dill	Husted	Porter	Whaley
Donovan	Jacoway	Pou	White, Ohio
Doolittle	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pratt	Wilson, Ill.
Drane	Jones	Price	Winslow
Drukker	Kahn	Rainey, H. T.	Wise
Dunn	Kearns	Ramseyer	Wood, Ind.
Ellsworth	Keating	Roberts	Woods, Iowa
Emerson	Kelley, Mich.	Robinson	Woodyard

The SPEAKER. On this roll 276 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R.——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that the gentleman from Ohio predicated his request upon the understanding that it does not displace me from my right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. It will not displace the gentleman.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14894) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14894, an omnibus pension bill, with Senate amendments thereto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

Te Senate amendments were read.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5554, H. Rept. 1181) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a pension bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. To save time, if several of these matters come up now and go through, by unanimous consent or otherwise, that will not interfere with the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts to recognition?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The Chair will keep the place warm for the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN. I knew the Chair would, but I wanted the House to so understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Jonathan M. Ragner, late of Company B, Twenty-seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $21 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter L. Leuszler, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of R. W. Duncan (colored), known as Pack Duncan, late guide, Second Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Williams, widow of William H. H. Williams, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Mary Alcinda Wingert, helpless and dependent daughter of Martin B. Wingert, late first lieutenant Company A, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Leonora V. Lunt, widow of George H. Lunt, late of Company F, Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of William H. Makee, late of Company D, Twenty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles E. Haskell, late unassigned, Maine Volunteers, and unassigned, Twenty-ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $21 per month.

The name of Sarah Van Doozer, widow of William N. Van Doozer, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Anna F. Baugh, widow of Jacob L. Baugh, late of Company A, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment, and Company E, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Esther U. McKelvey, former widow of James Ling, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment, and Company D, Sixteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and widow of Henry E. McKelvey, late of Company K, Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Mary Snow, widow of Dennis T. Snow, late of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Tenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and former widow of John A. Smith, late of Company M, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Martha A. Tucker, former widow of Jesse T. Breedlove, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Mary M. Ayer, former widow of James Stanley, late of Company A, First Battalion Sharpshooters, Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Frederick Deppe, late of Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eliza E. Herman, former widow of Robert H. Herman, alias Robert Harmond, late of Company H, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of George N. Morse, late of Company K, Forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hulda Johnson, widow of James M. Johnson, late of Company B, Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Sarah F. Steele, former widow of John S. Steele, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Josiah McKnight, late of Company I, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sylvester H. Gaskill, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jennie Magee, widow of Samuel H. Magee, late acting second assistant engineer, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Henrietta Buswell Brown, widow of Henry E. Brown, late of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Joseph Masden, late of Company E, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary L. Colnay, former widow of William Graham, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Cora W. Merryman, widow of David C. Merryman, late of Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Alexander D. Tanyer, late captain Company H, Fifty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of W. Lafayette League, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary Herrman, former widow of Jacob Schlosstein, late of Company B, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Clara Stillman, widow of Willett D. Stillman, late of Company C, Forty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Oscar L. Myers, alias Henry Myers, late of Company K, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Mary Rumbold, widow of Charles H. Rumbold, late of Company B, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Nancy J. Bower, widow of John Bower, late of Company D, Eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Levi Shaul, late of Company A, Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of William H. Henkle, late of Company G, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Camm T. Sanders, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Showalter, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cora C. O'Neill, widow of Arthur O'Neill, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Anna C. Seaman, former widow of Joseph Robinson, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Davis Parsons, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frances L. Haha, widow of Frederick Haha, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Abbie B. Garrett, widow of John M. Garrett, late of Company H, Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Susan E. Guyn, former widow of Joseph T. Marshall, late of Company I, Fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of William McDonald, late of Company F, Fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Huffman, late of Company D, One hundred and sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Boman R. Butcher, late of Company H, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry H. Niles, late of U. S. S. Moose, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles F. Perry, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Hanners, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $21 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Catherine A. Brownlee, widow of William H. Brownlee, late of Company A, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Levi Remick, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Ida B. Willison, widow of John C. Willison, late of Company L, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said John C. Willison until she reaches the age of 16 years, all such pension to be in lieu of that now being paid under minor's certificate No. 810234 on account of said minor child.

The name of George Graham, late of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert F. Nelson, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis Newman, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Combs, late of Company D, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Hagadorn, widow of Henry J. Hagadorn, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Ida V. Haskins, widow of Hiram S. Haskins, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Clara E. Buckland, former widow of Jason I. Noland, late of Companies F and C, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Henry M. Chase, late of Company A, Coast Guards, Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William T. Potts, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Louisa Jones, former widow of Rudolph Blum, late of Companies K and B, Ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and widow of Abraham Jones, late of Company G, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Andrew J. Moody, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Blanchard, late of Company B, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. Douglas, late of Company A, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Emeline C. Starr, helpless and dependent daughter of George Starr, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Samuel Lockwood, late of Company H, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ella A. Mead, widow of James A. Mead, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Isaac D. Hamilton, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment, and Company F, Seventh Regiment, Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Wiley, late of Company L, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Newell Strout, late captain Company K, Third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucy A. Schriver, former widow of Nelson M. Tenney, late of Company I, Forty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Jesse W. Bowdle, late of Companies F and A, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month, without deduction or rebate on account of former alleged erroneous payments of pension.

The name of Sarah M. Geiger, former widow of Henry H. Geiger, late of Company A, Eighty-fifth Regiment, and Company G, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Isabell Cunningham, widow of Washington Cunningham, late of Company K, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of John Cunningham, helpless and dependent son of said Washington Cunningham, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Isabell Cunningham, the name of said John Cunningham shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month, from and after the date of death of said Isabell Cunningham.

The name of James H. Cornell, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Minnesota Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucina E. Smith, former widow of Ira G. Christian, late of Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of James C. Daly, late of Company A, Battalion Volunteer Cavalry, Mississippi Marine Brigade, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jennie L. Barrows, helpless and dependent daughter of Benjamin G. Barrows, late of Captain Cobb's company, State Guards, Maine Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary M. Hood, widow of Robert Hood, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Amos L. Hood, late of Company D, One hundred and seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $32 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving, the same to be paid to him without deduction for any alleged former erroneous payments of pension.

The name of Henry H. Hering, late captain of Company E, Seventy-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Blitz, late of Company C, Sixty-seventh Regiment New York National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Maranda E. McHaffie, widow of Oscar F. McHaffie, late of Capt. A. J. Lee's company, attached to Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of George F. Griffith, alias Frank W. Morton, late of Troop D, First Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Carrie E. Hewett, former widow of Hollis Smart, late of Company A, Maine Coast Guard Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Robert B. Patrick, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George F. Hood, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stewart Orr, late of Company C, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Effie E. Milton, widow of John C. Milton, late of Companies F and C, Eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Hermann Hoffmeister, late of Company C, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Eighth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo R. Cole, late captain Company E, One hundred and twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah F. Robinson, former widow of Samuel W. Blethen, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of George Forker, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Georgia M. Hodgsdon, widow of Daniel B. Hodgsdon, late first lieutenant U. S. S. Reliance, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, Civil War, and captain U. S. S. McCulloch, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Milton W. Burnham, late of Company K, Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah C. Vaughan, former widow of Augustus Vaughan, late of Company A, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of James H. Johnston, late of Company C, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John F. Lichty, helpless and dependent son of Jacob P. Lichty, late of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Rouser Mettler, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arabella Roberts, widow of George J. S. Roberts, alias James S. Roberts, late of the United States ships Grampus, Eastport, and Red Rover, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Alonzo J. Finch, late of Company G, Forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi M. Starne, late of Company B, Eighty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Catharine Derstine, permanently helpless and dependent daughter of John F. Derstine, late of Company G, Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Horton Mosher, late of Company G, First Regiment United States Lancers, Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Alexander Faries, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment, and Company F, Seventh Regiment, Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob R. Stillwagon, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin Bryan, late of Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $46 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Dugent, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Benjamin A. Sturtevant, late sergeant major and first lieutenant Company B, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William E. Hughes, late of Captain Foxwell's company (Henderson Guards), Second Battalion, District of Columbia Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of James Rowland, late of Company K, Sixty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward D. Hamilton, late of Company G, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Vanhoose, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel C. Darlington, late of Company F, Purnell Legion, Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Lake, former widow of Amby M. Welch, late of Company I, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Isaac N. White, late of Company B, Fifty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following Senate bills referred to said committee:

S. 1053. Jonathan M. Ragner.
S. 1314. Peter L. Leuszler.
S. 1346. R. W. Duncan, alias "Pack" Duncan.
S. 1717. Mary E. Williams.
S. 1718. Mary Alcinda Wingert.
S. 1841. Leonora V. Lunt.
S. 2226. William H. Makee.
S. 2556. Charles E. Haskell.
S. 2699. Sarah Van Doozer.
S. 2819. Anna F. Baugh.
S. 2880. Esther U. McKelvey.
S. 2892. Mary Snow.
S. 2971. Martha A. Tucker.
S. 3014. Mary M. Ayer.
S. 3042. Frederick Deppe.
S. 3044. Eliza E. Herman.
S. 3048. George N. Morse.
S. 3145. Hulda Johnson.
S. 3279. Sarah F. Steele.
S. 3281. Josiah McKnight.
S. 3282. Sylvester H. Gaskill.
S. 3292. Jennie Magee.
S. 3345. Henrietta Buswell Brown.
S. 3377. Joseph Masden.
S. 3423. Mary L. Colnay.
S. 3466. Cora W. Merryman.
S. 3623. Alexander D. Tanyer.
S. 3628. W. Lafayette League.
S. 3650. Mary Hermann.
S. 3651. Clara Stillman.
S. 3712. Mary Rumbold.
S. 3850. Nancy J. Bower.
S. 3854. William H. Henkle.
S. 3855. Camm T. Sanders.
S. 4050. John T. Showalter.
S. 4173. Cora C. O'Neill.
S. 4377. Anna C. Seaman.
S. 4384. Davis Parsons.
S. 4386. Frances L. Haha.
S. 4461. Abbie B. Garrett.
S. 4577. Susan E. Guyn.
S. 4582. William McDonald.
S. 4585. John W. Huffman.
S. 4589. Boman R. Butcher.
S. 4615. Henry H. Niles.
S. 4680. Charles F. Perry.
S. 4695. James Hanners.
S. 4704. Catherine A. Brownlee.
S. 4705. Ida B. Willison.
S. 4718. George Graham.
S. 4751. Albert F. Nelson.
S. 4757. Lewis Newman.
S. 4764. John W. Combs.
S. 4788. Elizabeth Hagadorn.
S. 4797. Ida V. Haskins.
S. 4804. Clara E. Buckland.
S. 4809. Henry M. Chase.
S. 4834. William T. Potts.
S. 4847. Louisa Jones.
S. 4853. Andrew J. Moody.
S. 4869. William F. Blanchard.
S. 4896. William B. Douglas.
S. 4898. Emeline C. Starr.
S. 4903. Samuel Lockwood.
S. 4905. Ella A. Mead.
S. 4920. Isaac D. Hamilton.
S. 4926. Charles Wiley.
S. 4927. Newell Strout.
S. 4933. Lucy A. Schriver.
S. 4943. Jesse W. Bowdle.
S. 4981. Sarah M. Geiger.
S. 5012. Isabell Cunningham.
S. 5021. James H. Cornell.
S. 5031. Lucina E. Smith.
S. 5078. James C. Daly.
S. 5091. Jennie L. Barrows.
S. 5103. Mary M. Hood.
S. 5106. Amos L. Hood.
S. 5107. Henry H. Hering.
S. 5118. Charles Blitz.
S. 5131. Maranda E. McHaffie.
S. 5142. George F. Griffith, alias Frank W. Morton.
S. 5145. Carrie E. Hewett.
S. 5164. Robert B. Patrick.
S. 5165. George F. Hood.
S. 5166. Stewart Orr.
S. 5184. Effie E. Milton.
S. 5204. Hermann Hoffmeister.
S. 5218. Alonzo R. Cole.
S. 5225. Sarah F. Robinson.
S. 5241. George Forker.
S. 5242. Georgia M. Hodgsdon.
S. 5253. Milton W. Burnhan.
S. 5268. Sarah C. Vaughan.
S. 5272. James H. Johnston.
S. 5276. John F. Lichty.
S. 5324. Rouser Mettler.
S. 5383. Arabella Roberts.
S. 5387. Alonzo J. Finch.
S. 5407. Levi M. Starne.
S. 5411. Catharine Derstine.
S. 5418. Horton Mosher.
S. 5425. Alexander Faries.
S. 5427. Jacob R. Stillwagon.
S. 5455. Franklin Bryan.
S. 5466. William Dugent.
S. 5468. Benjamin A. Sturtevant.
S. 5481. William E. Hughes.
S. 5483. James Roland.
S. 5501. Edward D. Hamilton.
S. 5509. William J. Vanhoose.
S. 5519. Daniel C. Darlington.
S. 5520. Mary A. Lake.
S. 5524. Isaac N. White.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. In considering military pension bills it is quite natural that we think of the greatest topic of the day, and that is the question of permanent peace. There has been quite a lot of discussion the last few days around the Capitol. There are various differences of opinion, there are many proposed plans, and a great deal of conflict, but, gentlemen, if you will consult the 2,000,000 American men who fought overseas, you will find no difference of opinion among them. They are all absolutely for an arrangement—I do not care what you call it, a league of nations or anything else—which will make impossible another world war. [Applause.] You talk to-day about the formation of a league of nations. Mr. Speaker, the league of nations exists already. There is a league existing between the English and the French and the Belgians and the Italians and the Brazilians and Serbians and the Montenegrians and the Cubans and the Japanese and the Portuguese—all men who fought together. They stood loyally together in war—they are determined to stick together in peace.

If it was possible to keep these men in a united allied army to fight for a just cause, it is much easier to keep them united to maintain peace. We told our boys before they went across that we were fighting for an ideal—we were also fighting for the vindication of American rights. We told them that our safety was threatened. We told them that it was necessary to destroy an enormous military machine which was menacing the peace of the world. We went out and we did destroy that military machine, and we won a complete and glorious victory. Now, we have a right to demand that out of all this gigantic struggle and for the millions of lives sacrificed we shall come to an understanding among the nations that a sudden declaration of war will be impossible. Provide the machinery that will delay a declaration of war or that will retard the commencement of hostilities, and war will be impossible. The people of the world do not want another world war. You can not get the people of the world to engage in another.

You talk about difficulties of an international force. There is fear of a surrender of our sovereignty. I ask you who commanded our armies in France? Were not our armies submitted to the command of the commander in chief, Gen. Foch? When our convoy neared England we were met out at sea by a fleet of destroyers and cruisers which escorted this convoy of troop ships into port. There were American cruisers and English cruisers and French cruisers. The flagship was at the head of this formation. The flagship would signal directions and the whole fleet would change its course. You did not see an American cruiser flashing back, saying, "Wait; I can not take your command; I must refer it to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to see if it is constitutional." [Applause.]

It worked all right. The fleet in the Mediterranean was composed of Italian ships, British ships, French ships, Japanese ships, and Brazilian ships, under one command, and it worked out all right. There was no conflict and no one on this side worried about losing our sovereignty, or command of our own forces. That is the league that exists.

Now, the idea of a league of nations is nothing new. You passed a resolution in this House on the 20th of June, 1910, authorizing the President to appoint commissioners to study the question of a league to enforce peace, and the same resolution was reported favorably in the Senate and passed four days later. This is not a political question. It is a world question. This is a question which has back of it the American people. Mr. Speaker, in the war the great cry was to stand back of the President and win the war. We want to stand back of him and put through an arrangement that will prevent another war. [Applause.]

That is the main thing to bear in mind. Its purpose, as far as we are concerned, is to safeguard us from another war. Of course, it will also be beneficial to the nations of Europe, but the first point we are to consider is that if it keeps Europe out of war we, too, will enjoy the continued blessings of peace. We thought in 1914 that we could not be involved in the terrible conflict. The submarines, but a few months later, made it plain that sooner or later we would be required to fight for our rights and national honors.

I want to take this opportunity to point out that the people of Europe are as anxious to avoid war as we are. That being so, I see the realization of the great hope.

Only last night I had the opportunity of meeting four most interesting gentlemen who arrived in this country that same day. These gentlemen are the representatives from various redeemed Italian Provinces of the Adriatic: Mr. Georgio Pitacco, Mr. Roberto Gliglanovich, of Zara, Dalmatia, and Mr. Gino Antoni, of Fiume. Each one of these gentlemen was the Member of Parliament from his district to the hated Reichsrath of Vienna. To-day they are the representatives of a liberated, happy people. Let us hope that this freedom may continue; let us hope that they may remain united to their mother country—Italy.

All these people ask—the people of Trieste, Trento, Fiume, Zara, Istria—is a fair chance and fair play. They are quite satisfied that point 9 of President Wilson's 14-point peace message be carried out, namely, "The confines of Italy to be readjusted according to easily recognizable lines of nationality." These people are Italians socially, in temperament, language, habit, thought, and spirit. They have suffered long under the Hapsburg yoke. Given their liberty, they, too, will help to maintain world peace; and they will keep peace in the Adriatic, once that question is solved. [Applause.]

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Speaker, I want to have read in my time here an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to have read an article from the Washington Post. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE IRISH SITUATION.

The demand by a portion of the Irish people that President Wilson shall bring the Irish question before the peace conference is an example of the embarrassments that await the league of nations, if it should be created.

The Irish people are divided on the question of home rule and independence. But even if they were united, even if Ulster and Cork flapped their wings in unison, there would still be the question of inducing or compelling the British Empire to relinquish its control of Ireland. President Wilson is said to have remarked at the league dinner last week that the Irish question was an internal matter, to be settled by the parties concerned. Certainly if any portion of the United States or its possessions should demand relief, the United States would not thank Great Britain for interfering.

But what would be the duty of the United States toward Ireland under a league of nations? Would the status of the United States be changed from one of sympathy for the aspirations of all peoples who wish to be free and independent? As the constitution of the league stands, the United States would be compelled to assist Great Britain in case a third power should attempt to aid the Irish to win their independence. Perhaps the United States should do that and perhaps it should not; but many Americans would hate to be compelled to go to war against Ireland.

If the league of nations had been in existence in 1776, France could not have helped George Washington to fight for American independence. All nations in the league would have been required to join England in beating down France and holding the American colonies under the rule of George III. There would not have been any United States of America.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield back any time I may have.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not have any time to yield back.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TAGUE. To speak against the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the time of the House is very valuable and would not take up one moment but for the fact that I believe, in justice to my colleagues, I should call to their attention a certain condition that has arisen which I do no believe has been called to the attention of the House or to the membership of the House at any time. I do not want to appear as bringing before the House anything of a personal nature, but I want to do something that might help other candidates for Congress who in future Congresses may find themselves confronted with the same difficulty which confronts me at this time. We have what is known as a contested-election law, which gives the necessary information as to how a contestant must proceed to prove his case in a contest where the election has been held and where he believes that he can prove his right to the seat in Congress. I am to-day engaged in one of those contests, and it is for that reason I wish to call the attention of the House to an evasion of a law which Members of Congress have thought for years would stand any test.

A willful violation of the authority of the United States marshal to summon witnesses to appear before a magistrate representing the Congress in obtaining evidence bearing upon alleged fraud committed in a congressional election requires that Congress should at once enact a law that will make certain that bold political leaders can not defy Congress.

Congress owes a duty to itself to at once order an investigation into the defiance of its right to have the United States marshal require witnesses to obey summonses, which has been flagrantly instanced at Boston during the past three weeks.

More than 400 witnesses whose evidence would show fraud and corrupt election practices refused to respond to summonses that the United States marshal personally served on witnesses. Furthermore, when the United States district attorney publicly warned these defiant witnesses they were violating the Federal law his warning was scorned. Lawyers have apparently advised these witnesses that there are no teeth in the present law, and the witnesses, backed by powerful political influences, laugh at the law which Congress has always believed was clear enough to require unquestioned obedience.

This law has stood for many years and has never been questioned until now, when it is being defied for the purpose of protecting a man who because of these frauds temporarily appears to have been elected to a seat in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

In the section of the contested-election law there is a provision as follows:

Any person who, having been summoned in the manner above directed, refuses or neglects to attend and testify, unless prevented by sickness or unavoidable necessity, shall forfeit the sum of $20, to be recovered, with costs of suit, by the party at whose instance the subpœna was issued, and for its use, by an action of debt in any court of the United States, and shall be liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor and punished by a fine and imprisonment.

To make the matter plain, I want to explain to the membership of this House what the conditions really are. In the contest I am waging at the present time I have charged fraud and corruption; and I believe that when my case is brought before the committee made up from the membership of this House that they will agree with me that I am entitled to a seat in the next Congress.

During this Congress the Members have been called upon to vote on many questions of the most vital importance. There were many questions affecting our country and the part we took in the great war; and it was because of the part I took in doing my duty as a Member of the American Congress in voting to uphold the rights of the American people that I brought down the wrath of men who would have had me to be a traitor to my people. So, Mr. Speaker, I was opposed in my nomination by a man as a candidate who does not live in my district and who was declared the nominee at the primaries after he had received the votes of those hundreds of illegal voters and after the names of soldiers and sailors who were serving the country across the sea had been voted on.

With all of this, and after throwing out 200 votes which should have been counted for me, he has been declared the nominee by 50 votes.

On account of an amendment to our voting laws, which was passed to allow the soldiers and sailors to vote, the law was changed so that it compels any person who wishes to be a candidate at the polls to file his intention five days prior to the primaries, which action would mean absolute defeat.

I was, therefore, compelled to again appeal to the voters by asking them to vote for me by using a sticker, as I had no other way of getting on the ballot.

Mr. Speaker, in one section of my district, in ward 5, we have proven conclusively that there is a colonization of voters who have no right, legally, to vote in the district. They do not live in the district; therefore they have no right to vote in the district; and they have violated the laws of Congress by so voting. We have summoned into court before a magistrate under this law 400 of these illegal voters as witnesses, who have refused to answer the summonses of the court, and we find upon application to the district attorney that he has no authority in the law to compel them to come into court, as there is no fine or imprisonment that can be inflicted upon them. This tends, Mr. Speaker, to destroy the spirit and intent of this law. It violates the intent and purpose of the law and takes from any contesting Member the right to summon witnesses and make them testify before a magistrate appointed to receive testimony in behalf of Congress.

Mr. CRISP. Will my friend yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. CRISP. You state there is no penalty against their failing to report. Do they refuse to testify? You did not state whether they refused to appear and testify or not.

Mr. TAGUE. These witnesses have not only refused to attend but they have also refused to testify, which ties the hands of any aspirant in a contest where he is trying to prove his case. I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in saying that the action of these witnesses will have little effect upon the contest I am making in the next Congress, because I have evidence enough without this to prove my case conclusively before any jury in the land.

I made the contest in my district without my name upon the ballot. I was obliged to make a contest with what are known as "stickers" or "pasters," and my opponent, with all these thousands of illegal votes to call upon, was unable to secure more votes upon the ballot than I did. I have been credited with 7,000; he has been credited with 7,200, and there are 400 ballots still in question that I am confident the membership of any committee of this House will count for me. So, while this may appear in a measure a personal matter, I believe it is one for the Congress to take up in order that they may protect the interest of any contestant in the future.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Did I understand the gentleman to read that the failure to answer to the subpœna subjected those failing to answer to an indictment for a misdemeanor?

Mr. TAGUE. The law, Mr. Speaker, is inoperative, because there is no fine or imprisonment provided in the law. They could bring them in on indictment but could not punish them, and the United States district attorney has rendered a decision that he has no power to punish any witness who refuses to come and testify in a case of this kind.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced a resolution in this House, which I am informed by the Committee on Rules can not be reported because we are so close to the end of the session at this time, to investigate these conditions in my own district in order that some law may be enacted that will protect the interests of any other contestant, no matter who he may be, in his rights. [Applause.]

House resolution 619.

Whereas it appears that in the congressional election held in the tenth congressional district of Massachusetts on the 5th day of November, A. D. 1918, several hundred votes were cast in ward 5, in the city of Boston, in said congressional district, by nonresidents of said ward or district, who were not entitled to vote therein, but who, by so voting, deprived the legal voters of said congressional district of their choice in the selection of a Member of Congress; and

Whereas in consequence of said illegal voting a contest has been instituted to determine the person entitled to represent said congressional district in the Sixty-sixth Congress, said contest being carried on under the provisions of section 107 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

Whereas in the hearings now being conducted in said city of Boston before a magistrate selected by law to obtain evidence bearing upon alleged fraud practiced in said congressional election, the authority of the United States marshal to summon witnesses to appear and give testimony before said magistrate has been openly defied, said witnesses, though legally summoned, having refused to respond to said summonses on the ground that the law provides no punishment for said refusal; and

Whereas the voting lists in said ward 5 of said tenth congressional district contain the names of hundreds of persons who have no right to vote in said ward, but who, nevertheless, have voted at said election on November 5, A. D. 1918: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of five Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into the illegal voting in said election, the voting lists used, and all things appertaining thereto, and for such purposes it shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and shall have the right to report at any time.

I want to say that it is my intention when Congress convenes to have this resolution, which I have introduced, again placed before Congress, and will then ask the committee having charge of the contest of which I now speak to begin an immediate investigation in the voting conditions of ward 5, in the tenth Massachusetts district. I will also furnish them with the list of the witnesses who have thus defied the law, and I am certain that the committee will find a way to compel their attendance. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 14945, and ask to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill which the Clerk will report, and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Is it a pension bill, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Yes. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14945) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KEY of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a similar order on H. R. 15706.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15706, and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15706) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KEY of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 5553.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5553) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. We have not the right to consider it at all yet. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] allow me 15 minutes?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know what the parliamentary status is. Is there a motion for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. There was; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] reserved the right to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to see if I can not get 15 minutes from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I object

The SPEAKER. Object to what?

Mr. SELLS. To the consideration of the Senate bill

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MCARTHUR rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oregon rise?

Mr. MCARTHUR. To submit a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, the Daily News, a newspaper of Portland, Oreg., a few weeks ago published in its columns the following interview from Postmaster Frank S. Myers, of Portland:

MYERS TAKES SWAT AT NEWS.

"The reason the News and Congressman McArthur and others are fighting Burleson is plain," said Postmaster Frank S. Myers Saturday. "McArthur went to Burleson with a crooked scheme when he was in Washington. McArthur is a liar, so the Postmaster General rebuked him and sent him away. Now they are all trying to get even."

The SPEAKER. The Speaker is inclined to think that the gentleman has a question of personal privilege. [Laughter.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, while I realize the truth of the old adage that "It is a waste of soap to lather an ass," I believe I owe it to my family and to my friends to make a statement in reply to this attack.

This interview was given out by Postmaster Myers shortly after I had issued a public criticism of Postmaster General Burleson for his action in ordering an increase in the telephone rates in Oregon.

The statement that I went to Postmaster General Burleson with a crooked scheme and that he rebuked me and sent me away is false in every particular. I have never called upon Postmaster General Burleson; have never been in his office; have never even met him. During my two terms in Congress I have been at the Post Office Department only once, on a matter relative to the location of a substation in Portland. Upon that occasion I was treated with the utmost courtesy by the official in charge of the matter. I have taken up numerous matters with the Post Office Department by correspondence, and there is a complete record of all these transactions in my office. There was nothing improper about any of them, and I have never been rebuked by the Postmaster General or any official of the Post Office Department. On the contrary, I have been treated with the utmost courtesy.

If Postmaster Myers can prove that I have ever been in the office of Postmaster General Burleson or have ever gone to him with a crooked scheme of any character or have ever spoken a word to the Postmaster General, I will resign my seat in the Sixty-sixth Congress. In view of the facts as I have stated them, it is Postmaster Myers and not I who is the liar. [Applause.]

This is the same Postmaster Myers who seeks to set himself up as the political boss of Oregon. One of the candidates for Congress whom he has favored with his support has been indicted by the Multnomah County grand jury for contributing to the delinquency of a 14-year-old girl and has fled the State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I gather from the gentleman's statement that Postmaster Myers is evidently dabbling in politics?

Mr. McARTHUR. I should judge so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To what extent is he interfering with the sitting Congressman?

Mr. McARTHUR. To the extent of making my majority larger each time. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell who Postmaster Myers is for?

Mr. McARTHUR. I decline to state the name. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. CRAMTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. CRAMTON. To make a unanimous-consent request, without displacing the gentleman from Massachusetts, and with the understanding that it will not take over five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts without losing his place?

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand that that was included in the program earlier in the evening, but if the gentleman has a resolution from the Committee on Accounts I would gladly yield to him without losing my rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman shall not lose his rights.

Mr. WALSH. I know that so long as the Speaker is in the chair. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present House resolution 605. (H. Rept. No. 1180.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 605.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such additional assistant clerks as may be necessary during the remainder of the Sixty-fifth Congress, the payment for services not to exceed $250, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAYME O. PEAK—FRANK WALTON.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged report (No. 1179) from the Committee on Accounts and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 614.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mayme O. Peak, clerk to WILLIAM P. BORLAND, a Representative from the State of Missouri at the time of his death, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

With the following amendment:

Amend by adding at the end of line 5 as follows:

"Frank Walton, clerk to HARVEY HELM, a Representative from the State of Kentucky at the time of his death, the sum of $166.66."

RECESS FROM 8.30 TO 9.30 O'CLOCK.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, upon the merits, I ask unanimous consent that the House may stand in recess from 8.30 o'clock p. m. to 9.30.

The SPEAKER. It is only five minutes after 8 o'clock now. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

MAYME O. PEAK—FRANK WALTON.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, did the Chair put the question on the last resolution?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair will put it now. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. We could not hear what it was.

The SPEAKER. It was to give a month's salary——

Mr. HASTINGS. To the clerks of the late Representative BORLAND and the late Representative HELM.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

THE SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SARAH GRAYSON ADAMS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution. (H. Rept. No. 1177.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 612.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Sarah Grayson Adams, sister of S. Monroe Grayson, late an employee on the roll of the House, a sum equal to six months' compensation as a guard in the House Office Building, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said S. Monroe Grayson.

THE SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ALLISON C. JENKINS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution. (H. Rept. No. 1178.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 555.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay Allison C. Jenkins, brother of Laura A. Blincoe, late an employee on the rolls of the House of Representatives, a sum equivalent to six months' salary at the rate she was drawing at the time of her death, and an additional sum, not exceeding $250, to defray funeral expenses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NORMAN E. IVES.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged report (No. 1182) from the Committee on Accounts, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 528.

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to Norman E. Ives for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is this the usual extra compensation which is paid to the assistant clerk?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am advised by the clerk of the Committee on Accounts—and that was the testimony before the committee—that this is the usual resolution that has been passed each year allowing this additional compensation to this clerk to this committee, assigned, as I understand, from the Pension Office as a special examiner.

Mr. MANN. Is this extra compensation for one session of Congress or for the entire Congress?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it is for the entire Congress.

Mr. MANN. I should like to know.

Mr. HASTINGS. The report indicates it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 528, have had the same under consideration and recommend its adoption. This resolution conforms to the practice of the House with reference to the payment for services rendered the Committee on Invalid Pensions by the special examiner detailed from the Bureau of Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY COBB.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged report (No. 1176) from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 513.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to William McKinley Cobb for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the second and third sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee by detail from the Bureau of Pensions pursuant to law.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say in behalf of that resolution that it is the usual resolution that has been passed, and this is the examiner detailed from the Pension Office to the other Pension Committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

W. H. MILLER.

Mr. HASTINGS. I present another privileged report (No. 1175) from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 558.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, to W. H. Miller, janitor and messenger in the rooms of the Official Reporters of Debates, additional compensation at the rate of $260 per annum, payable monthly.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say in behalf of this resolution that this is the messenger and janitor to the Official Reporters. The testimony before the Committee on Accounts was to the effect that he receives $720 a year, or only $60 a month, that he is very efficient, and the Committee on Accounts unanimously agreed to increase this amount, to give him $260 extra, making his compensation $980 a year.

Mr. MANN. This is not a usual resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS. This is not a usual resolution, and it is for that reason I have made this explanation. We thought $60 a month was too small for the services rendered by this man.

Mr. MANN. I am not disposed to carp about that. I think most of the so-called janitors, who are really messengers, get $60 a month. I will not complain about this, because long ago the Committee on Accounts raised the salary of my janitor or messenger to $1,000 a year, and he is worth it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSENGERS TO HOUSE POST OFFICE.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged report (No. 1174) from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. How many more of these resolutions has the gentleman?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not many more.

Mr. MANN. Enough to run until 8.30.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 568.

Resolved, That nine messengers in the post office of the House of Representatives now authorized to be employed during the session may continue to be employed from April 1, 1919, during the adjournment of Congress, and be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. This is an old matter of controversy. I presume these employees are very efficient. I never come in contact with them, because I have to send for my mail. The Government does not deliver it. They are political employees. Nine chances to one they will not be holding these jobs six months from now. During the vacation they have nothing to do to speak of. The House may have need for them while Congress is in session and the Members of Congress are here and having their mail delivered to them several times a day; that is, all the Members of Congress with the exception of four or five of us who have to send for our own mail. But these employees will not be needed, so far as I can learn, during the vacation, and this practically amounts to giving a bonus to these particular men of $200 or $300, in order that they may have a little pocket money with which to go home.

As far as I am personally concerned, I believe that the old practice, which was followed before our Democratic friends became the majority eight years ago, of voting to employees of the House an extra month's salary, in effect in lieu of the mileage which Members draw, was a good practice. I have no doubt there are a good many employees of the House here now who will soon be hunting their way home over the railroad ties, because Congress is too stingy to pay them an extra month's pay in order that they may get away from the Capital to their homes, while we travel home on a substantial mileage. I think it is desirable that the employees of the House should be brought from the various parts of the country, even from the most distant, and that they should not all be permanent residents of Washington. I think when we provide, as we do, rather meager salaries for them that we ought at the end of a Congress to provide them a little extra compensation so that they may go home, because I do not think many of them living in Washington in the last few years have been able to build up large bank accounts. [Laughter.] But here is a proposition to pay nine men for April, May, and June—well, $200 a piece, anyhow. Maybe they will stay here a few days after the 1st of June. It is not likely that their services will be required a great deal longer than that, because, judging from the complaints I have frequently heard about the mail service, they have not become such expert deliverers of mail as to demand their retention in the interest of the service.

There are some members among the employees of this House whom I would like to see retained by a Republican House, and afterwards by a Democratic House, if we should ever have one again, so that they would become practically permanent expert guides in some of the directions where we require expert officials.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution and it is the unanimous report by the Committee on Accounts. It is well known that whether the Members are here or away their offices are kept open and the secretaries are in charge. During the recess of Congress the secretaries will be here and the mail will be delivered. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARTHUR LUCAS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 616.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, $30 to Arthur Lucas for special janitor services rendered during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that Mr. Lucas is one of the minority employees in the cloakroom, who performs service for ex-Speaker CANNON.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. We passed a resolution providing for his payment. How long did that continue?

Mr. HASTINGS. This is subsequent to that time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

G. D. ELLIS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts. (H. Rept. N. 1183.)

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 548.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to G. D. Ellis for extra and expert services rendered in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives during the Sixty-fifth Congress as employee detailed from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report that accompanies the resolution be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution 548, have had the same under consideration, and recommend its adoption. This resolution provides for the payment to G. D. Ellis, an expert printer detailed from the Government Printing Office to prepare for publication of all reports, records, directories, and so forth, authorized by the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a sum of $1,200 for expert and extra services rendered during the Sixty-fifth Congress. This work has not only been performed during the sessions of the Congress but also during the recesses as well.

This resolution conforms to the practice of the House with reference to the payment for such services during past Congresses.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Palmer—I do not know whether he has been confirmed as Attorney General or not, and if he has I should say General Palmer—was in the House in the Sixty-second Congress the Democrats came in with a majority, and the Democratic caucus, on the suggestion of Mr. Palmer, abolished a number of offices which had theretofore been in existence in the House. Among those was a printing clerk. In the old days we had a clerk whose business it was to supervise printing. I am willing to absolve most of the Democratic Members, because I think they were inadvertently misled by the utter inexperience at that time of Mr. Palmer in the affairs of the House. They made great glee about it. They abolished a number of offices, nearly all of which have been restored—offices like the assistant journal clerk. We now have one. What was the result? Before that we paid a man an ordinary salary as printing clerk of the House. Now we are asked to pay another man two salaries to do the work.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. He gets a salary as an employee of the Printing Office, and very likely higher than most of the employees of the House get, and now it is proposed to pay him another salary out of the contingent fund of the House. I do not say that he has not earned it; I do not know; but I do know that the economy, like a good many others, has been rather costly to the Treasury. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that the Palmer resolution reduced the expenses of this House by $90,000 a month?

Mr. MANN. I am aware that the Palmer resolution reduced the expenses of the House, but nowhere near $90,000 a month; but it has all been restored before now, and a good deal besides. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that. The Palmer resolution saved $90,000 a month for these eight years, and the gentleman can see that it amounts to a good many hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. Yes; $90,000 a month would amount to so large a sum that it shows how absurd the gentleman's statement is.

Mr. FLOOD. The figures are not absurd. I speak from the information of the gentleman who has kept the figures. It shows how reckless the gentleman's statement is.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know what the expenses of Congress are.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman from Illinois suggest some reform to keep down the expenses of the House?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas asks me if I can suggest any reform to keep down the expenses of the House. After a long experience in this House and very close attention to the business of the House [applause], my judgment is that every good employee of the House whose services are dispensed with costs this Government thousands of dollars. [Applause.] The best thing this House can have is plenty of good and efficient service. [Applause.]

A committee of this House which has expert employees and clerks will do twice as much good business in the House as one which has not. We have in this House now one of the best enrolling clerks who ever has wielded a pen. [Applause.] And there are many expert employees who ought to be kept here. The House ought never in a spirit of niggardly economy to dispense with needed employees in the House, and that is what we did when we passed the Palmer resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us whether we have any assurance that we will keep this very good enrolling clerk?

Mr. MANN. I could have told the gentleman, probably, if we had had a different result the other night. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous-consent order of the House, the House stands in recess from now until 9.30 o'clock p. m.

Accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 9 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

DURING THE RECESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee assumed the chair, and said:

The assembly will come to order, and with its permission I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to act as its chairman.

Mr. CANNON assumed the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have served in this House under four Speakers who have made notable history—that wonderful genius and man of courage, Thomas B. Reed [applause]; that gallant soldier and genial statesman, David B. Henderson [applause]; that grim old political warrior who has just been called so fitly to the chair, a place which he occupied for so many years with such distinction to himself and benefit to the country, my beloved colleague, Uncle JOE. [Prolonged applause.] I learned to love him, and when he passed the gavel I learned to love, admire, respect, and almost to adore another great Speaker, CHAMP CLARK. [Prolonged applause.]

In the bitterness of politics, in the controversies of statecraft, there comes the human side of kindly interest and great affection, and between men who fight each other with intensity as to policies there exists a brotherly love seldom found outside of these political circles. We have had great Speakers. We have never had a Speaker whom we loved more, all of us, than we do CHAMP CLARK. And, Mr. Speaker, we not only love you—we love the whole family. We love that sweet wife of yours, Mrs. Clark; we love your son who used to be with us in the House and who has fought so nobly for his country [applause]; we love your daughter, and we love young Champ Clark Thompson.

As a token of our love, as a token of our regard, as an expression of our appreciation of your fairness, your justice, your genial smile in the chair, of your actions as Speaker, we want to give you—a lemonade bowl [prolonged laughter], made of silver and shaped in the form of an Indian canoe, and along with it, so that you may have something besides lemonade to drink, we present also a tea and coffee set complete, with platter and all that goes with it; and I know that you and Mrs. Clark, while you may be glad to receive this silver set, will enjoy more knowing the hearts and the feelings of the Members of this House, who take this opportunity to express to you in this feeble way their undying admiration and affection. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have heard Brother MANN make a great many fine speeches, but this was the best one he ever made, I think. Lord Bacon said that a man in high place must take the opinions of his friends in order to be happy. My wife has always been wanting a punch bowl, but I was never able to give her one; and now, when we get one, the use for a punch bowl is a thing of the past. [Applause and laughter.]

This is a day of miracles. Brother MANN very properly under the prevailing conditions, conditions that are probably to become permanent, called this a lemonade bowl, which is a very happy designation. Perhaps in the coming time lemonade will be taboo—especially with a stick in it. They have started out now to run a crusade against tobacco. If the lemonade privileges go, then we may take to the English custom of tea, and if that goes by the board we shall come back to Adam's ale.

I have been here 24 years, and that is a long time. I have been every sort of a Congressman. I was a new Congressman; I was an ex-Congressman; I came back, and am now an old Congressman. I was minority leader, and I have been Speaker eight years, so that I have had every experience in this House that is best worth having, except that of majority leader. I have said time and again, and I say it now, that the House of Representatives is the most generous conglomeration of mankind. We fight each other intensely. You Members who have been here during only the last four years do not know anything about it, but my dear old friend now in the chair [Mr. CANNON] and myself and Mr. MANN and a handful of us remember the old days when pitched battle or battle royal was the common occurrence in this House. How long this era of good feeling and perfect peace is going to prevail in the House—to say nothing of the world—I do not know, but the men who fight each other the hardest in the House come to be the best of friends. Once in a while something so bitter is said that it is not forgiven, but that is very rarely the case. The longer I know this House the better I like it. You learn the virtues of men as well as their failings.

The presentation of this silver service until about a week ago was very much unknown to me, but of the many things that the House has done for me—and it has done a great many—I prize this very highly, not only on behalf of myself but of my wife also. It will be a constant reminder of the kind hearts in this House. The beauty of the material, the elegance of the workmanship, will be constant reminders of friends when we have quit this political scene.

Gentlemen, the secret of success in this House is good humor, good manners, and industry in fulfilling the duties that happen to be assigned to you. Men complain frequently because they do not get the committee assignments they desire. In my first Congress my committee assignments were bad. The man who does his duty faithfully in the place he is put when he first comes here is as certain to rise in this House as the sparks are to fly upward, and no human power can keep him down. Sometimes on the smallest committee a great opportunity comes to a Member. For instance, one of the most potent men who have appeared in this House in a third of a century was Joseph C. S. Blackburn, of Kentucky.

He was better suited to this stormy and turbulent body than he was for the Senate. When he came here he was put on the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, not a very great assignment, and yet by reason of the fact that somebody tipped him off about certain transactions of Secretary Belknap he made reputation enough on that committee to come within two votes of defeating Speaker Randall for renomination, and it sent him to the Senate for 18 years. I give you that as an encouragement. I am very glad, indeed, to have this appreciation.

With honest pride the gift I take,
And prize it for the giver's sake.

Now, having rendered my thanks for the silver service, it is my pleasant duty, on behalf of his loving friends in this House, to present my good friend, Mr. MANN, with a silver service. [Applause.]

It is the most pleasant stunt I have performed in the House. He has served in this House 22 years. The three men in the House most in evidence in its transactions are the Speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader, all three important places.

Mr. MANN has been minority leader in the House for eight years. He will go down in history as one of the greatest minority leaders this House has ever had. [Applause.] The first minority leader whom I ever saw was Thomas B. Reed, a masterfully great man. I used to think I was the most industrious man in the world. After I got acquainted with Col. Theodore Roosevelt I had some doubts on that subject. When I got thoroughly acquainted with Mr. MANN I knew that he outranked me and Roosevelt both in industry. The records of the Congress will show that he knows more about the business of the Congress than any other living human being. [Applause.] The statutes of the country will show that he has amended more bills than any man who ever served in the House of Representatives. His is a marvelous record, especially on unanimous-consent days. [Laughter and applause.] With anywhere from 25 to 100 bills on the calendar he marches in here with every one of them under his arm, with every one of them annotated with a short history of the legislation on that subject, and with his amendments all typewritten. When you gentlemen rise to get up a bill considered by unanimous consent he will play with you like a fisherman does to get his big fish. He asks you all sorts of questions, and finally suggests, after he has reduced you to a state of terror, that if you will accept certain amendments he will agree to let you through. Mr. Speaker CANNON once declared that MANN was the most useful legislator in Congress. I agree to that proposition.

The other day, or the other night, rather, after he had been nominated for Speaker, Mr. GILLETT issued a statement in which he said he had reached the goal of his ambition. If he has, he is a happy man. The next day Mr. MANN appeared here and received as magnificent an ovation as any man in the House of Representatives, Speaker or what not, ever received. [Applause.] It was genuine. It came from the hearts of the Members. It was not a partisan performance. I never tried to stop it; the truth is, I joined in it. [Applause.] It is the only time since I have been Speaker that I have clapped my hands and applauded anybody about anything. [Applause.] While that great uproar was going on I thought of a tale I heard about an Irishman who went into a jewelry store to buy a clock, and the clerk was praising a certain clock because it ran eight days without being wound up. The Irishman said, "Bejabers, how long would it run if it was wound up?" [Laughter and applause.] When I saw that great ovation going on to a man who had just been defeated for nomination for Speaker, I wondered how long it would go on if he had been nominated. This is a handsome present which the Members of the House are making him and will be a reminder of the men with whom he has associated so long and so ably.

As far as I am individually concerned, I have a profound affection for JAMES R. MANN. He has done so many kindnesses to me and mine that I love him. [Applause.]

These closing nights of the sessions are awfully hard on all of us, and yet there is a good deal of pleasure to be gotten out of them. It is a sinking and disappearing of differences. What little affronts we have had from one another are forgotten and we leave here in a good frame of mind. I hope, from the bottom of my heart, that every time Mr. MANN and Mrs. Mann see these presents we have made them that they will recall his great triumphs here and the admiration that the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle have for him.

I hope he will live many years and be a Member of Congress, unless he is promoted to some higher place, during the entire remnant of his life, which I hope will be a very long one. [Applause.] And I am certain I speak the sentiment of the Members of the House when I say that and when I say, "God bless him forever." [Loud applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER then took the chair and was greeted with loud and long-continued applause.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], an old war horse of the Republicans, is recognized [Loud applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, happy is the man to whom comes great opportunity. Thrice happy is he who is equal to the task that he is called upon to perform.

The chairmanship of the Committee on Ways and Means has always been a great office. I doubt if we realize how its duties and responsibilities have grown within a few years. When William McKinley was chairman of that committee, 28 years ago, he made a campaign speech up in my State of Michigan. He was an impressive speaker, solemn and magnificent as a cathedral. With a deliberation that gave weight to his words he began: "My fellow citizens, this is the greatest country in the world. It costs a million dollars every working day to run the Government of the United States. Of course, a sum so vast could never be collected from the people by direct taxation." [Laughter.] And then he went on and made a great tariff speech.

On almost the same day that Mr. McKinley made that speech in Michigan, in September, 1890, a pink-cheeked young man just out of college was admitted to the practice of the law in Scotland Neck, N. C. [Loud applause.] The judge who signed his certificate said afterwards that the most memorable thing about this young man was his bright and expanding smile. [Laughter.] Since then that smile has become celebrated in song and story. The immortal Dickens prophesied it when he wrote of one of his characters as "one vast substantial smile." One of our best-known poets has described its owner in the lines—

The man worth while
Is the man who can smile
When everything goes wrong.

Ah, my colleagues, how often have we been hypnotized by that smile! [Laughter.] How often have we seen the angry winds of debate subside, how often have the storm clouds vanished beneath the sunshine of that smile! There are gentlemen with incomes, gentlemen from New York and elsewhere, who have come here like roaring lions, but have departed like shorn lambs [laughter] after appearing before the Committee on Ways and Means and coming under the transforming power of that angelic smile. [Laughter.] I sincerely trust that the martyred President McKinley can not hear what I am saying to-day, for if he could know that within a generation the expenses of the United States have increased to more than fifty times what they were in his day, and that most of the money is collected directly in the form of income taxes, I am sure he would turn over in his grave. Now, some of these gentlemen with incomes believe in the reincarnation of those who lived long ago. They have expressed the opinion that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is the living embodiment of Capt. Kidd [laughter], though some have said he is the original of the leader of the Forty Thieves in the famous story in the Arabian Nights. [Laughter.] But I assure them that this is not the fact. He is the original Aladdin, who, by rubbing his lamp, has unfolded to the eyes of the American people a wealth of resources and a plentitude of power beyond their fondest dreams. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, we are all proud, proud beyond words, of the valor of our sons. That story will be told and sung as long as men are brave and civilization is beautiful. But the thing to which historians will refer with wonder, the thing of which America will always be equally proud, will be the story of how we poured out our treasure along with the blood of our boys who fell. The wonder will be where it came from, how it could have been produced so quickly. Without money, mountains and rivers of money, all the patriotism of our sons would have been in vain.

Without new millions of dollars every hour of the day and night the giant hands we stretched across the sea would have been paralyzed. All the proud achievements of all the ages look small beside what we the people of the United States have done during the lifetime of this short Congress. A year and a half ago we had not guns or ammunition or training camps or ships. We saw factories rise like magic overnight, we saw cantonments as big as cities, we saw a bridge of ships stretch clear across the sea. How was it done? Mr. Speaker, I know the size of a dollar bill, for once I worked for a dollar and a half a day. [Applause.] I have got from the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations an idea of the money that this Congress has appropriated, and it is the simple truth that if you could make a street 60 feet wide and cover it with dollar bills, the money that we have voted to pay our own country's expenses and that we have loaned to our allies in the life of this Congress would pave a road 60 feet wide and 25,000 miles long. It would make a street two-thirds as wide as this room and long enough to encircle this great round world—every inch of it covered with dollar bills. That has been the task of the Committee on Ways and Means; that has been the work in charge of the smiling boy from Scotland Neck. [Applause.] The Kaiser said we could never get our boys across. They went across on a bridge of dollar bills. [Laughter.] Cyrus the Great and Alexander the Great and Imperial Cæsar all had their trusted ministers who gathered their revenues and imposed their taxes on conquered and unwilling peoples. In a country where all Americans are free and willing, the chairman of our Committee on Ways and Means has made the despots of the past look like a lot of tin-horn pikers. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, this Congress draws to a close. We are proud of the history of our country. We have helped to write a page that we know will forever shine with deathless light. Never did a body of men work together in greater unity of purpose for the accomplishment of so splendid an object. Men can not do these things without loving one another, and among the many men whom we love, our colleague who has so worthily done his great work stands brightly conspicuous. [Applause.] We wish to convey to him, in a durable testimonial, in some slight degree, an inkling of the affection in which we hold him. [Applause.] The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] will please rise and stand until he is counted.

The gentleman is one year older than I am, but he carries his age well. [Laughter.] He was married in his twentieth year; so was I. His wife was one year younger than he; so was mine. [Laughter.] His wife is a handsome lady; so is mine. [Applause.] He has six daughters and three sons; so have I. [Applause.] He belongs to the Baptist Church; so do I. [Laughter.] He belongs to the Democratic Party; neither do I. [Applause and laughter.]

To you, our dear colleague, we present this silver tea service, to be a reminder to you, your children, and your children's children that we, in your presence and in the presence of each other, on a day when politics was adjourned, expressed the unanimous voice of the Members of the House of Representatives in commendation of the personal affection we feel for you and for the patriotic manner in which you have performed the great work entrusted to your hands. [Applause.]

My dear friend, this token of affection is presented to you by your colleagues, who ask you to accept it in the same spirit in which it is given, the spirit of brotherly love.

Brother KITCHIN, your colleagues in the Sixty-fifth Congress love you and wish you well; and the happiest wish that we can make for you is that you may be the proud father of six more girls and three more boys. [Laughter and applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish it were possible that I could take from my bosom my heart and lay it bare before you, so that you could see, without expression from me, how very, very full it is of the emotions of gratitude and appreciation and thankfulness for this generous manifestation of your regard. [Applause.] This and other memories of your constant kindness and consideration during my four years of majority leadership will ever be invoked to cheer and comfort me in all the years that are to come. In the reminiscences of my older age your friendship and comradeship will be my happiest reflections.

I wish here to acknowledge my profound thanks and grateful appreciation of the whole-hearted support and cooperation which both sides of this Chamber have given me during the two critical years just passed. [Applause.]

The Swedish philosopher—whose name for the moment I can not recall—said, "When one's school days are over the days for making genuine friends are also over. Thereafter all friendships are selfish." My association with you compels me to reject that philosophy. I cherish the thought that here, on both sides of the aisle, many are the friendships made from which nothing, even amid the conflicts of rival ambitions, which so often and so unfortunately at times divide men into parties and into factions, can ever separate me.

My friends, if you doubt the sincerity of the utterances already made, in conclusion I beg you to believe me sincere when I express the hope that two years from this night I will be given the opportunity to enjoy the privilege and the happiness of joining in ceremonies like this to the retiring chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the retiring Speaker of the Sixty-sixth Congress. [Laughter.] With all my heart I thank you again and again. [Loud applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is recognized. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to be the medium through which the Members of this House may transmit the title to certain articles to Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky. [Loud applause.]

When a man is defeated for election to this House it always causes personal regret, and not on any one side of the House. The bonds of friendship which are formed here cross and recross this center aisle without taking any heed of it. So that when any man is defeated there is sure to be personal regret on both sides.

But in the present instance we have added to that personal regret the consciousness that the country is suffering a severe loss. [Applause.] I have served for 12 years with Mr. SHERLEY on the Appropriations Committee. That committee, as much, at least, as any committee of the House, requires close application, laborious industry, distatesful and protracted drudgery, that brings no recognition or reward, but which is imperative for the performance of the functions of this House. Mr. SHERLEY for 12 years has done his full duty on that committee. He has shown there not only the unflagging industry which is requisite, but he has shown there also a keenness of mind, a power of cross-examination, a sound judgment, and an impartial fairness which have won for him the confidence and esteem of all his colleagues there. And when, during the last year, he has been its chairman, at a time when the appropriations of that committee rose to figures which staggered all our arithmetical knowledge, he rose to the emergency and proved himself adequate to the prodigious task of mobilizing both the forces of war and the forces of industry. [Applause.]

You know as well as I his qualities on this floor, although his duties on the committee have largely restrained him from their exercise. He certainly is one of the most brilliant debaters of the House. His strong, acute, rapid-acting intellect is served by a fluency of speech, a ready and biting wit, and on occasions a fervid and infectious eloquence which have made him not only a useful Member of this House but also one of its most brilliant ornaments. [Applause.]

And so, I am sure, it is with our unanimous regret that he leaves us. I am commissioned to tender to you, Mr. SHERLEY, as a permanent evidence of that regret and of our friendship, an order for a set of the United States Reports [applause] and an Encyclopedia of United States Law, and also the more personal memento of this handsome watch and chain, with the hope that it will often bring back to your mind pleasant memories and friendships which you formed here, and with our very best wishes and the hope that the day of your defeat was really a fortunate day for you and was the opening to a happy and prosperous business career. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. My friends, I do not know how I may express to you my very great appreciation of your consideration and your thought of me to-night.

Sixteen years ago I came to Congress a young, inexperienced man, without ever having held office. As I look back now over those 16 years there crowd to my mind many, many memories of kindness, courtesy, and consideration. The old King of Israel said, "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." And yet to-night, at the end of that service, I am far from feeling in a boastful mood, but rather with a deep humility as I look back upon the tasks that have been set us all in these years and my poor part in their performance.

The Speaker of the House spoke of membership here and committee assignments. I was appointed when I first came to Congress on a committee that had one meeting, and that was called to tell us that there would not be another. [Laughter.] And I remember when the then Speaker of the House, my very dear friend Mr. CANNON, met me and I expressed my disappointment at the assignment that had been made to me, he said, "Why, young man, you are a member of the greatest committee of the House," and I marveled what he might have meant, knowing that this committee was a very minor one; and then he added, "You are a member of the Committee of the Whole House." And now, after 16 years, I fully realize how very true and how very wise that statement of the then Speaker was, because, after all, committee assignment is somewhat accidental and the work, important or not, is seldom the way to advancement. But here is the forum always for him who has a message for his colleagues and for the people. Here is where are fought out the great issues that divide men and on the correct solution of which rests the happiness of so many millions of people. Here it is that the strife takes place, and here it is, too, that in spite of that strife the friendships spring up and grow and endure, without regard to political differences.

The House is entitled to a much higher place in the respect of the country than it always receives. Its faults are easily seen; many of its virtues lie deep beneath the surface. It is usually judged by what its Members say, rather than what it, as a body, does. The public's judgment often is based on some extreme statement of some individual Member, while we know its action nearly always reflects the sober judgment of its full membership. Here is a real democracy, where a man's place is what he makes it. Previous reputation counts for naught, and by what he gives in help to the House in the solution of its problems is his status fixed.

The years spent here have but deepened my respect for it. In its keeping, in very truth, lie the liberties of the people, and no greater wrong can be done than by thoughtless criticism to weaken their faith in the intelligence and patriotism of its Members.

This Congress has faced great tasks. Never a Congress has faced greater. Plunged suddenly into a world war, all previous conceptions of finance, of expenditure disappeared, and it was for us to follow new paths, to learn new ways, without a guide and without the help of experience. There have been sad days, days when our hearts were very heavy. None of us will ever forget the seriousness, the solemnity of the day when we voted to plunge our country into war. None of us, who knew that we were sending men off to the supreme sacrifice when we might not go, but what felt the terrible responsibility of that hour; and it has been to me, and I am sure it has been to you, in the dark troublesome days that followed, when our load seemed heavy and our road dark, a spur and inspiration to know that no matter what we gave, we could give but little compared with the devotion and the heroism of those who carried our flag to victory. [Applause.]

This has been the sustaining thought and hope to us, and has enabled us to do our part as best we could.

And now it is all over, and the country faces new and different problems, and men wonder, as they always wonder when something new comes, what the outcome may be. As we grow older in life new things are repugnant to us. Few of us like new ideas, we are fearful of them, and so are fearful of what is in store for our country. And yet I am sure that that mission which has ever been hers will continue to be hers. I am sure she will ever lead the way in paths of enlightenment and peace, and the fact that she now must spread out beyond her own territory, out into the world, to take a bigger and a greater part may bring its problems, but should not bring its dismay.

I have an abiding faith in the destiny of my country. I believe that with the need will come the strength. As I think of these problems I am sure that they who come after us will be as equal to them as we have been to ours, and that their solution will be the right one.

Men come and men go. Most of us have our names "writ in water." We play our little part and pass off the stage. The individual is not important in a republic. The great capacity of the American people for self-government makes them independent of individuals. For 16 years I have been the recipient of the generosity of a very splendid constituency. They have given me the fullest freedom of action and leniently dealt with my failings. I have tried to merit their approval by service to my country, and trust I may say, "I have done the State some service." It is to me a comfort to know as I go out that he who succeeds me brings to his task ability, character, and patriotism. [Applause.] And so I pass out, not regretting half so much the public office as I do the severance of the ties of friendship that have been formed here. [Applause.]

The things we feel the deepest it is hardest for us to express. I have been conscious of a very great kindness recently on the part of my friends on both sides of the House. Since my defeat they have shown me a consideration and an affection that I shall never forget. At all times during my whole career they have tendered to me their confidence and their regard.

The Committee on Appropriations has great tasks. Never had it greater than in the immediate past, and some of its tasks are very disagreeable ones. It is particularly the duty of the chairman of that committee to steel his heart against the personal appeals of men for individual things that they desire, because he, of all men in the House, must stand opposed to expenditure. And so it has fallen to my lot frequently to say no when I should have been so glad to say yes, and I have had to do the disagreeable thing, but yet the thing that had to be done.

And so as I bid you good-by to-night I hope you will pardon the spoken word for the unspoken thought; that you will feel and know that as I leave you I leave you with only the memory of great kindnesses, of true friendships, and that the time will never come when I shall cease to remember your consideration, and particularly this evidence of your friendship. To my two sons shall be bequeathed as priceless heritages these gifts. And so good-by and farewell. [Applause and cheers, the Members rising.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the addresses made during the recess may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the addresses delivered during the recess be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on my personal responsibility, and without consulting anyone else, I ask unanimous consent that the House may stand in recess for 10 minutes, in order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] may be recognized. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized. [Prolonged applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if there is anything on earth that I hate to do it is to make a speech. [Laughter.] While I desire to express my appreciation of the beautiful gift which you have so generously presented to Mrs. Mann, and of the affectionate regard you have shown for both of us, still I do not want to make a speech.

I have been a Member of this House for 22 years. At times I have been cursed very roundly, denounced with a good deal of bitterness by Members who were momentarily angry, and long ago I trained my mind and my heart so that whatever might come to me in the House I should never repine over defeat. [Applause.] That I should never sulk because I did not have my way. And though in a way I have been discredited, I come up smiling, with sincere thanks for the many kindnesses this House and its Members have shown to me, and with the deepest appreciation of the affectionate regard which I know the Members of the House entertain for me. [Applause.]

I love the House of Representatives. I worked here until there was danger that I might be overcome physically. I left here nearly two years ago—a year and a half ago, anyhow—to recover my health. I do not know what the future may have in store as to my health, but I can say truthfully that at this time, in a short session of Congress heretofore, I never felt half as good as I do right now. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is it agreeable to the gentleman to yield to me for a statement?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This side of the House occasionally hates the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I hope so. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It often loves the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I am glad of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It always admires the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I think I may take the time to say one thing to the House. I do not know whether my time is up. ["Oh, no."] I have trained myself in talking to make a 5-minute speech or a 10-minute speech or a 15-minute speech and to stop within 10 seconds of the time without having the gavel fall, but I am not trying to do that now. ["Go on."] One thing I have determined upon, gentlemen. I do not know whether I ought to say it or not. ["Sure, say it."] Because my experience is that it is never very wise to tell in advance what you think you are going to do, for you may change your mind. But I have determined upon one thing. In the future I am going to spend more time in my garden and less in the House of Representatives than I have in the past. [Laughter.] I am not going to work so hard, though I hope I may still occasionally be of some assistance to the House or the Members of the House,

I expect that there may be some stormy times in the next House, with such gallant and able warriors on the Democratic side on the floor as CHAMP CLARK and CLAUDE KITCHIN and

FINIS J. GARRETT, and others, when I shall have the privilege and the opportunity of doing my share toward coming to the aid and the help of the next Speaker of the House, Mr. GILLETT. [Applause.] I shall do it willingly and ungrudgingly. I have known and admired Mr. GILLETT for many years. [Applause.] And no bitterness of a contest shall be allowed to linger in my heart. [Applause.]

We are about to separate, some of us not to come back here. This is the greatest family gathering in the United States or in the world. There is no other parliamentary body like it. There is no other parliamentary body in the world where the members come so nearly standing on an equal footing as in our own House of Representatives, where these affections are born. [Applause.] As we separate we remember each other, and these boys who go out will still have lingering in their memory their achievements here and the recollections of what has been done here, the fond friendships which they have formed here, and they all take with them our blessing and our Godspeed.

I again express to you all my deepest appreciation of this kindest remembrance which you have given, for Mrs. Mann and me to carry with us to the end of our lives. [Prolonged applause.]

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks just made by the gentleman from Illinois be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the remarks just made by the gentleman from Illinois be inserted in the RECORD. They will be printed with the other speeches delivered during the recess.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following: "That there shall also be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1919, including the Capitol police and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the Sixty-fifth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order to that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order against the amendment, and the point of order is sustained. The rule is, and has been for a long time, that if only one person is provided for in the resolution an amendment adding another is not in order. If there had been more than one in the first proposition, you could add others. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On March 2, 1919:

H. R. 5999. An act for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

H. R. 13274. An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13462. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

On March 3, 1919:

H. J. Res. 358. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties;

H. R. 15495. An act to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads;

H. R. 12211. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4723. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14516. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and

H. R. 15462. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes.

WILLIS J. DAVIS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts. (H. Rept. No. 1184.)

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 606.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for, extra compensation to Willis J. Davis for extra work performed as clerk to the Committee on Water Power, at the rate of $150 per month from and after January 21, 1918, the date when he began the discharge of such work.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the resolution to read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House $1,000 to Willis J. Davis for services performed as clerk to the Committee on Water Power from January 21, 1918, the date when he began the discharge of such work."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is another one of those cases where one is compelled reluctantly to say no where one would be glad to say yes. I have made up my mind that in this last effort I make on the Accounts Committee I shall content myself with stating the facts concerning this resolution, and if the House, with the facts before it, is willing to take the responsibility, even in so small a matter as this, I am not.

The circumstances of this resolution are these: It provides for the extra payment to the amount of $1,000 for the services, well performed, by Mr. Davis for the Committee on Water Power since January 21, 1918.

I desire to inform the House, first, that Mr. Davis is a competent, intelligent employee and has rendered this service, I am told, in a very efficient and intelligent fashion. But you should bear in mind that the extra compensation provided to be given is given to a man who since October, 1917, has had compensation as clerk at the rate of $300 per month for services supposed to have been rendered for the Joint Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Committee on Accounts asked him if he has had any duties to perform in return for the $300 a month, and he stated to the committee that last year there were no duties to perform, and he resigned his office.

But the Joint Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce persuaded him to remain as clerk, in spite of the fact that he has no duties to perform. That is the whole story. Is the House of Representatives going to give to a man who is clerk at $300 per month, added or extra compensation of $1,000 because he is asked to perform, and is willing to perform, some duties for another committee? To be sure when we created the Water Power Committee we authorized that committee to hire a clerk, which they never did; exercising their own judgment, they took a clerk already on the rolls with nothing to do at $300 per month. The argument now is that because he did something he did not have to do he should get something for it. My answer is that because he was getting money for doing nothing, he should not be paid extra money for doing something—and this in spite of the fact that the things he did he did well.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to table this motion?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield. This resolution is reported from the Committee on Accounts. As has already been stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], Mr. Davis is acknowledged to be one of the best and most expert men along this line that is to be had. More than a year ago this joint committee was formed, consisting of five men from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and five from the Public Lands Committee and five from the Agricultural Committee. It is true that Mr. Davis was clerk of some other committee, but a resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Accounts which authorized the employment of a clerk to this committee at the rate of $2,500 per annum, favorably reported, and passed the House. Mr. Davis was an expert along this line. He was employed by this committee, and he rendered splendid services. Every member of that committee testified to that fact. No better clerk could have been gotten, and every member of the joint committee so testifies. He worked at night; he worked extra hours; he worked on Sundays; and he performed the additional services required of him as a clerk of this committee to the entire satisfaction of the members of the committee. If he had been paid what was authorized to be paid to him under the original resolution, he would have received now about $2,900. The committee did not think, in view of his other employment, that he ought to receive that much.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Directly. Our committee did not think he should be paid that much, but the majority of the committee thought that $1,000 would be fair compensation for the extra hours he put in as clerk to the committee, when he did not have to do it, for the nights he put in and worked for this committee. For that reason the Committee on Accounts recommended that he be given $1,000 in lieu of $2,900 which he would have received otherwise.

We have passed a number of other resolutions here to-night paying extra compensation. We passed a resolution giving extra compensation to employees of the Pension Office who have performed services for the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We passed a resolution to-night giving extra compensation to an examiner from the Pension Office assigned to the Pension Committee. We have passed a number of other resolutions here giving extra compensation to various employees for the extra services which they have rendered, and every member, as I stated a few moments ago, of this joint committee testifies to the great work and great ability and industry of Mr. Davis in serving this committee for the past 14 months.

Let me say that Mr. Davis explains, and it is not controverted, that for a long time prior to his employment he did extra work, and for that reason the committee he was clerk of gave him a little additional compensation during this length of time. It is hardly fair for the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] to state that during all this time he did not have anything to do as clerk of this other committee. He was fair enough to state before the Committee on Accounts that the work has grown less during the last 2 months, but not during the entire 14 months that he served the joint committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Was the statement made by the gentleman from New York that this gentleman, Mr. Davis, has been drawing $300 per month correct?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will state that that is correct, but he drew that as clerk of some other committee, and he has never drawn a single, solitary penny for services, extra services, services he was not required to perform, services he would not have been required to perform, in serving this committee, as I said, extra hours, nights, and on Sundays.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any other clerk of any other committee in the House drawing more than $300 a month?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not familiar with what all of the other clerks are receiving.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know of any other clerk to a committee who is drawing more than that?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not on the Committee on Appropriations, and it is not my duty to investigate what other clerks get. That is a matter which has not come before the Committee on Accounts.

The Committee on Accounts does not have to look into that, but here is what the committee thought, that inasmuch as this man performed this service, and he performed it well—to the entire satisfaction of the joint committee for 14 months—when he could have been paid $2,900, that $1,000 was poor compensation for his services.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it is fair to reward one clerk of a committee, when the Committee on Accounts has not rewarded the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations, who have been performing additional work day and night in the reporting of $19,000,000,000 worth of appropriations?

Mr. HASTINGS. That question was not up before the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts does not deal with that.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is a member of the committee and he understands the work that has been done. I yield to him such time as he desires.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it in order at this time to move to table this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not; the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] has the floor.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, on January 21, 1918, 15 months ago, the Congress created, or rather the House created, the Water Power Committee. That committee has never had any clerk, Mr. Speaker, except Mr. Willis Davis. It never has had a messenger, it never has had an assistant clerk, it has never had any employee except the man mentioned in this resolution. Mr. Willis Davis is the clerk of another committee. The Water Power Committee required the service of somebody who knew something about the technical service in connection with water power. The rule that created this committee provided for a clerk. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], I think very properly, made a point of order that the Committee on Rules had no right to create clerks or clerkships, and it went out on a point of order. Then the Committee on Accounts themselves created a clerk for this Committee on Water Power at $2,500 per year.

The Committee on Water Power, of which I am a humble member, never availed itself of that authority which both the Committee on Rules and the Committee on Accounts gave; but we did, instead of that, ask Mr. Davis and one of the clerks of my Committee on the Public Lands, of which I am chairman, to act as the two clerks of that committee. My clerk has never performed any service and does not ask anything. The clerks on my committee were worked almost to death, and I could not spare them one minute for this Water Power Committee work. Willis Davis did the work; he did it well; he did all of it. Now, I am sorry as I can be, and, although I appreciate the desire of the gentleman from New York to save money, I do not believe down in his own conscience he wants Willis Davis to serve the Water Power Committee for 15 months and not pay him a single cent for it. So technical, gentlemen of the House, was this service that while your Committee on Water Power was engaged in conference we had to take Mr. Davis over there to the Senate conference and use him all through the conference. It was a long-drawn-out affair. The subject of water power is a technical one, as Members of the House know. We could not go out and hire a new man, a man who had no familiarity with the subject. Willis Davis for many years was the clerk of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Adamson. He later was the clerk of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], the present chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He is also clerk of a joint committee. He has been clerk of that committee for 15 months. He has not been paid a cent for that work. We ask no other service; we ask no other payment of a penny to anybody, and I think the Congress and the House would do pretty well to have the clerk of that committee serving for 15 months and only pay him $1,000.

The work was exceedingly well done. He is being exceedingly slimly paid if we give him $1,000. I introduced a resolution for $150 a month, and I thought he ought to have been paid that [applause], but the Committee on Accounts, I think on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], who probably at that time did not know just what the salary of the other committee was. I think he did not; I did not know myself just what the compensation was on the other committee. That to me is not important so long as he served in full capacity.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Let me finish the sentence and then I will be glad to yield. What I was saying is, the Government does not want to require 15 months' faithful service of this young man and not pay him anything for it for acting as clerk for the Water Power Committee——

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. In a moment.

Mr. NORTON. Let me ask the gentleman who controls the time [Mr. HASTINGS] if I may have a few minutes?

Mr. FERRIS. Wait a minute.

Mr. HASTINGS. We will see how much time has been consumed.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman controvert the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] that the gentleman did no service whatever for the $300 a month?

Mr. FERRIS. I am not a member of the joint committee so I do not know.

Mr. BURNETT. That is important to know because if he did not then he ought not to have this.

Mr. FERRIS. I can say to the gentleman from Alabama and the House that while I am not a member of the joint committee and I do not know what he did on that committee, I do know Willis Davis did his duty and did every bit of work they assigned to him in all cases. He is a generous, capable man and has earned this and more. It has been economy for the Government and the committee to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, if the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] is correct, in these 15 months this gentleman has drawn from the Government of the United States $4,500?

Mr. FERRIS. That does not scare me or make me flinch at all. My answer to that is that if a man renders $4,500 worth of work or $4,600 worth we should pay him. I do not care who he is. Willis Davis worked nights and Sundays. He did two men's work, and you are getting the clerkship of the Water Power Committee paid for at a very reasonable rate. If Judge SIMS, of Tennessee, and myself and Mr. LEVER and the ranking Republicans on the committee had gone before the Committee on Accounts for the Water Power Committee I expect you would have created three places—a clerkship, an assistant clerkship, and a messenger. We ask no such thing. We ask $1,000 for full payment for 15 months' work of a young man that did faithfully and well all the duties imposed upon him. It ought to be paid. It will be an injustice if it is not paid. He does not live in my State. I have no more interest than the rest. It is due him. He has earned it. It should be paid now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to know if the gag rule was in force here so that a man could not be recognized to oppose this resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee refuses to give time to those who oppose the resolution.

The SPEAKER. He can grant time as he desires.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Speaker grant me time to oppose this resolution?

The SPEAKER. That is owing to circumstances. The gentleman from Oklahoma has an hour. During that hour he can move the previous question if he wants to do so. If he takes his seat at the end of the hour and yields the floor, somebody else would have an hour.

Mr. BLANTON. I oppose the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do as he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. That is what he is going to do. I wanted to know if the gag rule is in force here.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the gag rule is in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. I think we ought to have a quorum here when the gag rule is in force.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-seven Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no two better friends in the House than the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] and the other gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. I have a very profound respect for their opinion and for their fairness. From the statements concerning this case I regret that I can not agree with their conclusions. It seems to me that in doing this thing that is proposed the House is establishing a very bad precedent.

As I understand the case, the gentleman, Willis J. Davis, was during this time, from January 21, 1918, up to the present time, clerk of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at a salary of $3,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Thirty-six hundred dollars a year; $300 a month.

Mr. RAYBURN. He has not been clerk of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce any of that time, although he has done all the work. He has not drawn any salary as clerk of that committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Has he drawn $300 a month?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know about that.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says he has.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. No; I do not yield. He is the clerk of a Joint Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at——

Mr. RAYBURN. Not of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee; of the Newlands committee.

Mr. NORTON. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. No; pardon me. And during that time drawing a salary of $300 a month. On the Newlands committee the facts, as stated to the House, say he did no work. I was under the impression that his chief on that committee was his chief on the Water Power Committee. It seems to me that it should have occurred to the members of the Newlands committee that this man should be given a leave of absence during the time that he served upon the Water Power Committee, and then he should have been given the salary on the Water Power Committee that a clerk of that committee was entitled to.

I think it is a very bad precedent that the members of the Water Power Committee, who are also members of the committee on which this clerk is serving and drawing a salary of $300 a month, should use their influence, as undoubtedly was done, to have him placed upon the Water Power Committee with the likely understanding that he was to receive an additional salary which was not provided by law.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. The difficulty was perfectly obvious. They only had authority to allow their clerk $2,500 a year, and this man was given $3,600 in his old position. Why not take the old one rather than the new one without an increase of salary?

Mr. NORTON. It seems to me that if the interest of the House was to be considered at all it was proper for the members of the Newlands committee serving upon the Water Power Committee, who were chiefs of this clerk on the Newlands committee, to order his transfer to the Water Power Committee, and that was virtually done. He has not done work for this House on these two committees. The evidence before the House was that he only devoted his service, his actual service, to the Water Power Committee.

Gentlemen of the House, I want to call your attention to the fact that if you establish a precedent like this you will have many cases where clerks are serving upon committees at a fixed salary and where their chiefs, being appointed on some special committee, will transfer them to that committee and come to this House asking for an additional salary. I believe that the resolution should be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-two gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, since I came to Congress, in 1913, I have known the subject of this resolution. Willis Davis was the clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the first five years of that service. In the meantime, also, he was appointed as a clerk of the Newlands committee, made up of membership from the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, for the general investigation of the railroad question. The Newlands committee is still alive. The clerkship to the Newlands committee carries a salary of $3,600 per annum. Nobody in this House will argue that if Willis Davis had not done one particle of work on the Water Power Committee he would have received every dollar of the $3,600 as clerk of the Newlands committee. Yet he has stayed in Washington for these 15 months, away from a business at home, which is a good business that he could go back to at any time and make much more than he has been making in either one of these positions, because it has been insisted upon by the members of the Newlands committee that he should remain in that position. The Newlands committee, it is true, has not been called together for some time, but the Newlands committee is still alive, and this man has stayed here, ready at all times to perform any work that he was called upon to perform.

Furthermore, since the Newlands committee ceased to have meetings he has compiled all of the hearings and gotten them together in pamphlet form and in bound volumes. But, more than that—and I do not reflect or intend to reflect on the clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce since the incumbency of Judge SIMS—since that time he has not only been the clerk to the Newlands committee, but he has performed much of the services for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for which he has not received one dollar of pay.

In the meantime the Committee on Water Power was formed in this House. They were looking about for a competent and able clerk, and they seized upon this young man, who, to my mind, is one of the most capable, one of the most honest, and one of the most industrious clerks that ever came to any committee of this Congress. I think that in view of the extra work done, which he was called upon to do, this Committee on Water Power would have been empowered to pay him the full salary that they were allowed to pay a clerk.

Mr. HASTINGS. That was $2,500 a year.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; $2,500 a year.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. NORTON. I have been informed by a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that this gentleman, Mr. Davis, in addition to holding the position of clerk upon the Joint Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and doing the work of the clerk on the Water Power Committee, also does practically all of the work of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for which work some one else is paid. Is the gentleman asking any pay for the work that he also does, if he does it—and I am asking for information—on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not, sir.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Davis, in addition to doing this Water Power Committee work, does also the work of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. NORTON. Are you on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am. I say he does a great deal of the work of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and receives no salary for it.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. SANFORD. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House that in addition to serving as clerk of the Joint Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at $300 a month, this gentleman has also performed the service for some man who holds the position of clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. RAYBURN. The other clerk has been there and has worked, but Mr. Davis has done a great deal of the work.

Mr. SANFORD. That is what I wanted to know. I want the gentleman to yield me five minutes, if he will.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do think that with these three very important employments that Mr. Davis has filled for this House and its committees it is a very small thing for gentlemen to get up here, when this resolution calls for the payment of only $1,000, when the committee was authorized to pay $2,500, and object to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think it a good precedent to have clerks serving on more than one committee?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I do, if he does the work.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me some time?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the statement that the last gentleman has just made simply serves to increase the confusion. I have never yet been able to understand the process of reasoning of men who stand here on this floor and in public contend for the kind of proposition that this one is. The gentlemen who contend for it here fail to recognize that the money with which they deal so freely is not their money but the people's money. [Applause.] To be sure, there is not much money involved here, but this same proposition that you see in this case is characteristic, or was characteristic a year or so ago, of almost every committee in this House.

Now, what is the proposition here? If one of these gentlemen hired a gardener to cut his lawn, and paid him a hundred dollars a month, and decided not to cut the lawn, would he pay that gardener an extra hundred dollars a month if he asked him to polish the door knobs? These gentlemen fail to recognize and refuse to admit that the common employer is the Government of the United States. The Government is the only employer for whom Mr. Davis worked. He worked for the Government and did nothing, absolutely nothing for over a year, and drew $300 a month, on his own testimony. Yet because for about four months only he did some work for another committee, the proposal here is to pay him a bonus of $1,000. The proposition is indefensible. No man can stand up for it when he once recognizes what the truth of the proposition is. The man for whom you propose to do this thing is honest. Would you corrupt him by giving him a thousand dollars? He is absolutely honest and efficient. He tells these things that I tell you. He probably is smiling now, that you are so simple and so confused that you will contend for a thing that he himself would refuse to ask for. Leave the question to his judgment, and he would not take the money. I tried to get him to say that he wanted it. He said, "No; it is not my proposition." Is the Democratic Party to-day so bold and fearless and so confident of its standing among the people that it dare unite again on one of these little, foolish, insignificant, dishonest propositions? If it is, go on record for it; but I have felt that when I stated these facts, you would not vote this money. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, as I have previously stated with reference to this resolution, I have no possible interest whatever in it. I am a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will not allow me to speak, I will not let him speak for a while.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not have to yield for a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point or order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and ninety Members present, a quorum.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I think the House is familiar with the facts. All the interest I have in it is to bring these facts here before the House as the representative of the Committee on Accounts. As I stated a moment ago, the examiner who came down here from the Pension Office for the Committee on Pensions was paid additional compensation, and the examiner who came for the Invalid Pensions Committee was paid additional compensation. The printer who came here and did some expert service was put on the roll, and we passed a resolution giving him some extra compensation. A great many of these resolutions that we have passed here to-night are to give extra compensation for extra work performed. Every man upon this committee says this man Davis has done this work well, to the entire satisfaction of the committee; that he is an expert along that line; that he did extra service at night; that he worked Sundays, and they came before our committee and recommended that he be paid some extra compensation. As I told the House, the resolution provided that he could get $2,500 a year, and if you had employed an extra clerk he would have been paid $2,900 a year for this that the committee recommended he be paid $1,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As I understood, the resolution which was presented carried with it a committee amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has the amendment been acted upon?

Mr. STAFFORD. No action has been taken on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not put the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Should not the amendment be acted upon before the vote is taken on the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 135, answered "present" 2, not voting 114, as follows:

YEAS—178.

Alexander	Eagan	Kitchin	Rodenberg
Almon	Eagle	La Follette	Romjue
Aswell	Esch	Lampert	Rouse
Austin	Evans	Larsen	Rubey
Ayres	Farr	Lazaro	Rucker
Barkley	Ferris	Lea, Cal.	Sabath
Barnhart	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Sanders, La.
Beakes	Focht	Lesher	Schall
Bell	Foster	Lever	Scully
Benson	Freeman	Littlepage	Sherwood
Black	Gallagher	Lobeck	Sims
Blackmon	Gallivan	London	Sinnott
Brand	Gard	Lonergan	Sisson
Brodbeck	Garner	McAndrews	Small
Browne	Garrett, Tenn.	McArthur	Smith, T. F.
Byrnes, S. C.	Garrett, Tex.	McClintic	Snook
Campbell, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	McCulloch	Stephens, Miss.
Candler, Miss.	Goodwin, Ark.	McKeown	Stephens, Nebr.
Cantrill	Gould	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sterling
Caraway	Graham, Pa.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Stiness
Carew	Gray, Ala.	McLemore	Sullivan
Carlin	Griest	Maher	Sweet
Carter, Okla.	Hardy	Mann	Tague
Clark, Fla.	Harrison, Miss.	Mansfield	Taylor, Colo.
Collier	Harrison, Va.	Miller, Minn.	Tillman
Connally, Tex.	Hastings	Montague	Timberlake
Crisp	Haugen	Moon	Vare
Crosser	Hayden	Morin	Vinson
Curry, Cal.	Heflin	Nelson, A. P.	Voigt
Davey	Helvering	Oliver, N. Y.	Walton
Decker	Hensley	Olney	Watkins
Delaney	Hilliard	Osborne	Watson, Va.
Denison	Holland	O'Shaunessy	Welling
Dent	Houston	Parker, N. J.	Whaley
Denton	Hull, Tenn.	Parker, N. Y.	Wheeler
Dewalt	Humphreys	Phelan	Wilson, La.
Dickinson	Igoe	Platt	Wilson, Tex.
Dill	Ireland	Polk	Wingo
Dillon	Jacoway	Quin	Winslow
Dixon	Johnson, Ky.	Rainey, H. T.	Woods, Iowa
Donovan	Kelley, Mich.	Rainey, J. W.	Woods, Va.
Dooling	Kennedy, R. I.	Raker	Wright
Doremus	Kiess, Pa.	Randall	Young, Tex.
Drane	Kincheloe	Rayburn
Dupré	King	Riordan

NAYS—135.

Anderson	Dyer	Kelly, Pa.	Reed
Ashbrook	Edmonds	Kennedy, Iowa	Rose
Bacharach	Elliott	Kinkaid	Rowe
Baer	Ellsworth	Kraus	Sanders, N. Y.
Beshlin	Elston	Kreider	Sanford
Birch	Essen	Lehlbach	Scott, Mich.
Bland, Ind.	Fairchild, B. L.	Linthicum	Sells
Bland, Va.	Fairfield	Longworth	Shallenberger
Blanton	Fess	Lufkin	Siegel
Bowers	Fordney	Lundeen	Slemp
Britt	Foss	McFadden	Smith, Idaho
Britten	Francis	McKenzie	Snell
Browning	French	McKinley	Stafford
Burnett	Gillett	Madden	Stedman
Burroughs	Good	Mapes	Steenerson
Butler	Gordon	Martin	Strong
Byrns, Tenn.	Graham, Ill.	Mason	Switzer
Campbell, Kans.	Green, Iowa	Merritt	Temple
Carter, Mass.	Greene, Vt.	Miller, Wash.	Templeton
Clark, Pa.	Hadley	Moore, Pa.	Thompson
Classon	Haskell	Moores, Ind.	Tilson
Cleary	Hawley	Morgan	Tinkham
Cooper, W. Va.	Hayes	Nichols, Mich.	Treadway
Crago	Heaton	Nolan	Vestal
Cramton	Hersey	Norton	Volstead
Currie, Mich.	Hicks	Oliver, Ala.	Walsh
Dale	Hollingsworth	Padgett	Ward
Dallinger	Huddleston	Paige	Wason
Darrow	Hull, Iowa	Peters	Watson, Pa.
Dempsey	Husted	Purnell	Welty
Dominick	Hutchinson	Ragsdale	White, Me.
Doughton	James	Ramsey	Wood, Ind.
Dowell	Johnson, Wash.	Ramseyer	Young, N. Dak.
Dunn	Juul	Rankin

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Bankhead	Little

NOT VOTING—114.

Anthony	Emerson	Helm	Nelson, J. M.
Booher	Estopinal	Hood	Nicholls, S. C.
Brumbaugh	Fairchild, G. W.	Howard	Oldfield
Buchanan	Fields	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overmyer
Caldwell	Flood	Jones	Overstreet
Cannon	Flynn	Kahn	Park
Cary	Frear	Kearns	Porter
Chandler, N. Y.	Fuller, Ill.	Keating	Pou
Chandler, Okla.	Fuller, Mass.	Kehoe	Powers
Church	Gandy	Kettner	Pratt
Claypool	Garland	Key, Ohio	Price
Coady	Glynn	Knutson	Reavis
Connelly, Kans.	Goodall	LaGuardia	Roberts
Cooper, Ohio	Gray, N. J.	Langley	Robinson
Cooper, Wis.	Greene, Mass.	Lunn	Rogers
Copley	Gregg	McCormick	Rowland
Costello	Griffin	Magee	Russell
Cox	Hamill	Mays	Sanders, Ind.
Davis	Hamilton, Mich.	Mondell	Saunders, Va.
Dies	Hamilton, N. Y.	Mott	Scott, Iowa
Doolittle	Hamlin	Mudd	Sears
Drukker	Heintz	Neely	Shackleford
Sherley	Steagall	Towner	Williams
Shouse	Steele	Van Dyke	Wilson, Ill.
Slayden	Stevenson	Venable	Wise
Sloan	Sumners	Waldow	Woodyard
Smith, Mich.	Swift	Walker	Zihlman
Smith, C. B.	Taylor, Ark.	Webb
Snyder	Thomas	White, Ohio

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. GANDY with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. LUNN with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. COADY with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. FLOOD with Mr. REAVIS.

Mr. FLYNN with ———

Mr. GRIFFIN with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. HAMLIN with Mr. SMITH of Michigan.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. HOOD with Mr. WOODYARD.

Mr. JONES with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. KEHOE with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. KEY of Ohio with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. MAYS with Mr. FULLER of Illinois.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina with Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. GARLAND.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. GLYNN.

Mr. POU with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts.

Mr. OLDFIELD with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. KEARNS.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia with Mr. KNUTSON.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. KEATING with Mr. MAGEE.

Mr. STEAGALL with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. SUMNERS with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana.

Mr. VENABLE with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma.

Mr. WISE with Mr. MCCORMICK.

The result was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HASTINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

PROBATION SYSTEM FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10891, an act to amend and reenact an act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia, and I move to agree to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

GUARANTIES TO PRODUCERS OF WHEAT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the same.

Mr. HAUGEN. To all the Senate amendments?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I object; I never heard of such a procedure.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. It is some time since I received assurance from the Chair that my status quo is still preserved.

The SPEAKER. It is. The gentleman from South Carolina asks to take this bill from the Speaker's table, recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments, and agree to the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina made a privileged motion. He did not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Oh, yes; he did.

Mr. MANN. He asked the Chair to lay the bill before the House, it being in a privileged condition, and then moved to recede and concur. These amendments have been acted on by the House once.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, I beg to differ with the gentleman from Illinois. These amendments have not been agreed to.

Mr. MANN. They have been disagreed to, have they not?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the message which the Senate ushered over to the House in connection with the conference requested by the House on these various amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, as I recall hearing the message it was to the effect that the Senate had agreed to the House amendment to the Senate amendment No. 24, and insisted further on their own amendment and did not ask for a conference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that include amendment No. 9?

Mr. LEVER. All amendments, including amendment No. 9.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the Senate insists upon that amendment?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the conferees take action on it?

Mr. LEVER. The Senate did not appoint conferees.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman from South Carolina says that he did not make the motion that has been put in his mouth by the late lamented leader of the minority side——

Mr. MANN. Not late lamented yet. Wait until to-morrow at least. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. I should like to ask if the gentleman from South Carolina has the right to make this motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves——

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman from South Carolina did not move at all. That word was put into his mouth by the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from South Carolina asked, and I would like to know what is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Which, as I understand it, was never made by him until transposed by the Chair. I have reason to ask about this matter, and I would like to have this thing stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina will please state his motion again.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to all Senate amendments and agree to the same, except Senate amendment No. 24, which has already been disposed of.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it in order to move to concur in all of the Senate amendments en grosse? Is not the House entitled to take a separate vote on each amendment? Is it possible that we have a rule that the House must either swallow or reject 27 amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair puts the motion as it is made.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The Chair will not put the motion until I reserve the right to object, I trust.

The SPEAKER. No; if the gentleman desires to object.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. Are these amendments divisible?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I have understood that this bill has been all arranged through the way of transposition from one body to another, and that it has all been fixed up before it has ever been put to the House. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to recede and concur in all Senate amendments except amendment No. 24.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I object. I demand a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands a separate vote on each amendment. The Clerk will report the first one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "create an."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on that amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "any," insert the word "existing."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on all Senate amendments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be some explanation of amendment numbered 9.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on amendment numbered 3.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8, after the word "necessary", insert "to carry out the purposes of this act and to enable the people of the United States to purchase wheat products at a reasonable price."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not the gentleman allow a member of the committee a little time on that question? The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] desires some time.

Mr. LEVER. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I would like to know whether the gentleman from South Carolina is going to yield me any time.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 3 is put in here for the purpose of controlling everything. It controls all wheat products, the very purpose the committee has been trying to avoid. This controls crackers, everything that is made out of wheat, and makes a lot of work for the agency which has been created. The intention of the bill was for the purpose of guaranteeing wheat, and the object of this bill is to carry out that guarantee. Now we are going to have control of everything that the grocery store handles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman to tell us, if he can, what the conferees had in mind in accepting this suggestion. The conferees apparently have not agreed upon the price fixing of crackers.

Mr. LEVER. There has not been any conference at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman a question for my information about this matter. I have been trying to get information from the chairman. What excuse was there for giving this power to fix the price of products of wheat, including crackers, pretzels, and things of that kind, when the foreign price is lower than the American price?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. There is no reason whatever. That is the very object I have been trying to fight.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The products of wheat include crackers, the products of wheat include bread, the products of wheat include pretzels, and you can buy them cheaper abroad than you can buy them here. The purpose of this is to keep the American price up, I understand, and I ask the gentleman about that——

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That is the effect of this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be no demand for pretzels after the 1st of July next.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may be humorous in the closing hours of the session, but the effect upon the American people is very serious. Is it not a fact that the adoption of this would be that the American price would be kept up while the world price might be much lower?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That is the very object.

Mr. BAER. If the gentleman will permit, I think the object of this is to keep the price down on food products made out of wheat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The effect of it would be that the American consumer pays much more than it will be sold for abroad.

Mr. BAER. When we fixed the price of wheat flour you paid $7 less a barrel for it than when the price was not fixed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They were buying it abroad at that price when we were paying twice that in the United States.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will you tell me where you find the authority given to this agency to control wheat products other than the wheat itself? Do you claim to find it in amendment No. 3?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. No. 3 amendment is for that purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is nothing of the kind.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. What is the purpose of putting it in, then?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is for carrying out this act; and the effect of carrying it out may be to reduce the price of food products to the people. It is not giving authority to control these things. It is to carry out this act just as it was written, with the effect to make cheaper food products. It gives no authority over any of the other food products.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Under this amendment they can fix the price of anything they want.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I beg the gentleman's pardon. His construction of it is wrong.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Every manufacturer of food products has to keep a record. I trust this amendment will not be carried out. It is absolutely against the idea of the bill. Mr. Speaker, my idea of this is that if we put this amendment in, with this agency, under the license system every man that manufactures any kind of products from wheat has got to keep a record and keep an account of it, and the work is a great deal more than anything else. When they say this agency will not control that concern I can not see any reason for that provision in this amendment. There is no question with some of us who have had experience with the agency but that we know just what they will do and what they have done in the past, and it seems to me if we are going to control wheat and wheat flour it ought to stop at that point and not go any further, because the trouble, as I said before, is to make a lot of work and to regulate the prices of every man that manufactures anything from wheat. I trust this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, under the proclamation of the President of the United States, by virtue of an act of Congress the farmers were guaranteed $2.26 for their No. 1 wheat delivered at Chicago. So far we are all agreed. Nobody wants to repudiate that contract. But here, gentlemen, is a proposition that, in order to make that contract good we have to take on additional burdens. First, we guarantee the miller, the wholesale dealer, and the baker against loss. Now it is proposed to include bran and shorts under this license system, so that the miller may take his $36 bran, mix it with water, mix it with sand, mix it with corncobs, mix it with any inferior substitute, and sell it for a higher price.

The dairy people are now buying the bran for $36 to $40, and if you pass this amendment they will pay from $50 to $60 for the corncobs and the sand and the water mixed with it. That is what took place under this license system in the past. They want the very same proposition. As to proof of that I refer you to the hearing on the feed bill.

If so, they may say to a farmer, "Mr. Farmer, walk up and pay $50 to $60 for a ton of feed, inferior to bran which they knew could be bought for less—for $36 per ton. In fixing the price on wheat of the farmer who had 1,000 bushels of wheat to sell he lost at least $2 a bushel, or $2,000. If under this bill he has to buy 50 tons of feed he is taxed another $1,250.

In this bill will be found the cotton-future proposition. According to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] the cotton growers to-day are, I believe, robbed of $50 a bale. This bill, although a short step, is one step in the right direction.

According to the information furnished the committee the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] 10 per cent of the undesirable cotton is to be eliminated. Why eliminate 10 per cent only? If the cotton growers are now being robbed of $50 a bale, if 10 per cent is eliminated they will still be robbed of $45 a bale. I repeat, in order to keep the guaranty solemnly made by the President, by virtue of a law of Congress, it is proposed to add additional burdens.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that no man wants to repudiate a contract. This bill makes that contract good, but in order to make it good we have to vote for these additional burdens that are to be tacked onto this bill. Rather than to repudiate a contract I am willing to submit to the tax because I want to make Uncle Sam's word good.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the parliamentary situation which confronts us. This bill has been passed through the House and the Senate. We disagreed to all the Senate amendments except one. We agreed to Senate amendment No. 24 with an amendment and sent it back to the Senate, and they agreed to our amendment to their amendment.

The bill now comes back to us for action. In the closing hours of this session, unless we to-night agree to these Senate amendments, this bill will be defeated. It will be impossible to pass it. If there were any real objection to any of these amendments, I would not be in favor of agreeing to them; but there is no objection, no valid objection, to a single, solitary amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want some information about two amendments. If the gentleman will give it I shall be satisfied if the information is satisfactory. I would like to know if amendment No. 3, inserted by the Senate, is a price-fixing amendment in regard to the price of wheat?

Mr. RUBEY. Amendment No. 3 is not a price-fixing amendment, and in my opinion, without casting any reflections on anybody, it does not amount to anything.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman differs from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], who has made a statement in regard to it?

Mr. RUBEY. I disagree with him entirely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman does not think that we are giving any unusual power to Mr. Hoover if he is to be the actuary under this provision?

Mr. RUBEY. I do not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, I want to ask about amendment No. 9, which is a peculiar amendment. I will read it:

> The President shall take seasonable steps to provide for and to permit the establishment of a free and open market for the purchase, sale, and handling of wheat and wheat products upon the expiration of this act.

That is to say, if this, after this, act expires he shall do certain things. Is that a free trade or reciprocal arrangement with Canada or any other country?

Mr. RUBEY. I think it is a very courteous statement made by the Senate that does not mean anything at all. This bill will expire on the first day of June, 1920. The guarantee expires at that time, and I do not believe that under this language the President will take any steps at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The suspicion is—and I have heard it stated here on this side—that this is a reciprocal arrangement, looking to Canadian trade, that shall come into the United States free, in competition with the wheat growers of our northern tier of States.

Mr. RUBEY. I think perhaps when the Senate passed that amendment they thought possibly that by some method of legislation they could get the country back quickly to a normal condition. I think that is all they intended to accomplish by that amendment, but I do not think it amounts to anything.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What does "a free and open market" mean?

Mr. RUBEY. In my opinion "a free and open market" is the kind of market we had before the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not an international market?

Mr. RUBEY. Certainly not.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] is wrong in his contention, then what does that language adopted by the Senate mean?

Mr. RUBEY. As I said a moment ago, I do not think it means anything.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think we can put that construction on it. I do not think we can say that the Senate did a senseless and foolish thing. Somebody must have had something in their minds when they put that in the bill.

Mr. RUBEY. I do not want to be discourteous; but, as I stated a moment ago, I do not think there is anything in the amendment.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that these amendments will all be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me three minutes?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have examined all the Senate amendments to this bill, perhaps not as carefully as some other Members have. I can not see any objection to any of them. I do not think they change the sense of the bill or the meaning of the bill in any respect whatever, except where they add bran or semolina or something of that sort to the provisions of the bill.

Now, here it is within 12 hours of the end of the legislative day of March 3. This bill has to have amendments disposed of. It has to be enrolled and signed by the Speaker of the House, by the President of the Senate, and by the President of the United States before the final adjournment of Congress at 12 o'clock to-morrow on the calendar day.

There may be things that we would not write in the way that they are here. That is no novelty. I never saw a bill come back from the Senate that was in the form in which we would write it here. It may be that some of the amendments inserted by the Senate are not necessary. Most of them mean the same thing, whether they are in or out, as far as the bill is concerned. But if we are going to carry out the guaranty of the Government—and we ought not to hesitate about that—there is only one thing to do, and that is to agree to these Senate amendments now and send this bill up, so that it can be enrolled and signed by the presiding officers of the two bodies and by the President of the United States. It is child's play if we do not do it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing anybody.

Mr. HAUGEN. I know, but speaking about child's play, there is a regular way of doing things, and that is to vote on these amendments separately. Now, shall we swallow 27 amendments without a separate vote?

Mr. MANN. I shall swallow the 27 amendments, if there are that many, either with or without a separate vote, in whichever way the question comes, because I had rather vote for these Senate amendments than have the Government of the United States repudiate its guaranties. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The next amendment in the same section provides not only for the protection but the indemnification of millers.

Mr. MANN. I know, and that is what the bill provides for without the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. We did not ever agree before to pay them money.

Mr. MANN. We agreed to protect them, and it was stated on the floor of the House when the bill was under discussion that that was exactly what the language of the bill meant.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The protection was to be only by regulating the price of wheat. I do not understand that we intended to pay them any money.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman heard the discussion. That was stated on the floor of the House to be the purpose of the language in the bill. The Senate has made it more explicit. It has not changed the proposition; but if it had, I am not willing to repudiate the promise that the Government made, and I am not willing, by haggling over the terms of this bill, to prevent its becoming a law by 12 o'clock to-morrow. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?

Mr. LEVER. I move the previous question on all of these amendments. It is evident that this House is in favor of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on all these amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of Senate amendment numbered 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, after the word "protection," insert the words "or indemnification."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 19, after the word "crops," insert the words "due to the action of the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 17, after the word "who," insert the words "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 21, after the word "who," insert the words "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 23, strike out all after "exceeding" down to and including "both," in line 24, and insert "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 24, after "both" insert "The President shall take seasonable steps to provide for and to permit the establishment of a free and open market for the purchase, sale, and handling of wheat and wheat products upon the expiration of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 5, strike out the word "no" and insert "Provided, That as between the two articles mentioned preference shall be given to the exportation of flour except when the public interest would, in the judgment of the President, be injuriously affected thereby, no."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 19, strike out the word "or" where it occurs the third time, and insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 19, after the word "flour" insert the words "bran and shorts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 10, after the word "wheat," insert the word "semolina."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 13, after the word "him," insert the words "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 15, after the word "or," insert the words "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 19, after the word "or," insert the words "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, lines 22 and 23, strike out the figures and words "$5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years or both" and insert "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 8, line 10, after the word "wheat," where it occurs the first time, insert a comma and the word "semolina."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 18, after the word "wheat," where it occurs the first time, insert a comma and the word "semolina."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after the figures "$1,000," strike out "or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 24, after the word "wheat," insert a comma and the words "semolina or wheat flour."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 4, after the word "wheat," insert a comma and the words "semolina or wheat flour."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 9, after the word "wheat," insert a comma and the words "semolina or wheat flour."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 12, after the word "wheat," insert "semolina or wheat flour."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 14, after the word "who," insert "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 1, after the word "who," insert "intentionally and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 2, strike out the words "or order."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 5 and 6, strike out "$5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year or both," and insert "$1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the votes whereby these amendments have been agreed to and lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ENTRY OF CERTAIN DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House as in the Committee of the Whole joint resolution 438, to permit entry of distilled spirits shipped to the United States prior to September 9, 1917, and wines and other nonspirituous alcoholic beverages so shipped prior to January 1, 1919.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider House joint resolution 438 in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman asking unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; it is a privileged resolution. I ask to consider the resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 438, to permit entry of distilled spirits shipped to the United States prior to September 9, 1917, and wines and other nonspirituous alcoholic beverages so shipped prior to January 1, 1919.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the House joint resolution 438, with Mr. SUMNERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to admit to entry any distilled spirits shipped to the United States from a foreign country prior to September 9, 1917, and any wines and other nonspirituous alcoholic beverages so shipped prior to January 1, 1919, upon the payment of the duties and other taxes to which the same are subject by existing law.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is presented by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means under a unanimous report, and is recommended by the Treasury Department. The resolution simply permits the entry of certain Chartreuse and wines, the entry of which is now prevented by the food-control act and by the food-stimulation act. The shipments were delayed on account of the exigencies of the war. They were made in good faith, and some American importers will be ruined if we do not pass this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If we do pass the resolution, is it not possible for a lot of American boys to be ruined?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. If we do pass the resolution they can not sell it after the 1st day of July, and the sale of wines and liquors of all kinds will be permitted until that date. The stocks of liquors now in this country will not be exhausted on the 1st day of July—there will be some hundreds of thousands of gallons of whisky left in the country when war-time prohibition commences. There is nothing in the gentleman's position. We are likely to be on a whisky basis before war-time prohibition commences. The gentleman will agree, I am sure, that these light French wines will do less damage than the very large supply of American whisky on hand will do—and if the boys must drink they will be better off if they substitute these wines for the more dangerous American whisky, which can be had in such enormous quantities.

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather see the importers ruined than the boys of the country.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, no matter what the gentleman thinks about prohibition, good faith requires that we permit these wines to come in now. I reserve the balance of my time.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a cable message from Brig. Gen. Blatchford, in command of the Panama Canal Department, urging that everything possible be done to expedite the legislation contained in S. 5224, which passed the Senate February 25, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1840), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, from the special committee appointed to investigate conditions in the Indian Service under the act approved March 2, 1917, submitted a report (No. 1168) thereon.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14944) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer, for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry, inventions, patents, and patent rights, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1169), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SIMS, from the Joint Subcommittee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted a report (No. 1170), under authority of public resolution No. 25, Sixty-fourth Congress, providing for a report on the operation of the railroads.

Mr. LINTHICUM, from the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, submitted a report (No. 1171) that the files and papers described in the report of the Department of the Interior in House Document No. 1754, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, dated February 1, 1919; in the report of the Department of Commerce in House Document No. 1693, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, dated January 14, 1919; and in the report of the Postmaster General in House Document No. 1795, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, dated February 14, 1919, are not needed in the transaction of the current business of such departments and bureaus and have no permanent value or historical interest; which report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report (No. 1172) that the files and papers described in the report of the Treasury Department in House Document No. 1666, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, dated January 4, 1919, are not needed in the transaction of the current business of such departments and bureaus and have no permanent value or historical interest; which report was ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LUNDEEN: A bill (H. R. 16218) to provide for a referendum vote of the people of the United States on all proposed declarations of war by the Government of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16219) to provide for a referendum vote of the people of the United States on the proposed league of nations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BESHLIN: A bill (H. R. 16220) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Farrell, Pa., four German cannons or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16221) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Wheatland, Pa., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16222) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Warren, Pa., four German cannons or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 16223) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the village of Ada, Mich., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 16224) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish standards of classification of commercial feed, to regulate the sale and shipment thereof in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception with reference thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McLEMORE: A bill (H. R. 16225) to prevent the removal of pneumatic-tube properties in post offices and Federal buildings in certain cities prior to July 1, 1920; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 16226) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish a German cannon, with carriage and cannon balls, to the village of Loudonville, Ohio; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAMSEY: A bill (H. R. 16230) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the township of Hohokus, in the county of Bergen, N. J., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 16231) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Port Austin, Mich., two German cannons or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MASON: A bill (H. R. 16232) to provide for the purchase and operation of pneumatic-tube mail service in the cities of New York, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; Boston, Mass.; and St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DONOVAN: A bill (H. R. 16233) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Twenty-second Regiment of Engineers, of the city of New York, N. Y.; one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FESS (by request): A bill (H. R. 16234) to provide for the purchase and operation of pneumatic-tube mail service in the cities of New York, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; Boston, Mass.; and St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BESHLIN: A bill (H. R. 16235) for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a post-office building at Warren, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16236) for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a post-office building at Greenville, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 442) to repeal section 906 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 443) proposing an amendment to the Constitution authorizing Congress to enact legislation to prevent lynching; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DILL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 444) requesting the delegates representing the United States at the peace conference at Paris to offer certain amendments to the proposed plan for establishing a league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Resolution (H. Res. 622) directing the Secretary of War to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Oregon, urging the Congress of the United States to pass Senate bill 2470; to the Committee on Roads.

Also, memorial from the Legislature of the State of Oregon, favoring the return of the public utilities to the owners; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin relating to the establishment of a league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TAGUE: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts urging Congress to provide additional pay for soldiers and sailors discharged from the service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 16227) granting an increase of pension to Wilhelmine Gaebler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 16228) granting a pension to Mary M. Hancock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 16229) granting a pension to Joseph Bauer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the Milwaukee Hotel Association, International Molders' Local No. 125, and Brewery Workers' Joint Local, all of Milwaukee, Wis., concerning appropriation for United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of the Trades and Labor Council, Racine, Wis., asking that the Government purchase and control certain public utilities; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Trades and Labor Council, Racine, Wis., asking that no further troops be sent to Russia; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Manufacturers' Association, Catholic Woman's Club, board of education, and sundry citizens, all of Kenosha, Wis., in favor of Senate bill 4987; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of the Woman's Club, Kenosha, Wis., favoring Senate bill 4987, providing for national department of education; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of the Kewane's Club, Kenosha, Wis., favoring Senate bill 4987, creating a national department of education; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of citizens of Wisconsin, urging H. R. 10550, providing for national ownership and Government operation of all railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of the Mobilized Women's Army, of Berkeley, Cal., on behalf of a league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: Petition of Patrick Lynch, of Somerville, Mass., and 319 others, in favor of the adoption by Congress of the Gallagher resolution, so called, expressing the earnest hope that the peace conference now sitting in Paris, in passing upon the rights of various peoples, will favorably consider the claims of Ireland to the right of self-determination; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of J. C. Pushee & Sons, Aubert Dabney, Robt. H. Swan, H. West Leonard, Seth Taylor, John M. Lamb, E. M. Deering, and H. E. Truman, all of Boston, Mass., urging against repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of N. Sallinger, Boston Wholesale Grocers' Association, Kenneth F. Hentoine, Henry R. Comley (florist), Ralph S. Clark, and Lamson Co., all of Boston, Mass., and the American Association of Woolen and Worsted Manufacturers, New York, favoring the daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of J. Linfield Damon, jr., proprietor of Hotel Thorndike, Boston, Mass., favoring daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GORDON: Letters of William D. Soper and 98 others, men and women of Cleveland, Ohio, and vicinity, petitioning for the release from imprisonment in the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., of J. F. Rutherford, president of the International Bible Students' Association, and W. E. Van Amburg, A. H. McMillan, R. J. Martin, F. H. Robison, C. J. Woodworth, George H. Fisher, and G. De Cecca, leading members of said association, confined therein since June of 1918, and other political prisoners convicted during the war for written or verbal opinions expressed by them, upon the grounds that said convictions and imprisonments were and are in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: Petitions favoring H. R. 12352 and S. 4637, McKellar-Keating retirement bill, from Robert L. Alston, 556 West One hundred and twenty-sixth Street; Walter H. Balzer, 527 East One hundred and thirty-eighth Street; W. A. Breitenbach, 747 Melrose Avenue; Dominick Carboni, 339 East One hundred and twenty-fourth Street; John Denny, 1991 Bathgate Avenue; Placido C. Chaibrero, 3632 Holland Avenue; A. Kohnle, 1167 Clay Avenue; George Marson, 1378 College Avenue; Thomas Mara, 645 Eagle Avenue; Daniel J. Peterson, 300 East One hundred and fortieth Street; Harry Rottenhausen, 321 East Sixty-ninth Street; Herman Schaefer, 1368 Boston Road; Frank Schaely, 521 East One hundred and fifty-seventh Street; Stanley W. Smith, 440 East One hundred and forty-third Street; Sigmund Senz, 903 Tinton Avenue; and Charles Zanoni, 303 East One hundred and fifty-second Street; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HILLIARD: Petition of the Parent-Teachers' Association of the City and County of Denver, Colo., urging the formation of a league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring daylight saving; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the State committee of readjustment, San Francisco, Cal., urging that all discharged soldiers be given transportation to their homes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the State committee of readjustment, San Francisco, Cal., recommending an amendment to Senate bill 5022; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Local No. 1172, Stockton, Cal., urging Government ownership of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of California, against the repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of N. Bieber, of San Francisco, against tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROMJUE: Petition of citizens of Hannibal, Mo., urging Government ownership and operation of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SCHALL: Petition of Local 510, Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron-ship Builders, and Helpers of America, urging Government ownership of all railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TAGUE: Letters and telegrams advocating adoption of H. R. 14893, from the Boston Clothing Association, Howes Bros. Co., and the United States Column Co., all of Boston, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, telegram advocating passage of H. R. 13274 from the Bowker Insectide Co., of Boston, Mass.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, telegram advocating passage of the McKellar-Keating bill from the Federal Employees' Association, Woods Hole, Mass.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, letters advocating passage of the Lewis-Raker bill to commission Army nurses from Mrs. Oakes Ames and Mrs. David J. Coolidge, 303 Berkeley Street, Boston; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, telegram from Jordan, Marsh & Co., of Boston, and a letter from the American Association of Woolen and Worsted Manufacturers protesting against the repeal of the daylight-savings law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, letters favoring passage of H. R. 15625, from the Massachusetts Board of Education and J. J. Prindiville Co., Framingham, Mass.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WARD: Petition of Palmer Canfield, jr., mayor of the city of Kingston, N. Y., and prominent citizens of Kingston in favor of appropriating funds for continuation of the United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WELLING: Petition of the Box Elder Commercial Club, Brigham City, Utah, urging continuance of Government control for reasonable period of telephones and telegraphs; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

Continuation of the proceedings of Monday, March 3 (legislative day of Saturday, March 1), 1919.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

At 10.30 p. m., Monday, March 3,

The Senate had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee is on page 33——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am about to make a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering an amendment which might otherwise not be in order. Is such a motion debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator given notice of his intention to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering the amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have given notice of my intention, but I understand that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] thinks the notice is not sufficient. However, I will discuss that matter with him when the question is raised. I am assuming that he will not raise the point, for I think the notice has been properly given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that if the notice has been given in time, and a motion is made to suspend the rules, that it is debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, not referring to the question of whether the motion is debatable or not, I make the point of order that the Senator has not given one day's notice, which the rules require, as there has not been an adjournment since the notice was given.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Virginia can not make that point until I make my motion.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I was perhaps a little premature, but I thought the Senator was about to make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was the notice of the Senator from Iowa given on this calendar day?

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire, first, to make the motion. Then, if the Senator from Virginia desires to make the point of order which he has just suggested, he will be at liberty to do so.

I move that the third paragraph of Rule XVI be suspended so as to make in order the amendment named in the notice which I gave on Saturday and which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] hereby gives notice that on Monday, March 3, 1919, or when the above bill is under consideration, he will move to suspend the third paragraph of Rule XVI for the purpose of making it in order to offer as an amendment to section 7 of the bill H. R. 16187, the general deficiency appropriation bill, the matter hereto attached and made a part hereof:

Amend section 7 by adding thereto the following:

"That section 10 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. That carriers, while under Federal control, shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws, or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or any other act applicable to such Federal control. Actions at law or suits in equity may be brought by and against such carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law; and in any action at law or suit in equity against the carrier, no defense shall be made thereto upon the ground that the carrier is an instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government. All final judgments for a plaintiff or plaintiffs rendered in actions for personal injuries or for loss of or damage to property shall be promptly paid by the Director General of Railroads either from the operating revenue of the defendant or defendants or the revolving fund herein created. Nor shall any such carrier be entitled to have transferred to a Federal court any action heretofore or hereafter instituted by or against it which action was not so transferable prior to the Federal control of such carrier; and any action which has heretofore been so transferred because of such Federal control, or of any act of Congress, or official order or proclamation relating thereto, shall upon motion of either party, be transferred to the court in which it was originally instituted. But no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control.

"'That during the period of Federal control the right to initiate or change rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices exercised by the carriers now under Federal control, prior to the 29th day of December, 1917, shall hereafter be exercised by the President, or by the Director General of Railroads, but such right shall be exercised under all the limitations and conditions which were imposed upon it by the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have as full and complete authority and jurisdiction to set aside, change, modify, suspend, or otherwise review all such rates, fares, charges, classifications, and regulations as though the Government had not assumed the possession and control of said transportation systems. To that end the said act to regulate commerce, as amended, is hereby declared to be in full force and effect with respect to rates, fares, charges, classifications, practices, and regulations, anything in the act approved March 21, 1918, to the contrary notwithstanding. The procedure before the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be the same as formerly, except that the Director General of Railroads shall stand in the stead of the carriers, and all notices theretofore required to be given to or served upon carriers shall be given to or served on said Director General. All orders or findings of the commission shall bind the Director General to the same extent as they formerly bound the carriers.

"'In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, practices, or regulations, or any changes or proposed changes in the same, the reasonableness thereof or any discrimination therein, the rule to be applied shall be the same as existed under the said act to regulate commerce, as amended, and under the general law of the subject as it was prior to the Government's possession and control.'"

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the day's notice required by the rules has not been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has there been an adjournment of the Senate since the notice was given?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There has not been.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senator from Virginia not to make the point of order, and for this reason: When the Senate recessed on yesterday—Sunday—morning, the understanding was amongst those Senators who were here and the Senator in charge of the bill that we should recess until 1 o'clock, when the eulogies were to come on, and then that there would be an adjournment until this morning. The Senator from Virginia probably did not know that.

Mr. MARTIN or Virginia. I never heard of it, I was not a party to it, and I am not bound by it. Two or three Senators can not get together and make an agreement and bind the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; they were not two or three Senators. It was done here by Senators who stayed here all Saturday night.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. How many were there—five or six?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That was the understanding; and the Senator asked that a motion to take a recess on yesterday be made. I suppose that he did it, of course, not knowing of that understanding.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not know of any such understanding and never heard of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was a general understanding on the part of those who were here, and I appeal to the Senator from Virginia not to invoke the point of order under those circumstances. I do not think it would be just the right thing or in accordance with the customs of the Senate; and I know the Senator does not intend to do anything of that kind.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the interpretation of the rule. The rule under which I have given the notice provides:

RULE XL.

SUSPENSION AND AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.

I have not examined the authorities or the precedents upon the question; I do not know whether or not there are any; but I do know what "one day" means in the common, ordinary acceptance of that term. "One day" means a calendar day, and unless it is otherwise expressed somewhere in the rules of the Senate, the word "day" ought to be given its usual signification.

I do not charge the Senator from Virginia with any bad faith at all, but it was the understanding, as expressed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], that there should be an adjournment on Sunday. Moreover, the section of the pending bill to which I have offered my amendment originated in the House of Representatives as an independent measure and passed that body in that form, appropriating $750,000,000 for the Railroad Administration; and I am not opposing the appropriation. It came over here and we had some controversy in regard to the amendment which I have offered, which, although it seems formidable, changes the existing law in but three respects, which are easily understood. In order to prevent the amendment which I have offered, or propose to offer, the House bill was disregarded, thrown into the waste basket, and the substance of the House bill was inserted in the deficiency bill in order that it might become a part of a general appropriation bill. I recognize the right of the Appropriations Committee to take that course if it desired to do it, but it nevertheless savors of an advantage which the committee, in my judgment, ought not to have taken of the situation. Thereupon I gave the notice; I gave it almost at the very moment this appropriation bill was presented to the Senate; it had barely been printed till I gave the notice that on Monday, which was the one day after the bill was reported, I would move to suspend the rules. I know that I am under great disadvantage in that I must get two-thirds of the Senators to vote in favor of the suspension before I can offer the amendment at all.

I submit to the Senator from Virginia, although I understand the embarrassments which surround him, that he ought not to make this point of order, and I submit to the Chair that when the rules of the Senate declare that one day only is necessary between the giving of the notice and the submission of the motion that those who framed the rules said what we all mean when we say "one day." We have distinctly to separate those two meanings when we desire to make them clear in our proceedings in the Senate—the difference between a legislative day and a calendar day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia raise the point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I feel compelled to do so. This is a very important bill; there are a number of other amendments, and if I waive any rights in one instance I will have to waive them in another. I know nothing in the world about this agreement; I did not participate in it; I did not authorize anybody to bind me; I was never consulted about it; I had nothing to do with it; and I do not feel, when the Senate has taken a recess and did not adjourn, that I ought to refuse to take the benefit of that decision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question has never been decided by the Senate, so far as the Chair can ascertain, but it has been decided in the House, and it has been ruled in the House that where the rules provide for "a day" it is a legislative day; it is not a calendar day.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Chair has finished his ruling, I desire to say that I think the decision of the Chair is correct. Upon the other point, the statement made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], that an element of bad faith is involved in the action of the committee in raising the point of order, I myself was here Saturday night all night, and I suppose was as much a party to the agreement for a recess as any other Senator; and, so far as I know, there never was any suggestion that an adjournment should be taken after the meeting of the Senate at 1 o'clock on Sunday. I never heard of it, and I do not think there was any such understanding. Unquestionably the construction of the rule in the House of Representatives sustains the position of the Chair, but, so far as I know, there is no precedent exactly in point in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Virginia has entered the Chamber now, and I am sure he will announce that there was an agreement that a recess should be taken Saturday night or Sunday morning about 7 o'clock until 1 o'clock on Sunday, and that at the close of the memorial services on Sunday the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] would move an adjournment of the Senate. The Senator from Virginia is here now, and I will allow him to make the announcement.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the question of whether there would be an adjournment or a recess was not discussed, but my impression was that it was understood that there would be an adjournment. Such agreement as there was was left to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I could not be here on Sunday. I overslept myself. It was understood that the Senator from Wisconsin would have charge of the exercises in connection with his colleague's services, and that no business would be done on Sunday. That was the important point.

My impression was that the word "adjournment" was used. If I had been here, I would have asked for an adjournment, but I had been up two or three nights before and was not able to be here. The Senator from Wisconsin was to carry out the understanding in connection with the exercises and see that there was no business done. If he had an understanding that there was to be an adjournment, he certainly had the power to enforce it, for the simple reason that there was no quorum present, and the Senate could not take a recess without a quorum.

The senior Senator from Virginia was not notified as to what the proceeding was; neither was any other Senator. It was simply an agreement, so far as I and three or four other Senators were concerned—the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and three or four others. We had an agreement to get through about 5 or 6 o'clock in the morning. I did not know when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] introduced his resolution; consequently I am satisfied there was no purpose to interfere with his resolution and no agreement. No question was made on that point, except that I thought we would adjourn, because we all realized that unless a quorum was here at the exercises there could be nothing but an adjournment of the Senate without unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I was here yesterday, and I will say to the Senate that the Senator from Wisconsin insisted strenuously, when the motion to take a recess was made, that there should be an adjournment, and he moved an adjournment, but it was voted down and a recess was taken.

Mr. SWANSON. If I had been here, I would have moved an adjournment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me say, while I am on my feet, that I did not intend to impute any improper motive to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I know him too well to harbor for a moment the thought that he would try to take advantage of anyone in this way. I simply assumed that he did not know of the understanding. I thought that when it was called to his attention he would recognize the situation, because of his long service here in the Senate and his knowledge of how these informal agreements have been made and entered into and carried out.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was in the conference as much as myself; but if I had been here, and had not overslept myself, I would have moved an adjournment.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that after consultation with the Senator from Virginia I notified the Senator from Wisconsin of the tentative agreement, and requested the Senator from Wisconsin, at the request of the Senator from Virginia, at the close of the exercises to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to appeal from the decision of the Chair, although I think the Chair is in error; but I can not allow the moment to pass without saying to the Senator from Virginia that I shall feel constrained to discuss the amendment which I desire to offer in connection with the proposed appropriation of $750,000,000, and, in my opinion, the privilege of offering the amendment, or at least offering my motion to suspend the rules in order to make the amendment in order, will not prolong the discussion upon the bill. I feel it my bounden duty to tell the Senate and the country something of what has been done in the administration of our railroads and the necessity—aye, the imperative necessity—for the adoption of the amendment which I propose. I do not believe there is a Senator in this Chamber who is opposed to the amendment. If there is one, I do not know who he is. I doubt whether there are a score of the Members in the House who are opposed to the amendment; and I only say to the Senator that the amendment is one which the people of this country want more than they want anything else from this Congress.

I realize that taking a recess instead of taking an adjournment may have deprived me of the opportunity which I supposed I would have. I was not here on Sunday, and therefore can only depend, and do depend entirely, upon what others say with regard to the understanding; but we are bound to discuss this question in connection with a $750,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am put in a very embarrassing position. Before I say what I will do about it I want to give notice now that no human being in the Senate can bind me except myself, and if it is attempted again I will repudiate it with absolute impunity.

I am now held up here to adhere to an agreement that I never heard of. I never authorized anybody to make it for me. I do not approve of it at all, and yet it goes out from a number of Senators here that I would be subject to an imputation of bad faith if I did not keep an agreement that was made without my knowledge and without my authority—an absolutely nefarious practice, subversive of the rights of Senators and subversive of orderly business in this body.

Still, as some Senators have made suggestions of that sort, I am not willing to be put in the position of being considered by any Senator as having exercised bad faith; but in yielding, therefore, and not insisting on the point, I give this notice, which I give deliberately, unconditionally, and absolutely, that no Senator can bind me. I bind myself, and nobody else shall bind me. I will repudiate any arrangement made by any other Senator to control my vote.

Still, the Senator from Iowa and several others have suggested that I was bound in honor to adhere to this agreement, made by some one without authority and without my knowledge and consent. I will therefore sacrifice my conviction and sacrifice my rights rather than have them entertain the opinion that I am exercising bad faith in this matter, accompanying it, however, with the statement that I will never again be bound by an arrangement to which I am not a party.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I did not bind the Senator from Virginia, and had no desire to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator need not be saying that. I have not said he did.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator did. I am a party to this agreement. I want to say that I simply bound myself, as far as I could, by any agreement I made. I assumed no authority to bind any Senator and had no purpose of binding them. Any Senator could have objected here on Sunday on the ground that there was no quorum. It was evident that there would be no quorum here at these exercises that were adjourned to 1 o'clock. The Senator from Wisconsin was authorized to carry out the agreement in connection with those exercises. He had power to do it. All he had to do was to move an adjournment. There had to be a quorum not to do it. The Senator from North Carolina was here. He was in it. I did not try to bind anybody, except that I desired to do what I could, and the matter was turned over to the Senator from Wisconsin to take charge of those exercises on Sunday. We adjourned about 7 o'clock. I had been up two or three nights, and I could not be here, and told him I could not be here.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it seems that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] did not undertake to bind me. Who did? If I am bound at all, who bound me? The Senator from Virginia disclaims it, and I insist on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has heretofore sustained it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the junior Senator from Virginia, in reference to his suggestion that the point of no quorum could have been made, that that is true; and yet here was the situation: There were eulogies set in commemoration of three Members of Congress. Before they were over the Senator from Montana rose in his place and moved that when the Senate cease its deliberations it take a recess. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] moved that when the eulogies were over the Senate adjourn. That came up in the middle of the exercises. Had the point of no quorum been made, of course we could not have gotten a quorum. We had only a half dozen here, and that would have simply broken up the proceedings, which certainly would have been very unfortunate.

Mr. SWANSON. There was an understanding about those exercises that the Senator from Wisconsin was to have charge of them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Montana took charge. I know that the senior Senator from Virginia was not bound. I know that. I know that the junior Senator from Virginia did not attempt to bind the senior Senator. It was just an informal understanding, such as we often have in the Senate. As I say, I know that the senior Senator from Virginia was not acting in bad faith, and is not acting to-night in bad faith at all; but that was the situation. I thought about making the point of no quorum.

Mr. SWANSON. If I had been here I would have moved an adjournment and required a quorum before they could have taken a recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Wisconsin did all he could without raising the point of no quorum and cutting out the eulogies.

Mr. SWANSON. It would not have been necessary to do it. When the question of an adjournment or a recess was made, we could not take a recess without a quorum being present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know; but if we had made the point of no quorum, the Senator can appreciate the situation the Senate would have been in, with a day set for eulogies, and we not able to hold them. We would have had to adjourn without holding them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, since I have been referred to a good many times in this discussion which has been proceeding, perhaps I ought to say that the unanimous-consent agreement entered into by the Senate for the commemorative exercises yesterday included exercises in commemoration of the character and services of the late Senator Husting and the late Representative Davidson, of Wisconsin. That covered all that was included within the unanimous-consent agreement. Shortly before the exercises were held, I think the day before, the Senator from Indiana came to me and inquired whether it would be agreeable to allow addresses to be made for the late Representative Comstock, of Indiana, and for whom it would not be possible, probably, at any other time during this session, to hold memorial exercises. I said that I could see no reason why such addresses might not be made.

Mr. President, within the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement there was nothing said about an adjournment. The unanimous-consent agreement simply provided that the Senate should convene on Sunday, the 2d day of March, at 1 o'clock, at which time exercises would be conducted here commemorative of the services and in memory of the life and character of the late Senator Husting and Representative Davidson. Saturday night, very late—I think it was just about the time we adjourned—the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], either later or just before, and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], both accosted me. I did not say anything to them about adjournment. I had supposed that, as a matter of course, as is usual, as I understand it, in such cases, at the conclusion of the exercises a motion would be made that the Senate adjourn as a mark of further respect to the deceased subjects of the memorial exercises. But each of those Senators in turn, as we were about to conclude the business of the Senate—it was a very late hour, I think nearly 2 o'clock in the morning—said to me, "Senator LA FOLLETTE, you will, of course, at the conclusion of the exercises to-morrow move to adjourn." I said I would, of course. I had supposed that that would be the usual proceeding. That is all there was of it.

We met at 1 o'clock Sunday. At the conclusion of the exercises as to Senator Husting I was very much surprised to have the exercises interrupted by the senior Senator from Indiana coming upon the floor and saying that at the conclusion of the exercises he had agreed with the senior Senator from Virginia to have a recess taken instead of an adjournment. It seemed to me that that was somewhat diminishing the measure of respect that the Senate should show on such an occasion; and I rose in my place here and said that that was not in accordance with the arrangements, or with the usual practice, and that at the conclusion of the exercises a motion would be made for an adjournment.

But the Senator from Indiana was persistent. The Presiding Officer, the Vice President being in the chair, suggested what I felt on such an occasion as that that anything approaching a controversy was unseemly and that the matter should not be discussed. I made, I think, but an observation or two after that. I did feel somewhat aggrieved that the arrangement was not to be carried out. I did not know anything about a motion pending here bearing on legislation. I did not know that the Senator from Iowa had a motion pending to suspend the rules. I absolutely had no thought of the effect of that motion upon the business of this session. I just had one thing in my mind, and that was that a decent regard for the services in memory of the dead whom we had met that day to memorialize called for the usual form of adjournment of the Senate. That was all there was to it. But the Senator from Indiana, I will say, I felt to be more or less of an interloper, because he had gotten into the exercises by courtesy. The unanimous consent of the Senate was for exercises memorializing the services of the deceased Senator and the deceased Representative from Wisconsin. He had gone into some corner here with the Senator from Virginia and arranged to make a motion to recess. I do not know whether the Senator from Virginia or anybody else has authority to bind the action of this Senate. We are all of us here upon a plane of equality representing States. So far as I know, nobody is boss of the Senate and no one ought to be. This is a democracy. I add another regret to the regrets that I had yesterday when this matter came up for discussion. I think we ought to be permitted to bury the dead Members of this Senate without any squabble over politics.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I dislike to be vascillating, but I may say, relative to any suggestion of bad faith, that I withdraw the point of order on the motion of the Senator from Iowa. I do it under duress. I do not think it is exactly fair treatment to put me in that position, but I am placed in that position and I will not make the point of order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am very glad the Senator from Virginia has withdrawn his point of order. While I have not assumed to make any agreement in the matter, the understanding was that when the memorial exercises were concluded there was to be an adjournment. I do not claim any right to bind the Senator from Virginia. I did not make the agreement, but I understood that was the agreement, and whenever I spoke, I spoke about it as an understanding that we were to adjourn, as the Senator from Wisconsin has stated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senate will give me its attention for a brief time I will explain as clearly as I can the purpose of the amendment which I propose.

My motion is to suspend the rules to make in order the amendment of which I shall speak. I realize that I must have two-thirds of the Senators voting in order to accomplish the purpose I have in view.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will yield to me for a minute, I understood the Senator from Virginia had withdrawn the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is right. The Senator from Iowa understands that. I do not make the point of order that he has not given one day's notice.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator from Virginia withdrawn the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No; I simply agree that your notice is sufficient.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the Senator from Virginia withdraws only the point of order against the notice which I gave.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not against the amendment itself.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, Mr. President, I hope I may have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Senators will kindly resume their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to repeat what I said just before I was interrupted. I recognize that I must have two-thirds of the Senators voting favorably for the motion to suspend the rules, and because I must have that proportion of the Senators I direct their attention to the question I am about to submit.

I must be allowed first to say a word with regard to the appropriation itself, for the amendment which I have proposed is intimately related to the amendment which asks Congress for an appropriation of $850,000,000 to enable the Railroad Administration to carry forward the work in which it is now engaged.

Mr. President, the people of the United States paid for their transportation furnished by what is known as class 1 roads—that is, the roads which have a gross revenue of more than $1,000,000 for the year 1918. You will remember that the Government took possession of the railway properties of the country on the 1st day of January, 1918. The people paid for the transportation which the Government furnished them during the year—and I will use round numbers—$4,900,000,000, an amount nearly $1,000,000,000 in excess of the sum paid for transportation from the same roads in 1917. Bear that comparison in mind. We paid for transportation upon these roads in the possession of the Government $1,000,000,000, practically, in excess of the year preceding the Government administration.

Notwithstanding the operating revenues of these properties, which, as I have said before, aggregated $4,900,000,000, the net operating income of these properties in 1918 in the aggregate was $706,064,000, whereas in 1917 the net operating income of the properties was $929,786,000. That is to say, in order that it may be fully grasped, notwithstanding the fact that the Government collected from the people $800,000,000 more for transportation than was collected in the previous year, the net operating income of the properties was more than $200,000,000 less than in the year 1917.

That means, further, that inasmuch as we have guaranteed compensation to these properties of more than $900,000,000 the Government has lost, as compared with this guaranty, more than $200,000,000 in one year. It goes without saying that the Government must pay that loss, and there is but one way in which it can be paid. That is through an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States. It is to make good the difference between the sum we have promised to pay in compensation, and which we must pay, of course, and the net operating income, that $210,000,000 out of the $750,000,000 is required.

Moreover, the Government has made advances—and I am not criticizing the Government at all; I will do that at some future time. I expect to review in rather a careful way the history of the Railroad Administration for the last year at some future time, but I do not do so now because I do not desire to delay the consideration and the disposition of this bill.

In addition to the loss of more than $200,000,000 for the year, as compared with our agreement of compensation, the administration has advanced to the railroad companies of the United States a sum in various forms—and I will not recapitulate either the amount or describe the forms—of $800,000,000; or it has become obligated for something like that sum. It is evident that the railroads have been utterly unable to finance themselves. Whatever money they secured to invest in a capital way necessarily they secured from the Government, because the moment the Government took possession of the properties and began to operate them the railroad companies could not issue their bonds and their stocks, and in that way put themselves in possession of funds necessary to make permanent betterments or extensions or any other improvements, the cost of which goes naturally to capital account.

I will not review these things. I have rather an intimate knowledge of them; I have some familiarity with what has been done, and I have no doubt that unless the United States is willing to deny to the railroad companies the privilege of paying any dividends on their stocks, or even the interest upon their bonds for the year, we must make an appropriation of substantially the amount proposed in the bill.

I have thought that to deny the railroads the opportunity or the privilege or the right to make these dividends would be a direct, or almost direct, repudiation of the agreement which we have made with them. With the spirit of the agreement I am sure it would be in sharp conflict, and I do not want to do it.

I stood here a year ago begging Congress not to pass this bill agreeing to give the railroads $920,000,000 as an annual compensation. I thought then and I know now that the compensation which we authorized for these railroad companies is $225,000,000 more than it ought to be; but when the United States enters into an arrangement it must keep it in good faith. It ought to be more scrupulous in the performance of its promises than the private individual or person.

That is just a bird's-eye view of a very great situation and one that will tax the best thought and the energies and the patriotism of the Congress of the United States when it comes to finally dispose of the railroad problem. I come now to my amendment.

I think it was in May, 1918, that the Railroad Administration, without notice, without any considerable examination on the part of those who had theretofore been charged with the duty of examining the reasonableness of rates, in that month the Director General increased the rates that were to be charged thereafter by the railroad companies, so that taking a year under those rates the aggregate advance or increase in the rate would be about $1,100,000,000. I will say in passing that those rates went into effect, a part of them, in the early part of June and a part of them a little later in June; so that the revenues of the year reflect the increases or advances for substantially six or seven months.

Mr. WATSON. May I inquire, does that include both freight and passenger rates?

Mr. CUMMINS. Both freight and passenger. I am not complaining of the absolute increase, but these rates were raised in a manner that brought the utmost confusion into the business of the country and inflicted in many instances great injustice upon the manufacturing, industrial, and the mercantile enterprises of the country. They were advanced so that in some instances they were 10 per cent, in some instances 15 per cent, in some instances 50 per cent, in some instances 100 per cent, in some instances 300 per cent, and I know of instances in which the increase was 600 per cent.

I can not severely criticize members of the railroad administration because they, or those who had the matter in charge, were attempting to do a thing which they were not qualified to do. They knew that in view of the increase in wages and the increase in the cost of supplies they had to have more money, and I do not doubt that they had to have more money, but they did not know how to get the money with the least disturbance of the business of the country. They did it in the only way that seemed to be open to them, by a sort of horizontal increase, a performance that is always wrong.

There have been I think two increases since that time and there is now proposed another increase through a change in classification that will bear very harshly upon the part of the country in which I live, and its burden will be felt equally in all parts of the western country. I am not saying that they ought not to raise the rates again; I will not enter that question; I may be willing to grant that the revenues of the railroad companies must be increased again; but I insist that the increases already made, and the increases yet to be made, shall be so adjusted by skilled and competent persons as that the business of the country may proceed without the disturbances which we witnessed a few months ago.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will yield for a question, I think I agree with the Senator that it is necessary to provide the $750,000,000 for the railroads. I also agree with the Senator that it is necessary to have this rate-making power returned to and lodged with the Interstate Commerce Commission as before Government control began. But there is one matter which distresses me somewhat, and that is, will the attempt to add the amendment of the Senator to this bill jeopardize the chances for the final enactment of the bill into law? I feel myself that I would rather provide for the $750,000,000 to take care of the requirements of the railroads while under Federal control than to attempt to add this amendment and possibly defeat both. I am not clear in my own mind as to what my duty should be at this particular moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I sincerely hope the Senator from Ohio upon reflection will see his way clear to vote for the motion I have made. I do not think it will defeat the bill. I think from some things I have heard that it will have a tendency to promote and speed the passage of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator one question in that connection? Is it not the Senator's view that if his amendment is put on the bill any other amendment that may be germane to his amendment will be admissible? That might load the bill down with amendments and I fear very much would jeopardize the passage of the bill, if further amendments, not only germane to the bill but germane to that amendment, would be admissible.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Florida feels as deeply as I do the necessity for the amendment which I have proposed I am sure he will not allow the apprehension which he has just expressed to control his vote. I regard it as vastly more important to add this amendment than I regard it as necessary to pass the appropriation bill itself, because this amendment is in the interest of the business of the United States—those unfortunate people who have to pay, not those who receive.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to state to the Senator from Iowa that I sympathize very thoroughly in his request for a suspension of the rule and for the passage of his amendment. I hope to vote for both. I regard the amendment as essential to the transaction of business in the country. I want to ask the Senator this question. I believe there were some who feared if we should suspend this rule and adopt the amendment, and there should be trouble in the House, the House not accepting the amendment, and the bill came back here with such action, there would be an effort to prevent any action at all upon the bill by extensive delay, or, to use plain language, perhaps a filibuster then might be brought forward. I can not think that is so, but I am asking the question of the Senator because I believe a statement from him on that subject would bring votes both for the suspension of the rule and the adoption of the amendment itself.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not expect any such result, and I will tell the Senator from Georgia why. Substantially every commercial organization in the United States has passed resolutions in favor of this amendment. Every shipping organization with which I am familiar has taken action in favor of the amendment. Every other organization which is interested in those who have to pay as distinguished from those who receive have in some way or other indicated their desire that this amendment shall become the law. I venture to say there is not a Senator here who has not received many resolutions and letters referring to this subject, all of them being in favor of a modification of the law such as I am proposing.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield? I want to ask the Senator another question in order to get a little light as to what my own course ought to be in this matter. I have been informed that if this amendment is added to the bill it will be impossible to pass it through the House; that it will invite other amendments seriously jeopardizing any relief provided for in the deficiency bill.

At the same time I realize that if this amendment is adopted the Senate conferees will feel under serious obligations to carry out the wishes of the Senate. Would the Senator from Iowa, under these circumstances, be willing to say to the conferees on the part of the Senate that they ought to recede if this amendment is added to the bill and they discover that it is likely to jeopardize the $750,000,000 which we are voting in the bill for the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I would not care to speak on the matter at all or to take up the time of the Senate if the action of the Senate were accompanied with a statement of that sort. If we put this amendment upon the bill I hope, and I expect, that the conferees on the part of the Senate will stand for it. I know that three-fourths of the Members of the House are for it. I know that for the reason that the same petitions and the same letters and the same representations have been made to them. If Mr. Hines, from whom we take some authority in the amendment I have proposed, will say to the House committee that this amendment ought to be accepted there will be, in my judgment, no opposition whatever to it in the House or in the House committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am thoroughly convinced in my own mind that the rate-making power ought to be restored to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and, with all due respect to the gentlemen composing the railroad directorship, their attempt to administer the rate question has been a miserable failure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Ohio, for he but confirms my own conviction, and I do not know of any man who is more familiar with this subject than is the Senator from Ohio. We have been conducting hearings in the Interstate Commerce Committee for more than six weeks, and a large part—I will not say the greater part, but a very large part—of that testimony has been devoted to the wrongs which the shippers have suffered by reason of the manner in which the law has been administered in making and changing rates.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood, and I do not want to mislead anyone; but I am entirely willing to say in this presence that had I been in charge of the administration of the railroads and was indicted for maladministering them in certain particulars, which at a more opportune time I shall discuss, I would plead guilty and throw myself on the mercy of the court. At the same time this situation presents itself: I feel, and I feel intensely, that it is absolutely necessary that this Congress shall provide the $750,000,000. I do not think there is any room for difference of opinion on that subject between men who have studied the question. Above everything else I want that relief for the railroads, and I feel that if that relief is not afforded it may bring on a panic. I want to avoid that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, if the Senator from Ohio will just help me put this amendment on, I am sure that he will be satisfied.

Mr. POMERENE. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that if this rate-making power is not restored to the Interstate Commerce Commission at this session I will help him to restore it at the next session.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is an old maxim that runs something like this, "hope deferred maketh the heart sick"; and I sincerely trust that the Senator from Ohio will not postpone relief to the people of this country for 12 months, unless he has the most positive assurance that some higher and greater object can be accomplished by the defeat of the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if it were within my power to do it——

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, let us try it anyway.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, I do not want because of any action we may take here to-night to be defeated in the two objects which both of us seem to have in mind, namely, the financial relief to the railroads and the restoration of the rate-making power to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Let us be sure of the first rather than by attempting too much in the dying hours of the Congress defeat both objects.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I am not carrying on my argument upon the basis that we ought to have an extra session, for I believe in allowing every tub to stand on its own bottom, and in considering every measure on its own merits, yet I may suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if this amendment is a worthy one, if it ought to become the law now, I think he ought not to permit this possible fear that he has in his mind to control his action, for it is always in the power of the President to convene Congress and enable it to enact the legislation which we ought to enact now. But I am not putting it upon that ground; I am simply saying there is an anchor to windward, which the President may use at any time that he pleases.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I withdraw what I said about the President, so that the Senator from Ohio will not have to answer it.

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite willing to answer it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator allow me just a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield; certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it was developed in the hearings that the present status of the rates as they now exist would not be disturbed were the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to be adopted. The Interstate Commerce Commission do pass upon rates, and, even now under the present law, they have a right to review and to correct any discrimination or any rate that they think is not the proper rate. So that the relief that would come from the Senator's amendment would be to prohibit the Director General from inaugurating any further rates and putting them into effect, and then leaving it to the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust them.

It seems to me, from the hearings we had, that the present Director General and those associated with him believe that the rates now are more than ample to take care of the running expenses of the roads, and I join with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in the supposition that the status quo now would not be disturbed. The shippers now have a right under the present law to have any injustice from which they may be suffering adjudicated and righted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The only good that can possibly come by the adoption of the Senator's amendment at this time is to prohibit the Director General of Railroads from exercising the privilege of increasing rates in the marvelous manner that his predecessor did, when there was a flat increase in rates of 25 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course the Senator from South Carolina can easily find a reason for voting against the amendment, although I understood that he rather favored it in committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Iowa to misunderstand me. I am speaking about the emergency that is now on us, and of the necessity for this legislation. I am heartily in favor of the Interstate Commerce Commission having, as it has had, the rate-making power. I was simply questioning the discretion at this time, under the status that the Senator is familiar with, and that I am familiar with, and that every member of the committee is familiar with, that it is not likely to be disturbed, and any hardship from which the shipper is suffering to-day he can, under the present law, since the rates have been put into effect, go and have them adjudicated.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that is true, then there is no need for any change of the law at any time, because the shipper has the right now to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and complain. That furnishes him no remedy whatever—that is, no effective remedy. But, Mr. President, allow me——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me there, he does not intend to say that the present law does not give the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to pass upon rates instituted by the Director General. It has that power now. We did not take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to pass upon that question. The only change in the law was giving the Director General the power to initiate rates and put them in operation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite familiar with the law of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly; but I did not want to have it construed that they did not have the power now to get redress, and I was only questioning the expediency of the proposed amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that be true, if the position of the Senator from South Carolina is sound, then there is no need for any change in the law at any time, if that is an effective, fair, substantial remedy.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I say this: The complaint that I have of this is the giving of any amount of power to initiate rates and to put them into effect and do the harm before the shipper has a right to go and have them adjudicated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, evidently, then, the position of the Senator from South Carolina is that there is no danger that that will be done in the future.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I supposed that that was the only thing that would call for this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the only reason why I have offered the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Precisely; but I said the testimony that was developed before the committee showed that the present rate of wages was amply able to take care of the situation in the extraordinary circumstances in which we found ourselves, and that for the time that intervened—the 21 months—there was hardly a probability that there would be any more of the general blanket raising of rates.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I must disagree from the conclusion of the Senator from South Carolina. There was no such testimony before the committee, no testimony which impressed me as establishing any such conclusion; and I know that there are proposals for increases in rates pending at this time. I was furnished a letter, no longer ago than Saturday, showing a proposal of increases in rates in the western country; and it is idle for the Senator from South Carolina at least to try to convince me that these rates will not be increased in the future. I know they will. I believe that the present year will show a loss of more than $200,000,000, as compared with the guaranty that we have given to the railroads. I know that Mr. McAdoo thought otherwise; but the experience of the month of January and the month of December shows conclusively that instead of an appropriation of $750,000,000 we will be compelled to appropriate, before this year is out, $200,000,000 more, and very probably $400,000,000 more, in order to make good the guaranty which we have given to these railroad companies. That is said without any criticism upon Mr. Hines. I think he is one of the ablest railroad men that ever assumed a vast responsibility of this sort; but if the business of this country is of the volume which I believe it will be, another increase of rates will be absolutely necessary, even if we do no more than to earn the guaranty which we have made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. You say you have such confidence in Mr. Hines, and with my limited knowledge of him and from the testimony he gave before the committee I am impressed with the man's ability, his straightforwardness, and his sincerity. He testified before us, when the question was asked pertaining to the earnings of the railroads, that he believed that from now on there would be a gradual increase in the returns of the railroads. The Senator spoke of the $250,000,000. He knows, and the committee knows, that this tremendous deficit that has rolled up here——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can only yield for a question——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just ask for a moment more.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because I may be taken from the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just wanted to make this observation——

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought the Senator wanted to make a speech.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not want to make a speech; I just wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that from July to January there was retroactive pay to the railroad employees for work they had done amounting to $500,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield; but I hope not for a general argument.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say that I have on my desk now appeals from the largest shipping organizations in my section to support their protest against a change and an increase of their rates pending now, which they regard as unfair and ruinous.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from South Carolina knows perfectly well that these proposals are everywhere throughout the country, of various kinds; and while he may believe, or while he may accept, the view of the Director General that the operation of the roads during the present year will be profitable, that is only his opinion. It is an honest opinion, undoubtedly. Mr. McAdoo came before us when we first began these hearings and said that the loss for the year 1918 would not exceed $136,000,000, and he adhered to it with the greatest pertinacity and with the utmost emphasis; whereas within less than a month after that time he had to come to us and say that the loss would be $155,000,000, and a little while afterwards Mr. Hines appeared, and from his testimony it was shown that the loss was $200,000,000.

I know that they give their views with good faith, but they are attempting to support a situation, and you can not accuse men of bad faith because they are more optimistic with regard to the outcome of the situation than many of the rest of us are. We have lost $200,000,000 this year, as compared with our guaranty, and I predict—mark my words—that as time rolls on, in 1919 we will lose $200,000,000, as compared with our guaranty. I will ask you, if I should not be here, to test the accuracy of my prediction, as compared with the accuracy of the prediction of the Director General.

I come now to the amendment, because we have foreshadowed what was in it, and it looks rather formidable; but it is simply a rewriting of section 10 of the Federal-control act, and it changes section 10 in just three respects. I will read the first part of section 10 only:

> Carriers, while under Federal control, shall be subject to all losses and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control.

So far I make no change whatever. Then come these words, which I beg Senators to notice:

> Or with any order of the President.

In this language we gave the President the power to set aside any Federal law upon the subject, any State law upon the subject, that may relate to the subject, and substitute his own pleasure with regard to the operation of the roads. I objected to that at the time. I do not intend to dwell upon the objections which may be made to that clause; but, however wise it may have been when we passed the law, we were then in the midst of war, and we were willing to give the President every power that the Constitution would enable us to give him in order to successfully prosecute the war. We are not in war now, and there is not a man in the country, intelligent and civilized, who would be willing to give to any Executive in these times the power that is contained in this short clause; and in the rewriting of section 10 I have omitted that clause.

The next change that is made in section 10 is to provide that the Director General shall pay final judgments which are rendered against the railroad companies or against the Director General for loss or damage to property or persons being transported.

Mr. President, I do not want to harrow the feelings of anybody connected with the Railroad Administration; but one of the crying evils disclosed to us in the hearings—which we have not yet completed—is that the Railroad Administration does not pay the claims that are justly chargeable against it for loss or damage to property. Not only has the Director General attempted to declare the jurisdiction of courts and the venue of proceedings for the recovery of damages, but final judgments counted for very little with the Railroad Administration—I speak of it in the past, for I hope it will be better in the future, and I have some reason to think it may be better in the future—final judgments in the past have counted for little with the Federal administration of railroads. I have seen a letter, and I think it was introduced in the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee, in which it is said, substantially, that the Director General will pay only those judgments which have been rendered against the railroad in accordance with this law, or against him in accordance with his own orders substituting himself as defendant for all the railroads, such judgments as he thought were fair and right and which had been rendered in the absence of passion or prejudice. It is an astonishing thing. You would not believe it if you had not confidence in me, but I think you are willing to accept what I say with regard to the disclosures in the testimony. I want the law so amended that when a plaintiff recovers a judgment in a court of competent jurisdiction, when it is a final judgment, the Director General shall pay it, precisely as any honest man would pay a judgment rendered against him and from which there is no appeal.

That is the second point of difference. There is but one more; and I will not read the amendment, but I will ask you to take my word for that, and it will not be controverted, I am sure. The only other change made in the Federal-control act is that the former jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission is restored. That is to say, the Director General may, just as the railroads did before, initiate rates; but we took away from the Interstate Commerce Commission, at the time the law was passed, the authority to suspend those rates or to examine them before they went into effect, and in my amendment I am returning that authority. I want to avoid, if possible, the disturbances in business, the loss that necessarily ensues, when inconsiderate action is taken by persons who, however well disposed toward the public good, neither have the opportunity nor the skill to adjust the railroad rates of the United States. You all know how small a change, how little a discrimination as between kinds of business or between communities, will affect the prosperity of the individual or the community.

I do not know of a man in all this broad country who questions the propriety of an amendment of this character. Mr. President, I submit it with all the confidence I can command, knowing the appeal which has been lodged with you for the restoration of the law as it was before the Federal-control act was passed. I appeal to you to do justice to the people of your country, the millions who have to deal with these railroads every day in the year. Give them some protection. Think of them as well as of the men who are to receive the dividends which are provided for in the appropriation of $750,000,000.

Think of them as well as the bondholders who are to receive the interest from the appropriation we are about to make. They have equal demands upon your consideration. It is no more difficult for stockholders and bondholders to wait than it is for shippers to wait. They are all entitled to calm, careful consideration, and to such relief as the circumstances seem to require.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I submit the motion to suspend the rules so that the amendment which I have submitted to you may be offered as against a point of order.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether the Railroad Administration has evinced any hostility toward curbing their power and reinvesting the Interstate Commerce Commission with the authority which heretofore they have exercised?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not speak for the present Director General. I interrogated the former Director General upon that very point when he was before the committee. He indicated the greatest reluctance toward parting with any portion of the power which had been conferred upon him in the act of 1918.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator another question? Was it not elaborated repeatedly when the Railroad Administration bill was before Congress that it was not intended by any of its provisions and in its administration to deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission of any power it then exercised?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it was said constantly that the Railroad Administration and the Interstate Commerce Commission would be part of one happy, harmonious family; that everything which was necessary to be done in order to bring about the utmost justice would be done, in cooperation with the Interstate Commerce Commission. It happened—and this was stated to us by one of the members of that commission—that when they came to make the raise of rates of which I have spoken the administration did not find it convenient to submit the matter to the supervision or review of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not say that that was done because of any desire to make rates which were not just; but no man shares his authority with another unless he is compelled to do it.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. I am in accord with most of the things the Senator favors; but if we are charging higher rates for both passenger and freight and giving poorer service in the transportation of both passenger and freight than we were under other conditions, if we are losing $20,000,000 a month under these circumstances, and if we are not paying the judgments rendered against the roads by the courts until absolutely compelled to do so, does that not argue that we are paying too much dividends to owners of the railroads?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Arkansas must remember my position with regard to that matter while the bill was under consideration. I thought we agreed to pay $200,000,000 per year more than we should, but we agreed to do it.

Mr. KIRBY. If we adopt this amendment and it results in a reduction of rates and the loss of more money, where are we going to come out?

Mr. CUMMINS. We will come out "at the little end of the horn," to use a familiar expression. But, Mr. President, that is really not before the Senate and is not involved in my motion.

PEACE TERMS WITH GERMANY BEFORE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to take only a moment of the time of the Senate. I wish to offer the resolution which I hold in my hand, a very brief one:

Whereas under the Constitution it is a function of the Senate to advise and consent to, or dissent from, the ratification of any treaty of the United States, and no such treaty can become operative without the consent of the Senate expressed by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Senators present; and

Whereas owing to the victory of the arms of the United States and of the nations with whom it is associated, a peace conference was convened and is now in session at Paris for the purpose of settling the terms of peace; and

Whereas a committee of the conference has proposed a constitution for a league of nations and the proposal is now before the peace conference for its consideration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States in the discharge of its constitutional duty of advice in regard to treaties, That it is the sense of the Senate that while it is their sincere desire that the nations of the world should unite to promote peace and general disarmament, the constitution of the league of nations in the form now proposed to the peace conference should not be accepted by the United States; and be it

Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that the negotiations on the part of the United States should immediately be directed to the utmost expedition of the urgent business of negotiating peace terms with Germany satisfactory to the United States and the nations with whom the United States is associated in the war against the German Government, and that the proposal for a league of nations to insure the permanent peace of the world should be then taken up for careful and serious consideration.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Objection being made, of course I recognize the objection. I merely wish to add, by way of explanation, the following:

The undersigned Senators of the United States, Members and Members elect of the Sixty-sixth Congress, hereby declare that, if they had had the opportunity, they would have voted for the foregoing resolution:

HENRY CABOT LODGE.
PHILANDER C. KNOX.
LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN.
HARRY S. NEW.
GEORGE H. MOSES.
J. W. WADSWORTH, Jr.
BERT M. FERNALD.
ALBERT B. CUMMINS.
F. E. WARREN.
JAMES E. WATSON.
THOMAS STERLING.
J. S. FRELINGHUYSEN.
W. G. HARDING.
FREDERICK HALE.
WILLIAM E. BORAH.
WALTER E. EDGE.
REED SMOOT.
ASLE J. GRONNA.
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.
WILLIAM M. CALDER.
HENRY W. KEYES.
BOIES PENROSE.
CARROLL S. PAGE.
GEORGE P. MCLEAN.
JOSEPH IRWIN FRANCE.
MEDILL MCCORMICK.
CHARLES CURTIS.
LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS.
SELDEN P. SPENCER.
HIRAM W. JOHNSON.
CHARLES E. TOWNSEND.
WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM.
I. L. LENROOT.
MILES POINDEXTER.
HOWARD SUTHERLAND.
TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.
L. HEISLER BALL.

I ought to say in justice to three or four Senators who are absent at great distances from the city that we were not able to reach them; but we expect to hear from them to-morrow, and if, as we expect, their answers are favorable their names will be added to the list.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, when the question arose with reference to taking from the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make rates and to place that authority in the hands of the Railroad Administration, it was urged at that time as a war measure and as a war measure pure and simple. I believed at that time that a very large majority of the Senate and the House of Representatives were unalterably opposed to the idea of taking this authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission and placing it within the control of the Railroad Administration except for the purpose of caring for the necessities brought about by the war. I felt even at that time that the necessities of the occasion did not justify the legislative branch of the Government in taking from the Interstate Commerce Commission this authority and placing the right to initiate rates in the hands of the Railroad Administration.

As was then anticipated and forecasted, that the general public would not have an opportunity of a hearing or the consideration before rates were initiated and even put into force, has come true. Different orders have been made, rates have been applied, not upon a scientific basis ascertained after a careful investigation, and we have seen a raise of 25 per cent as a general increase made throughout the country regardless of a consideration of the conditions in different localities and the conditions surrounding different commodities which were affected by those rates.

In my State the shippers, the boards of trade, and the chambers of commerce have been time and time again disturbed and worried on account of an order going out with reference to rates to be effective in some 10 or 15 days without any opportunity for a hearing. The policy very largely has been to place the rate in force and then let the public have its hearing. Under the old plan and law the Interstate Commerce Commission, when it contemplated any increase of rates, gave the shippers due opportunity to be heard as to the equity and the justice of the increase.

Mr. President, the urgency of the war has now passed. The necessity for centralizing this power so as to allow one man at one fell stroke of his pen to increase the rates 25 per cent or possibly to some other arbitrary rate has, in my opinion, ceased. I believe we should again restore the authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to initiate rates. I believe that once again the shippers of the country should have an opportunity to be heard when a rate increase is contemplated.

For that reason, Mr. President, and feeling that the rates will then be advanced, if they have to be advanced at all, upon a more scientific investigation after the shippers have had ample opportunity to be fully heard, I trust and hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa will be adopted.

The general policy upon the part of the Railroad Administration has been to soar upward and upward in the advancement of rates. We have heard of no adjustment downward of the scale. Very recently the Armour Packing Co., desiring to keep up with the order of the day, asked for the privilege of advancing the rates for refrigerator cars. They proposed to advance the rate from $55 to $76, as an illustration, those being approximately the figures. That matter was brought to the attention of the Railroad Administration. The administration said that on account of an investigation made some 12 years ago they contemplated authorizing this advance upon refrigerator cars. The administration was almost in the act of authorizing the increase, when there came a hue and cry from different sections of the country that such an increase for refrigerator cars was not justified.

I had occasion to make some inquiry as to the proposed advance. The demand was made as to the items constituting the advance. I found that this advance was made to cover, for instance, among other items, $5 a trip for repairs to bunkers. I do not know very much about railroad cars, I do not know very much about refrigeration, but I know that in all reason and common sense refrigerator car bunkers do not suffer $5 damage or anything approximating that amount on one trip. Yet that was one of the items which constituted the total of the increase of about twenty-odd dollars. There were items included in that proposed raise which the Railroad Administration could not explain, and yet the increase was about to be authorized without the shippers having time for a hearing. Upon protest, however, a hearing was granted.

I claim, Mr. President, that the people who are paying the freight are entitled to have a tribunal in which they may go and present their side of the question upon all proposed advances in freight rates. We can only have this course and this remedy extended to the shippers by extending to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to initiate rates.

Mr. President, I do not say there has been a disposition to show bad faith in the handling of the railroads on the part of the Railroad Administration, but I do say, and it is beyond contradiction, that the railroads since they have been placed in the hands of the Railroad Administration have been managed very largely by the former railroad officials of the country. They have been transformed from presidents of railroads or general managers of railroads to directors of the freight and passenger traffic and the various branches of the Railroad Administration. It can not be disputed that the management of the railroads has continued very largely to be in the hands of former railroad officials. They have continued to be very largely in control of men who by their environment, by their previous employment, and sometimes possibly on account of their pecuniary interest in the success of the railroads of this country, are naturally interested in raising rates, are naturally interested in building up the profits of the railroads. Why? So that if the railroads are again turned back into the hands of private ownership they will have advanced to a standard of rates which will give them a greater income and which it will be easier for them to maintain in the future, because they will be able to take refuge behind the argument and the contention that these advances were made while they were under Government control, and therefore they must be just and equitable, upon the theory, of course, that the Government would not do an injustice or inflict any wrong upon the citizens of the country.

I believe we should restore this rate-making authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission, a commission composed of men who are entirely disinterested, men who will hold the scales of justice in even balance both to the shippers and to the railroad interests of the country. I do not say, of course, that the managers of the railroads have not done this; but it is my contention that by environment, by previous employment, and by interest the natural tendency of the railroad officials to-day managing the railroads of this country is to advance rates as much as possible. That question of the increase in the Armour refrigerator-car rates is just an illustration.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be adopted. Being fully impressed that the shippers of the country, the people who are really paying the freight, will be in a better position to have their claims for rate reduction or their claims upon all those rate increases fairly and without prejudice considered, I believe we should restore the authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to initiate rates. This does not involve the question of Government control in a general way. It pertains only to the policy as to whether or not the right to initiate rates, now that the war is over, shall be lodged in the Railroad Administrator or the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I merely want to affirm what was said by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I think that this rate-making authority ought to go back to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think the amendment is well drawn. I shall support it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the most important purpose that should be had in mind now is a speedy disposition of the pending bill. It must pass the Senate very shortly if it is to become a law during the present session. Senators have already stated the necessity for the passage of the measure. I feel it my duty to say that I am opposed to the motion to suspend the rule to make the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa in order, and I am not in favor of putting the amendment on this bill. It would be impossible for me in the time that I feel warranted in taking to present this subject in detail, and I must ask my colleagues to follow me carefully for just a few minutes while I attempt to explain what this amendment means and the effect which it will have upon the operation of the railroads by the Government.

When the United States took over the control and operation of the railroads a state of congestion existed, particularly in the eastern part of the United States, which threatened the efficient conduct of the war. The task that the Government assumed to clear that congestion and transfer rapidly to the seacoast men and munitions necessary to win the war involved many difficulties and delays in the shipments of products which, under private control, would have interfered with the shipment of munitions and troops. I shall not for lack of time attempt to justify the Railroad Administration in all important particulars, but I do want to declare that it has accomplished the one big thing which Congress had in view in providing for Federal control, and it has done that with amazing and gratifying rapidity and efficiency. It is easy to criticize; it is easy to find in the many transactions that have occurred mistakes; but no control that could have been devised, in my judgment, could have enabled our people to escape many of those mistakes.

The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is to impose on the National Government while it is administering the railroads all the limitations and restrictions contained in the act to regulate commerce. I have not time to outline all of those limitations and restrictions, but will refer to some of them.

In the first place, the amendment would require that all proposals to increase rates submitted by the Government should first be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under the Federal-control act the Railroad Administration can initiate rates and put them into effect, and they remain in effect until changed by the commission. The commission now has complete power of review; but if this amendment is adopted, before any increase of rates can go into effect they must first be approved by the commission, which, of course, involves great delay.

Concerning the increases of rates which have been made, permit me to say that, in my judgment, those increases were unavoidable. When you take into consideration the greatly increased cost of material which it was necessary for the Government to purchase in the maintenance and extension of the railroads and in the making of railroad improvements which were considered indispensable to their proper operation and the enormous increase in wages which has been made, you will find that it was absolutely necessary to increase rates.

Much has been said in implied criticism of the increase of wages that has been made, but an investigation of the subject by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate convinced us all that those increases were, in the main, necessary, and that the Government could not reasonably have avoided them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Arkansas has not understood from anything I have said that, in my judgment, there should not have been an increase in rates. I know that an increase of rates was absolutely necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not quoted the Senator from Iowa at all. I have merely referred to the criticisms that have been made by other authorities. I heard what the Senator from Iowa said, and I think the Senator from Iowa will agree with me——

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought the Senator from Arkansas implied that I had said something of that kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am just as conscious that some increase of rates was necessary as is the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am satisfied that the Senator from Iowa also agrees with me that an increase in wages was necessary; in fact, that it was unavoidable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly. I have no doubt about that. I have no doubt that that increase was unavoidable, but I think it was very wise and just.

While I am on my feet I want to correct the statement of the Senator from Arkansas, and I am sure he will agree about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment that I have proposed does not subject the United States to all the provisions of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. ROBINSON. No. Here is the language of the amendment itself, and it is very plain. It provides:

> That during the period of Federal control the right to initiate or change rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices exercised by the carriers now under Federal control, prior to the 29th day of December, 1917, shall hereafter be exercised by the President or by the Director General of Railroads, but such right shall be exercised under all the limitations and conditions which were imposed upon it by the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have as full and complete authority and jurisdiction to set aside, change, modify, suspend, or otherwise review all such rates, fares, charges, classifications, and regulations as though the Government had not assumed the possession and control of said transportation systems.

I have already said that one of the conditions of the act to regulate commerce referred to was to provide that increase in rates should not become effective until approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is another provision to the effect that the Interstate Commerce Commission may suspend tariffs. There is another limitation in the act to regulate commerce which, in my judgment, becomes effective under the language of the Senator's amendment which I have just read, there being nothing that I can see in the amendment to negative this assumption. The act to regulate commerce provides, among other things, that—

At any hearing involving a rate increased after January 1, 1910, or of a rate sought to be increased after the passage of this act, the burden of proof to show that the increased rate or the proposed increased rate is just and reasonable shall be upon the common carrier, and the commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over all other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.

The effect of this amendment, as I have said, is to restore that limitation, among others, so that certainly as to rates hereafter put into effect, and probably as to increases in rates made since Federal control was adopted, the presumption of unreasonableness attaches, and the burden is thrown upon the Government to prove in a hearing when the rate is questioned the reasonableness of the rate, instead of shifting the burden to those who are assailing it. In my judgment, Mr. President, that is a very material matter, and it will devolve upon the Interstate Commerce Commission a very arduous task and throw the whole subject of rates into confusion. I believe that those Senators who have studied this question think that the rates, in so far as they have been initiated, should remain in effect until changed by the commission. The commission has the power to change them now when they are shown to be unreasonable, but the burden of proof is now upon those who are attacking the rates heretofore established. If this amendment is adopted, the burden of proof would be upon the Government not only to show the reasonableness of the rates hereafter prescribed but also the reasonableness of the rates heretofore put into effect and that have been in operation for some time.

Mr. President, there is another limitation in the act to regulate commerce which would be restored by this amendment, and it ought not to be adopted, for the reason that under the act to regulate commerce as to interstate shipments the shipper has the right to route his freight, and intrastate shipments are governed, as I understand, by State laws. Under the Federal control act, without the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, the Railroad Administration has been able to relieve congestion by the routing of freight; but if this condition is restored it will not have that power. In the Federal control act is contained a provision in the following language——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Have the Federal Railroad Administration not also, in connection with their power to control routing, withdrawn substantially all the freight from the shipping lines along the Atlantic coast and carried it over their railroads, although the complaint was made that the railroads were suffering from congestion?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not understand the import of the Senator's question; but I do know that through the right to route shipping, freight that would have gone, for instance, to the port of New York, has been diverted over railway lines to New Orleans; but my opinion is that, in the main, those transactions were necessary to relieve congestion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I meant to suggest was that instead of relieving congestion by their control they had taken transportation away from the coastwise vessels to the interior.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think that the implication contained in the Senator's question is justified. I think that, upon the whole, the privilege in the Federal Railroad Administration to route freight has been a very valuable one, and has been exercised to the benefit of the public generally. I believe that an investigation of the subject would show that to be true, but I have not the time to go into it in great detail.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What the Senator from Georgia had reference to was that the Federal control act gave the Railroad Administration the right to route freight, which otherwise would have gone by water, over the railroads and created a differential in price in order that the coastwise vessels might be relieved from the coastwise trade, in order that they might be engaged in overseas carriage wherever they were competent to do that work. That differential has not yet been taken off, but is subject to the will of the administration, if they so desire.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that is true, and I think the policy justified.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from South Carolina suggests that that was for the purpose of using the coastwise vessels in trans-Atlantic transportation. They did not limit them to that at all. I have one system in view that has been practically wrecked by this interference with their normal business, and yet the vessels continued to be used along the coast.

Mr. ROBINSON. Nevertheless, Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, in my judgment, is accurate, and he correctly defines the purpose of the Railroad Administration in making that class of diversion.

I shall not take time to discuss in detail the effect of this amendment with respect to intrastate rates and shipments, further than to say that it clearly repeals any power in the President, if that power exists, to regulate intrastate shipments or to route shipments of intrastate freight, and that is a very important consideration. It will result in very great confusion, and in a material diminution of the earnings of the railroads.

There is another provision in the Federal control act, which I think is of great importance, which will be eliminated or nullified, in my judgment, by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Under section 10 of the Federal control act it is provided that the President is authorized to—find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation, fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals, other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues.

And requires that—the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

The last paragraph in the pending amendment is as follows:

In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, practices, or regulations, or any changes or proposed changes in the same, the reasonableness thereof, or any discrimination therein, the rule to be applied shall be the same as existed under the said act to regulate commerce, as amended, and under the general law of the subject as it was prior to the Government's possession and control.

That simply means that the rule of evidence which we wrote into the statute for Federal control is repealed by the language which I have just read; and, Mr. President, the rule is a just and proper one. Everyone who had a clear view of the situation when the Government took over the railroads realized that the expenses of railway operations would be very materially increased.

Mr. President, I think it is proper to require that the increased expenses of operation shall be taken into consideration in determining the reasonableness of rates. I do not mean that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not the power now to take them into consideration, but I do mean that the express repeal, or the implied repeal, of that provision might make it questionable whether the commission would feel warranted in doing it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to acquaint the mind of the Senator from Arkansas with the fact that in 1916, I think, the Interstate Commerce Commission explicitly raised the rates in a certain part of the United States solely on account of the increased cost of operation, and everybody agreed that a reasonable rate must provide for increased cost of operation. So I think the last point made by the Senator from Arkansas is hardly tenable.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not made the point or attempted to make the point that the commission could not or would not take into consideration increased expenses of operation as a justification for increased rates. I simply said that the Senator's amendment would repeal the provision of the law authorizing the President to certify the necessity for an increase in rates on that ground and requiring the commission to take it into consideration.

In other words, the commission now has no well-defined rule. I do not want to go into this subject in great detail. The Senator from Iowa, of course, fully understands why. That in itself might consume an entire day. But the commission now can find a reasonable rate upon any evidence that it believes to be just and competent, and it might or it might not take that into consideration, though it probably would do so upon a proper showing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want the Senator from Arkansas to understand that, so far as the certificate of the President or the Director General is concerned, I intend that that shall be repealed. I intend that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall decide the reasonableness of a rate upon the same law and under the same rules that prevailed before the war.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was the way in which I construed the Senator's amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is quite right about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator justifies my construction of it by his statement. I think it would be erroneous and dangerous at this time to repeal that provision.

There is no use, Mr. President, in dodging the issue. Shippers do not pay high freight rates or increases in freight rates with any more pleasure than citizens pay increases in taxes. That is undoubtedly true, and if you left it to a vote of any number of shippers whether freight rates should be increased or diminished it is not difficult to determine how they would vote. They would vote for the diminution in the rates, of course, and it is not to be expected that they would vote for a system that would increase their rates. Nevertheless, in my judgment the condition that existed when the Federal Government took over these railroads not only justified but it made absolutely imperative a large increase in freight rates. If rates had not been increased an astounding deficit would now exist. All here concede that the appropriation for the use of the Railroad Administration should be made. I will not, therefore, waste time to argue that.

Mr. President, I believe that the adoption of this amendment, which undoubtedly is one of great importance, would have the result of tying up this legislation and in all probability of defeating the general deficiency bill, and I shall therefore vote against the motion to suspend the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON. The question arises now on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to suspend the rules?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question. Is the request for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Kendrick	Penrose	Smoot
Calder	King	Pittman	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kirby	Poindexter	Sutherland
Cummins	La Follette	Pollock	Swanson
Curtis	Lenroot	Pomerene	Thomas
Fletcher	Lewis	Ransdell	Thompson
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Reed	Trammell
Gay	Martin, Ky.	Robinson	Underwood
Gerry	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gore	Moses	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gronna	Myers	Sheppard	Warren
Hale	New	Sherman	Watson
Harding	Norris	Shields	Weeks
Henderson	Nugent	Simmons	Wolcott
Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, last Friday there was assembled in the city of Washington a notable authority, known as the Democratic national committee. Following the ancient and approved precedents, a banquet was held. I am speaking to the motion of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to suspend the rules in order to make his amendment possible to the pending bill. Considerable light will be shed on the motion by the proceedings I shall comment on. At this banquet the Chief Executive attended and delivered an address. The address is not accessible in its unexpurgated form. I shall not, therefore, much to my regret, be able to give it in full. I hope later to have a verbatim report, and at some future session of the Senate I will insert it at length in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the benefit of posterity. However, we have from the vigilant members of the press, who usually obtain these things by a sort of second sight or the instinct known only to reporters and womankind, some faint muttering of the proceedings at this banquet.

It appears, Mr. President, that the Chief Executive was in fine fettle. The remarks that percolated beyond the banquet hall and which were accessible to the members of the press appear to have been of a highly fervid and picturesque character. Nothing has leaked out of the Paris peace conference through the censor that has been so applicable to the war situation as the threats made by the Chief Executive.

I now read such information as is obtainable. It is found in the Washington Post of March 2, 1919:

> Nothing serves to emphasize so strikingly the bitter feeling that has been engendered on both sides of the controversy over the league of nations as the address which was made by President Wilson to the members of the Democratic national committee at a luncheon—

I was mistaken. I said it was a banquet, and I stand corrected—> at a luncheon at the White House Friday.

>
> Not until yesterday did the news begin to leak out that the President used violent language in speaking of the opponents of the league. When members of the committee were asked about the President's remarks they at first declined to enter into particulars, several of them saying the President had used language which they did not think he would like to have repeated.
>
> In substance, the President is reported by these informants as declaring that he despised the character of those who are fighting the league of nations, and that he "loathed their pigmy minds." He is reported as having added that he would have to consult a dictionary to adequately express his opinion of these Senators.
>
> In a final outburst of indignation the President is reported as having said that the heads of those who are opposing the league were only fit to serve as "knots to prevent their bodies from unraveling," and that if he had his way he would hang them on a gibbet as high as heaven, but that the gibbet would not be erected in the direction of heaven.
>
> In the same speech the President urged the Democratic national committeemen to hurry back to their States and call meetings of their State committees for the purpose of getting indorsements of the league. He asked them also to do everything in their power to persuade Republican State committees to join them in nonpartisan indorsements.

We have been favored upon many occasions with the nonpartisan indorsements that have been the method by which much legislation should be secured. Therefore, last fall we had it during the greater part of the campaign; and until a late day, say, along in October, the nonpartisan campaign proceeded merrily. On that day it was discovered that there were no persons fit for political salvation save those on the Democratic ticket; whereby hangeth a tale. It slaughtered many of the faithful who were running in doubtful States. I know that my beloved colleague had told many of my constituents, and they were disposed to believe it, that it was a nonpartisan election. The State was 100,000 to 150,000 Republican; but many patriotic partisans thought that it was truly time, in view of the momentous issues presented, to drop their partisanship; and so it seemed to me for a time that the Senate would be favored with another term of my distinguished colleague.

But on the 25th day of October a proclamation went abroad that none but the faithful on the Democratic ticket should be elected. Immediately, Mr. President, a roar of indignation went up from the gentlemen who thought of dropping their partisanship and scratching their ticket. With much profanity and considerable regret for the time they had lost when they did not dwell in the tents of the faithful, they lost no further hours in retracing their steps; and the result in every doubtful or Republican State was a partisan calamity for the administration.

So they are now urged to leave the White House luncheon and return to their respective States and pass resolutions of their own committee, which is proper, but, in addition to that, to proselyte among Republicans. He desired to forage on the enemy. To that I object. I am, I fear, one of the enemy. I do not desire to be a subject of forage myself. I invite the gentlemen to keep inside of their own committees in my own State.

So the nonpartisan scheme to obtain a nonpartisan indorsement of a nonpartisan league of nations, prepared by a nonpartisan conference membership representing this Government, presented and sponsored by a nonpartisan administration, defended by nonpartisans in appointive offices in all the great departments of the Government, supported by a nonpartisan majority in the Senate on the other side of the Chamber, by the nonpartisan majority in the House, at present in control of that organization, and a highly nonpartisan Democratic national committee, all of them believe in a nonpartisan indorsement of this highly necessary document to preserve the peace of the world.

I notice many nonpartisan editorials in newspapers, reaching all the way from Jacksonville, Fla., to El Paso, Tex., and thence onward to the coast, very largely, however, in what is commonly known as the cotton belt. All these editorials are highly nonpartisan. Many of them empty harsh language upon your humble servant without stint. I am, however, Mr. President, so accustomed to it that it does not produce the desired result. I have persevered in my sinful ways and have exhibited but few signs meet for repentance. But it is nonpartisan.

In addition to that, I notice he says that the cerebral cavities of Senators who do not agree with him on the league of nations are nothing but knots to keep their bodies from raveling out. This language is classic. I have no doubt the alumni of Princeton will shriek out with admiration and fall speechless with joy when they read it. He has added another matchless phrase to the many that have enriched our political literature. No doubt it has been cabled to London by this time and the English are going about on Picadilly saying, "What does it mean?" "Don'cher know, it's quite beyond me." I have no objection to be classified that way. I will take my chances on raveling out.

What I regret is that one who has heretofore written many books, who has given us a history of the United States, a philosophic political work known as The State, Congressional Government, The New Freedom, and many others found in the libraries, has used such a raw vernacular about United States Senators. I fear it will not promote that harmony of intercourse between coordinate branches of the Government that ought to prevail. As for the Member of the Senate who now has the floor it will make no difference. I will entertain for him the same sentiment I have for some time. I have no doubt it will be reciprocal.

He intimates that all who differ from him have pigmy minds. Let it be so. It is one of the indications of mental superiority to always regard your antagonists as being deficient in gray matter and reasoning faculties. I remember one time being in a hospital for the demented, and there was not one of them who did not insist that everybody outside was insane and that they were the only sane people there were in the world. One who was a neurotic, suffering from nervous trouble, was walking constantly up and down the hall, and another one sitting at the end of the hall said, "If I was as crazy as that thing I would get out of here." It is a most staggering argument to initiating those who differ from you are lacking in mental capacity.

Pigmy minds? It may be. But we were all elected, who even differed from him, and how we deceived our constituents I can not understand. It is sad to relate that in this year of our Lord, and the few preceding years, many of us escaped and were able to deceive our constituents in November, 1918, and other years, because some of the hardened miscreants designated by the Executive in such terms have been here for some years.

Again, here is his bosom companion. I might regard them as the two Dromios of this especial situation. This is dated San Francisco, February 20, 1919:

SAN FRANCISCO, February 20.

Characterizing as "small Americans" Members of the United States Senate who are opposing the covenant for a league of nations, former President William H. Taft made an especial appeal to-day to the women of the Pacific coast to bring their influence to bear on the Senate in behalf of ratification of the league. Mr. Taft spoke at a luncheon given him by the San Francisco Center, a woman's organization.

Somehow I notice that these distinguished gentlemen are always the heroes at some luncheon. They never go upon the platform above a beer hall in some metropolitan center and expound theories of Government, but it is either at a pink tea or at a luncheon. These luncheon statesmen, Mr. President, will after a while be in a distinct class by themselves. They will probably be known as the male luncheonettes.

Day before yesterday, Mr. President, I had a letter from a constituent living at Glencoe, Ill. Glencoe is a suburb of Chicago. It is filled largely with commuters, gentlemen who chase their gay lives away getting through the gates in the morning and catching the train at night. He was very indignant at my behavior. I receive the usual number of letters of that character. I am somewhat hardened, as I have been criticized for 20 or 25 years both by Chicago newspapers and by the down country press some of the time and by some of my constituents all the time. But this one was particularly indignant, and said that I was headed for destruction, and that my time, indeed, was short, not more than a few days after I reached home; in fact, I would be waited on by many indignant delegations that would in some way cause me to see the error of my ways, even if violence were needed as a moral agent to effect a reform in my understanding. He signed his name as H. E. Nutt. I rarely answer such letters, but in this instance I acknowledged it—the opportunity might never come again—thanking him for his information and saying, "You appear to have the right name." His letter indicated he was a "he-nut" to the most casual observer. The language of the other two gentlemen will enable the public to classify them:

"Certain small Americans on the floor of the United States Senate profess to see dire danger and eventual disaster to the country if we enter the league of nations agreed upon at the Paris peace table," said Mr. Taft.

"I do not use the term 'small Americans' in an invidious sense, but to imply that these gentlemen have a small view of America; the provincial, selfish view that the highest duty of America is to preserve a safe, comfortable, luxurious prosperity for our own people, beyond which we have no other responsibility toward the rest of the world.

"While the statesmen and peoples of the entire world are unanimous in the certain belief that unless the machinery of such a league is set in motion war more terrible and far-reaching than the one which we have just endured will sweep the world in 10 or 20 years, the only discord in the concert is heard in the voice of 'small America' from certain small-visioned men, who have been elevated to the United States Senate."

I consign the ex-President referred to to the kindly ministrations of my friend, Richard Ashkum, at Swan Creek, Ill., who wrote me a letter, which I incorporated a few days ago in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I regret more than I can express with my limited power of expression the indignation that is aroused on the part of certain Senators. I would not wound their delicate sensibilities for anything in the world. But I did want the philosophy of my friend Ashkum preserved in some permanent form. An apology, or explanation, I believe, was incorporated in the RECORD by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in which the ex-President took occasion to deny the original report attributed to him by the newspaper accounts and gave an explanation. I read the explanation. I have meditated on it. I have arrived at the deliberate conclusion that the explanation is worse than the original charge. So I will adhere to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and will not ask to have the letter stricken from the RECORD.

The ex-President of the United States was a very learned, a very good judge. He was the head of a department or two in his time. He had considerable departmental experience. His decrees and judgments in both the chancery and the law side of the courts wherein he presided indicate a judicial mind and an exceedingly clear understanding of the issues presented. But in a fatal moment he left the bench to engage in the hurly-burly of politics. He was nominated in 1908 by his friend—I say advisedly his friend, not by his friends—but by his friend. He served one term which he got. He ran for another he did not get. While serving as President he demonstrated that he knew no more of practical politics and Government in the Executive office or in congressional matters than the veriest tyro in this country. He left his party in ruins. To him more than any other man in the United States is attributed the disaster of 1912. No wonder this correspondent of mine said he preferred not to take his political advice. I do not. I can not think of anybody whose advice I would not take on a matter of politics quicker than his. I would take the advice of any honest Democrat, and that includes every one of them in the Senate. I would go to him privately and ask his judgment on a political question of my own party affairs, and I would rather have his judgment than Taft's. I would rather take the judgment of one of these pages who has been about here for a while on practical affairs relating to political controversies or issues. Still he is telling us what to do. I decline to be governed by his suggestions.

Why on earth should I take the advice of an ex-President when I will not take the advice of a real one?

I understand that there will be no special session called, regardless of what we do. So I feel entirely absolved from responsibility. There will be a vacation, whatever we do with these bills. I know there is a difference of opinion on both sides as to what we ought to do. I respect the opinions of both majority and minority Senators who may differ from me, but so long as there will be no special session, anyway, let us save the money. There never was a time when we needed to do so any worse. It is a small sum comparatively—only two or three billion dollars—let us save it, anyway. The interest on that is worth while. If I had two or three billion dollars and was out fishing and I had it with me, I would always want to be in the end of the boat that sank last, so that I might get the interest on it just ahead of the other fellow. It would amount to a good deal, even in a short time.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am not taking very seriously the great calamities that are supposed to be wrapped up in what we do or do not do between the hour of 1.20 to-night and 12 o'clock of to-day.

If I felt there were any grave questions involved and bankruptcy, war, famine, pestilence, and various other pests, I would not be addressing the Senate in this mood. The court jester, the King's fool, 4,000 years ago was asked by the King one bright spring morning up the Nile what made him take up the profession of jester. "You make people laugh and rather develop the giddy side of their nature." He said, "I much prefer to make people laugh than to make them cry. Gloom depresses and laughter exhilarates them." We are in that mood to-night. Let us be the King's fool a while, because while the King has certainly come home again, his stay is brief, and, indeed, Mr. President, we make holiday to-night "to see Cæsar and rejoice in his triumph." If we can not cure our troubles, let us minimize them by laughing at them. Very long ago I would have been in my grave could I not have seen the ridiculous side of things and laughed once in a while. I have laughed the way through cloudy times and some very lowering disasters that come to all of us after we live about so long.

I therefore, Mr. President, to-night, whatever may be passed between now and 12 o'clock to-day, refuse to take a very serious view of the questions or of the situation. A few days ago we were told that if the bond issue or certificate bill was not passed every bank in the country would be bankrupted. To-day we are told that the railroads will be bankrupted if we do not pass this bill containing the $750,000,000. If the session lasts until noon, as I anticipate it will, there will be some fresh calamity discovered to horrify our sensibilities, disasters swarm on every hand. I presume it will be the great life insurance companies and the fire insurance companies that will next be represented as having many securities liable to depreciation locked up in their strong boxes, and if we do not pass this or some other bill bankruptcy will be their certain portion.

Everything requires an appropriation. Everybody nearly is in the same frame of mind as the old soldier of the Civil War was in when he was running for coroner in my county at one time. He had but one speech, and it was this: "I am always in favor of the Old Flag and of liberal appropriations." That goes, of course; that is our platform here. Everybody is shouting "Old Glory" and billions piled upon billions.

Pay days will come some of these times, and they will come rapidly. There is not anything that speeds up the passage of old Father Time like having a debt falling due. When I sign a note at the bank payable six months after date—if they will trust me that long—it is amazing to see how the sands in the glass run down. In a very little while the six months are gone. A dun comes promptly, and one is surprised to think how time flies when it is headed toward pay day.

We have literally billions waiting for pay day; and pay day will arrive with proportionately lightning speed. When pay day does come, we may rest assured—we of the pigmy minds, we whose cerebral cavities, in the classic language coming from the hallowed shades of Princeton, are nothing but knots to keep us from raveling out—we can console ourselves by knowing that the Executive in this press report said we would be hanged, and in the direction which the orthodox Universalists says, there is no such place. So when pay day does come possibly we of the kind described will be no more. The execution will have taken place, because by midsummer he hopes to be back, and the punishment will be forthcoming.

Mr. President, the other day I referred, and so did the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], to the condition under which this discussion was carried on; that the espionage law was in force; that criticisms to the average person were full of hazard. A state of war still exists. No man can utter a criticism as he candidly believes it outside of this Chamber or of the other House without danger of being charged with a violation of that law. Petty officials are racing about over the country burning with restless zeal to arrest somebody.

There are two items in this bill which possibly ought to be increased. They are for the transportation and expenses of conducting prisoners to Fort Leavenworth, the Federal Penitentiary. They ought to be increased or the espionage law ought to be repealed.

There is no freedom of speech among the general public. The press publishes its news with great circumspection. Free speech and a free press are almost unknown in this country at the present time.

You remember the very pointed denials made last December when the peace conference and the newspaper men took passage for France. It was said that there was no contemplated censorship of the press; that there would be an open report of news, of everything that connected itself with the transactions of the conference. Here are a few paragraphs, Mr. President, of an article by Henry M. Hyde, under date line of London, February 26, 1918. Mr. Hyde is a well-known newspaper man in this country. He was sent abroad on this mission. He is known to most Senators here. He is my neighbor in Chicago. In these paragraphs he says:

The Paris dispatch to which the editorial refers says:

"It has more than once been pointed out that, owing to the strict censorship exercised over the news from America at the President's request, we have been insufficiently informed as to the trend of public opinion in the United States.

"This lack of news undoubtedly has had the effect of facilitating the acceptance of the league proposals as presented here by the American delegation. But the time has come when the course of opinion on the other side of the Atlantic must be taken into consideration in view of the imminent meeting of the newly constituted Congress, and the arrival of responsible men in Paris who are intimately acquainted with the actual political position in the United States has thrown a new light upon the situation.

MAY REFUSE A MANDATE.

"It is not seriously questioned that the principle of the league of nations commends itself to America, but between that and a mandate empowering President Wilson to commit the United States to the full submission to the league is a long step.

"But the more important matter is that the United States—and this is a question on which there is likely to be as much Democratic as Republican opposition—will certainly not give a mandate to President Wilson involving not merely the alteration of the Constitution but also American consent to act on the instructions of a league of nations without knowing the exact extent to which she might thereby be committed to a policy distasteful to her judgment and even affecting her sovereignty.

"Now, it is clear that the President is not and can not for a long time be in a position to define the new responsibilities incurred by the United States equally with every other member of the league of nations. Until such definite information has been received and considered no mandate empowering President Wilson to incorporate America in a league can or will be given. Briefly stated that is the position."

This is the editorial expression of a French newspaper published at the capital of that country. It indicates from first-hand information evidently that the President has in fact ordered a censorship of news coming from the conference to this country. It can be seen well enough why it is that both the cables and the telegraphs were sought to be put under Government control and kept there without a shadow of pretext that they were needed for war purposes.

While we are interested in appropriations of this character connected with the railroads, it might be well, in the short time which I devote to this motion to suspend the rules, to refer to a difficulty which we may face with our British cousins before we have fully settled all the details of the league. Here is the annual publication of the London Stock Exchange containing a statement of the loans repudiated by various States of the Union. I do not know why the sturdy Briton does this; at best it is a painful reminiscence; but probably following the habit that when we put any money in anything we cling to the notion that at some time we shall get that money out of the same place it went in. I have the 1916 list. It includes the States of Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, and West Virginia. In each instance the amount ranges from $6,000,000 to $15,000,000. The total of the repudiated loans and listed bonds in the annual report of 1916 is about $75,000,000 in round figures.

That of West Virginia was incident to the readjustment and the State formative period. Whether they have been settled since 1916, I do not know. Those of the other States named are incident to the reconstruction period, or what my friends sometimes call the carpetbag era, in their respective States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there has been no repudiation in West Virginia. There has been a question of debt there on certain bonds. That question is now being settled; and a resolution has been passed by the legislature providing that this debt shall be paid according to the judgment of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suspected, Mr. President, that this series of bonds were those referred to in a late decision of the Supreme Court, and that, as I said, they grow out of the readjustment period, relating to the time when West Virginia was created into a State during the Civil War period.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is correct.

Mr. SHERMAN. The time these bonds went without matured interest being paid was when a controversy existed that had not been settled up to the time of the decision referred to on the liability of West Virginia for a share of the interest to be apportioned or adjusted, part of it going to the old State and part of it to the new. The others were incident to periods of improvement, so called, during the carpetbag eras, in which the money, it is claimed, was largely misspent or squandered.

I know that some authorities will say that there was no repudiation; that these bonds fell into the hands of purchasers at a reduced price. Morally, I am not undertaking either to affirm or to deny. I am only stating that in the London Stock Exchange annual list these bonds appear listed as unpaid, and they are commonly known in England as being repudiated obligations.

These securities were issued all the way from 40 to 60 years ago. Principal and interest are unpaid. I am going to make a suggestion. It may be offensive, but I shall be compelled to take whatever criticism comes, even at the risk of being threatened with various forms of corporal or capital punishment. Many of my fellow Senators here are in the same catalogue; and so we will be a merry lot of rogues and enjoy ourselves while we can. But I respectfully suggest that before the peace league negotiations are over we attach an amendment to the constitution of the league, in whatever form it finally assumes, something as follows. I do this in view of the fact that the Constitution and all of its amendments are of but little concern; that their powers are being gradually dissolved; that the Constitution has become an obsolete document by construction; that by the operation of war profits in the hands of other departments of the Government its great powers are being gradually dissolved and forgotten. I think the following section ought to be added to the constitution of the peace league before it is ratified by this body, whether it is the present peace league or some substitute for it:

Provided, That no part of the public revenues of the United States provided for herein, or by any existing or future law, shall ever be appropriated or used in any manner directly or indirectly to pay either principal or interest of any obligation, security, or promise of the Confederate States of America, or any of the States thereof, issued or created in aid of the War of the Rebellion, held or owned by any foreign government, or held or owned by any citizen or subject of such foreign government, nor shall any such obligation, security, or promise ever be deducted, allowed or set off against any war loan made by the Government of the United States to any such foreign government or governments.

There is a large issue of those bonds held by our British neighbors. They are locked up in various strong boxes in England. The securities cost them, possibly not face, but some good currency or gold. They have never wholly given over the idea that some time, in the mutations of government, in the rise and fall of political parties, in the kaleidoscope of human affairs, there will come the time when these securities will be paid. Now is the universal era of human brotherhood, when everything will be forgotten, when the glad hand will be extended from nation to nation, and especially with our allies, when the few paltry billions that we have loaned them will be a mere circumstance; and when pay day comes for them it will be respectfully suggested that these securities, which were the result of political controversy—unfortunately resulting in war, it is true—ought to be, in promotion of this universal brotherhood, set off and allowed against the loans that we have advanced them in the late struggle.

Mr. President, I have addressed my remarks exclusively to the motion made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to suspend the rules on his amendment. When section 7, on the $750,000,000 appropriation for the relief of the railways, is reached in the reading, I have some very pertinent comments which I desire to submit on that subject. I will yield the floor at the present time, deferring my remarks on that matter until the section is reached.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the pending bill——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Kellogg	Overman	Spencer
Calder	Kendrick	Owen	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Page	Sutherland
Cummins	King	Penrose	Swanson
Curtis	Kirby	Pittman	Thomas
Fletcher	Knox	Poindexter	Thompson
France	La Follette	Pollock	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Pomerene	Underwood
Gay	Lewis	Reed	Vardaman
Gerry	McCumber	Robinson	Wadsworth
Gore	McKellar	Saulsbury	Warren
Gronna	McNary	Shafroth	Watson
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Weeks
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Wolcott
Henderson	Moses	Shields
Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senate met in session this morning at 10 o'clock. It is now 2 o'clock of the morning of the 4th of March. We have been in session for 14 long hours, valuable hours, precious hours. We have accomplished nothing except to discuss matters which are not before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest that the announcement of the roll call be made.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood that it had been made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it has been made, I have the floor, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Colorado that he thought the Senator from Wisconsin had yielded the floor to him.

Mr. THOMAS. I was not aware that he had the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know my friend from Colorado was unaware of it. I propose to speak on this bill, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I do not wish to interfere with the Senator if he has the floor, but I want to say something upon the general subject as soon as I can get the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the pending bill carries an appropriation of $842,000,000.

It was first brought before the Senate for consideration about 5 o'clock last evening.

It is now 2 o'clock in the morning. The life of this Congress expires under the Constitution at 12 o'clock noon this 4th day of March.

What, sir, is the condition of the legislative business of this Congress?

Eight great appropriation bills, aggregating $3,627,000,761 of appropriations, are awaiting the action of this body.

Back of these appropriation bills are conference reports on the coal and oil bill and the water-power bill. Wrapped up within the carefully drawn provisions of those two measures there will be found the means to achieve the private control and ultimately the private ownership of the coal and oil and phosphate and other mineral lands now belonging to the people, and likewise the water powers remaining upon the public domain.

And upon the calendars and in the hands of committees are hundreds of measures of great importance to the well-being and happiness of the American people, and it may be that some of these neglected and delayed measures are even necessary to the peace and good order of society.

TIME FOR CONGRESS TO REBEL AGAINST ATTEMPTS TO COERCE IT.

Yet for some mysterious reason known only to the President and to the congressional "steering committees" the vital business of the session has been held back until the closing hours of the Congress, when intelligent consideration of these important bills is impossible. And it is proposed to jam these great measures through immediately because there is no time for questions and explanations, for analysis and argument. No opportunity is allowed to examine the bills with any care. If amendments are offered, the merits are not even considered for a moment, but these proposed changes, no matter how desirable, are met with the statement that a Senate amendment requiring the return of a bill to the other House for its consideration would so delay the measure that it must fail. Hence no amendments can now be entertained, and bills must be forced through regardless of right or wrong.

And certain Senators, assuming to speak with the authority of masters, arrogantly criticize their peers upon this floor because they refuse to approve this system of legislation which in recent years has come to disgrace the close of every Congress.

Sir, it is high time for Senators to rebel against any power, whether it comes directly from the Executive or from a congressional "steering committee," which attempts to coerce Senators into playing the shameful part of automatons and blindly voting measures through, imposing hundreds of millions of taxes upon the people without the opportunity to consider, discuss, and amend such measures, or to know, in fact, the true meaning and significance of their provisions.

But a few hours ago we passed a bond bill authorizing an indebtedness of $7,000,000,000. Never before was a bill passed providing for borrowing money by selling the obligations of this Government in which Congress did not by the terms of the bill fix the rate of interest and determine whether the bonds or other securities should be taxed in the hands of the holders or freed in whole or in part from taxation.

SENATORS ARE NOT FRIGHTENED BY CRY OF "PANIC."

But this $7,000,000,000 bond bill delegates or assumes to delegate to a department official the authority of Congress to say what rate of interest the securities issued shall draw and to determine whether they shall be taxed or go tax free.

And when Senators protest that such legislation is of doubtful constitutionality; that it is an unheard-of proposition, wholly without precedent; that it is wrong in principle and dangerous in practice to delegate such vast power to any department official not elected by and not directly responsible to the people for his acts—when Senators suggest that we should amend the bill to make it conform strictly to the terms of the Constitution and all the legislative precedents, and protest against giving to any department official power to make interest rates and tax-free provisions on bonds or other Government securities to suit the selfish demands of the bankers—then we are told that it is too late to amend this bill; that to amend it now would so delay it that it could not be passed before the hour fixed by the Constitution when this Congress expires.

And then with long-drawn faces Senators solemnly warn us that unless we swallow our scruples and pass billion dollar bond bills and billion dollar appropriation bills just as they are framed up and handed to us at the eleventh hour of the session, we must take the awful responsibility of causing a "panic with all the disaster and suffering which will follow in its wake."

There may be places where such talk would alarm and mislead but it is stale and serves no good purpose here.

There are some Senators on this floor who will no longer submit to being bullied either by the Executive or his "congressional steering committee."

You can neither frighten Senators nor befool the American people with your cry of panic, panic!

You say in effect: Accept these bills, however bad you believe them, pass them just as we place them before you, or upon you shall rest the responsibility for their failure, at high noon March 4, and you shall be held to answer for the business ruin that will follow their defeat.

RESPONSIBILITY IS ON THE PRESIDENT.

I answer: You shall no longer hold back measures of such importance till the last hours of the session and then demand their passage without such consideration as their importance justifies and without the time necessary to amend and perfect them. When you venture on that course, upon you rests the responsibility if they fail to pass.

I answer further: If any measure of vital importance fails because it can not be properly considered and wisely perfected before this Congress adjourns, then by a stroke of the pen President Wilson can convene the new Congress to meet one minute after the life of this Congress expires at 12 o'clock noon on this the 4th day of March.

Bad measures betraying the interests of the American people, and badly drawn bills dealing with necessary subjects of legislation are, neither the one nor the other, to be jammed through at the last minute, carrying with them a brood of evil consequences.

And, Senators, I for one, at least, will not be silenced in my opposition to such measures and such practices under the threat that I will have to bear the responsibility in whole or in part for the "frightful panic" that will follow because such bills fail.

The threat is idle and foolish. It presumes upon the ignorance of the people. They well understand that if any legislation fails which is necessary to the stability of business, then it is within the power and it is the duty of the President to reconvene Congress at once, when it can have time to properly consider, perfect, and pass all needful measures.

Our Constitution wisely provides for calling Congress to meet in extra session whenever there is important work for the Congress to do.

NEED FOR AN EXTRA SESSION IMMEDIATELY.

Every schoolboy in America knows that the present is a most serious time in the life of this Nation.

We are just emerging from a great war, which imposes upon us problems and responsibilities the most momentous in human experience.

It is no time for shrinking or shirking. Every man must meet his responsibilities. This war has smashed the calendar, played havoc with economic theories and the measured processes of evolution. The slow-moving Old World, in the agony and violence of war, has brought forth new issues a century before they might otherwise have been born in the fullness of time.

These issues, these problems demand an answer now. They press for solution with increasing weight every hour. This is doubly so because men and women are everywhere idle in increasing numbers.

What answer are we to make to these great questions in this great hour?

Upon the wise and just solution of these grave problems may hang the peace and prosperity and happiness of the American people for a generation of time.

Mr. President, there is work for us to do, and the Congress is ready and anxious to remain here and do that work. But the life of this Congress expires at noon on this day. The President has the power to convene the new Congress.

The parliaments—the congresses of every important nation on the face of this earth—are at work and will continue at work upon the problems which the war thrust upon them. They are taking care of unemployment. They are effecting industrial reorganization. They are legislating upon social issues. They are meeting the responsibilities that go with and follow demobilization. They are pushing, planning, and legislating to gather in the trade of the world.

Again, sir, I say that the American Congress should be convened in extra session immediately following adjournment at 12 o'clock to-day.

The condition of our country calls for an immediate session of our Congress. The events now transpiring in the world urge it upon us as a necessity.

Hence I maintain that at this very hour there is presented—within the meaning, the precise meaning, of the Constitution—an "occasion," an "extraordinary occasion," calling for the convening of both Houses of Congress by the President of the United States.

The language of the Constitution is clear. It reads:

> The President * * * may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses or either of them.

The mandate of the Constitution is clear and unmistakable. As plain as language can do it the duty is laid upon the President of convening both Houses or either House of the Congress in session upon any extraordinary occasion when the public interest requires it.

Will anyone dispute, sir, that the "extraordinary occasion" contemplated by the Constitution exists at this very moment? What, sir, is the condition of the country to-day? It is a condition the most extraordinary, the most disquieting, the most dangerous to the welfare and peace of the people, that has existed since the Civil War. It is a time for every official to be at his post of duty in this country, and to be vigilantly discharging those duties.

SENATE MUST ADVISE IN MAKING TREATIES.

In the first place we are technically at war, since no treaty of peace has been concluded with our enemy, but in reality we are not at war with any of the powers against whom we declared war. Our enemy has surrendered. Our heel is upon his neck. He is at our mercy. Our troops march freely through his land without opposition. The armies of the countries against whom we declared war have laid down their arms.

Their navies have surrendered. Their former rulers are fugitives and in exile. In short, there is not one act which a victorious country may inflict upon a vanquished nation that we may not inflict upon our late enemies in this war. Under these circumstances, sir, the most immediate concern of this country is the making of a treaty of peace.

What, sir, has the Senate to do with making a treaty of peace? Does the Constitution lodge with this body any power in making a treaty? Has it any duty to perform other than to consent to, or refuse to consent to, a treaty after it shall have been submitted to it by the President?

The Constitution provides:

> That the President * * * shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

Note well the language of the Constitution. The President can only make the treaty with the "consent" of the Senate, but that is not all. He can only negotiate a treaty; that is, conduct the preliminary negotiations which lead up to putting the treaty in final form "by and with the advice of the Senate." No language can be plainer than that. It is idle to say that the Constitution means that the Senate should advise with the President after the treaty had been put in the final form for signatures.

That is not the meaning of the language of the Constitution. Its plain terms deny any such construction. If that was the meaning of the Constitution, then the "by and with the advice of the Senate" would have been left out, and it would have simply stood that the President could make a treaty with the consent of the Senate. Even that language would have been sufficient to require a cautious President who desired to consult the country's welfare, and not merely his own will, to confer with the Senate during the negotiation of a treaty, lest the Senate at the last moment might withhold its consent from a treaty which it had no part in framing.

But the framers of the Constitution wisely did not leave the matter there. It makes the "advice" of the Senate just as much a necessary part of the preparation of the treaty as it makes the "consent" of the Senate necessary to its final execution. No language could be plainer.

SENATE MUST BE IN SESSION TO ADVISE.

Sir, it is a matter of common knowledge that in a few days the President will leave for Europe to take up in behalf of the United States the making of the most important treaty ever negotiated in this world, a treaty which transcends infinitely in importance any other to which this great Nation was ever party. I say, sir, that if the President of the United States should so far forget his duties under the Constitution, should so far forget his oath of office which the Constitution itself prescribes, and in which he swore to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution," and go to Europe and conduct the negotiations there leading up to the consummation of the peace treaty without "the advice of the Senate," it would be a violation of the Constitution. The only way that the spirit and letter of the Constitution can be carried out is by immediately convening the Senate in session, so that it may from time to time give the President the advice contemplated by the Constitution as the peace negotiations go forward.

I wish to suggest to Senators on the other side that pursuing any other course may ultimately put this country and the President into a very serious and embarrassing situation.

Consider with me another provision in the section of the Constitution from which I have just read.

The Constitution provides that not only shall the Senate consent to any treaty before it becomes effective, not only that it shall advise the President through the negotiations leading up to the completion of the draft of the treaty, but so careful is the Constitution of the Senate's powers in the premises that it provides that "two-thirds of the Senators present shall concur" in the treaty.

FACING A SERIOUS SITUATION.

There are very few acts of the Senate which the Constitution requires shall be by a vote of two-thirds of the Members present. It requires a two-thirds vote of the Members present to convict on trials for impeachment, but the cases are very rare where anything more than a majority vote is required in the Senate, so that the language I have just read requiring two-thirds of the Senators present to concur in a treaty is doubly significant.

Think, sir, for a moment the position this country would be in if the President should go to Europe, cut himself off from the advice of the Senate, and negotiate a treaty which, upon being submitted to the Senate and subjected to debate, should prove wholly unacceptable to two-thirds of the Senators. We know the treaty which is going to be made will involve many nations. It is going to involve questions which vitally affect practically every portion of the civilized globe, if we may judge by the expressions of the President upon the subject. If the Senate refuses to ratify the treaty, which it will do if two-thirds of its Members do not concur in it, the state of war will continue for months. Our troops will doubtless remain abroad, our industries and our civil life continue to be unsettled at home for many additional months, while the negotiations for a treaty are all taken up anew.

I am assuming now that two-thirds of the Senate do not consent to the treaty as reported by the President. Sir, except for some of our experiences with the present Executive, it would be unthinkable that any President would be guilty of so offending against the Constitution as to shut himself off from the advice of the Senate while the negotiations for the treaty are going forward. Sir, what would be said of a President who, while in Europe conducting negotiations for this treaty, deliberately refused, if the Senate were in session, to receive communication and advice from the Senate concerning those negotiations? Would there be any doubt in anyone's mind that there was only one answer to make to such an abuse of power by the Executive? Yet, sir, how would such conduct differ in effect from that by which the Executive just as effectively stops his ears and closes his mind to the advice of the Senate by refusing to convene that body in session while a treaty is in the making?

WOODROW WILSON'S VIEW OF PRESIDENT'S POWER.

Mr. President, prior to his becoming a candidate for Governor of New Jersey, Woodrow Wilson was known among those who were at all familiar with anything he had written as a pronounced reactionary. However, a short time before he essayed to enter politics he announced a radical change in views and became a very ardent advocate of liberal, progressive democracy.

But President Wilson in 1918 is no longer the "forward-looking" progressive he appeared to be as Governor of New Jersey and in his first years as President. That interesting period seems to have been mainly a rhetorical excursion, in which the highest achievements are recorded in "The New Freedom" and his essays on "Making the world safe for democracy."

As he has progressed backward in these later years he presents what might be called a typical case of atavistic reversion.

For example, as to the treaty-making power President Wilson now reverts to the uniquely autocratic views of Woodrow Wilson of 1908. His opinions upon those powers as set forth in 1908 have no counterpart, in so far as I am informed, in all the literature on that important provision of the Constitution.

He is the first of all our Presidents to question the constitutional duty of the President to advise and counsel with the Senate in the making of a treaty. Nay, more than that, he asserts that the President has the autocratic power to coerce the Senate into concurring in a treaty to which it may even be opposed.

From his book on "Constitutional Government in the United States," first published in 1908 and reprinted as late as December, 1917, I quote the following:

> One of the greatest of the President's powers I have not yet spoken of at all—his control, which is very absolute, of the foreign relations of the Nation. The initiative in foreign affairs, which the President possesses without any restriction whatever, is virtually the power to control them absolutely. The President can not conclude a treaty with a foreign power without the consent of the Senate, but he may guide every step of diplomacy, and to guide diplomacy is to determine what treaties must be made if the faith and prestige of the Government are to be maintained. He need disclose no step of negotiation until it is complete, and when in any critical manner it is completed the Government is virtually committed. Whatever its disinclination, the Senate may feel itself committed also.

This statement was of little importance at the time it first appeared in a small edition of classroom lectures to his college students. Its author, Mr. Wilson, was a gentleman who had failed as a lawyer and had become a college professor of "jurisprudence and politics." His views upon this subject at that time (1908) would not specially have concerned anyone except for the artful, circumventing standards of political ethics, which this quotation evidences.

It is quite another matter now. By the accident of political fortune Mr. Wilson, the author of the foregoing paragraph quoted, is now President Wilson.

We are now undertaking to make the most important treaty ever negotiated in this world. It transcends infinitely in importance any other to which this Nation was a party.

And President Wilson, having properly taken the initiative in opening communications with the representatives of other nations, and thus being rightfully in control of the situation up to that point, can now, by the Machiavelian method suggested by Woodrow Wilson in 1908, usurp sole and exclusive power and, as he says, "so guide every step of diplomacy" as to himself decide and "determine what treaty must be made if the faith and prestige of the Government are to be maintained."

But this is not enough. He carries it to the monstrous conclusion that the President "need disclose no step of negotiation until it is completed, and, when in any critical matter it is completed, the Government is virtually committed. Whatever its disinclination, the Senate may feel itself committed also."

And that is exactly what he is doing.

In so doing, President Wilson is guilty of a willful disregard of his constitutional obligations and the honorable precedents of other Presidents.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. In view of that very peculiar expression as to the function of the Senate, what does the Senate's jurisdiction amount to, according to the President's view?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is plainly wiped out and utterly destroyed; it is absolutely worth nothing. Mr. Wilson's autocratic view of Executive power asserted in this paragraph simply means that the President could so conduct the negotiations that the Senate, by the time it received the completed treaty, would be so absolutely committed to its terms that it can not, without dishonor to the Nation, do other than accept them, however obnoxious those terms may be to it; or, to use Mr. Wilson's words, "whatever its disinclination."

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senate were to accept anything presented to it, it would seem that its power is nothing, according to the President's view.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That view of the Constitution is an absolute nullification; it is a denial of the provision that a treaty shall be "made by and with the advice" and consummated with the consent of the Senate. That is the declaration of Woodrow Wilson as late as 1917.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the President has changed his mind many times since 1917.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator from New Hampshire find in the present attitude of the President of the United States with respect to the extra session while he is negotiating treaties abroad anything to warrant the view that he has changed his mind with respect to this paragraph which I have just read from his work on constitutional government?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no. I will say to the Senator that the President has probably by this time completed the circle and is back where he started from.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I think the President will discover when he presents the instrument, or treaty, to the Senate that there is a strong, patriotic, and virile Senate here that intends to assert its prerogatives under the Constitution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If this constitutional government is to live, if we are to preserve a democracy in this country, if we are to prevent the building up of an autocracy, where one man is to rule and have dominion over the destinies of 100,000,000 people, then it is time for the people of the United States and for Senators of the United States, representing the people of the United States, to assert themselves and, if possible, to preserve the Government just at is was builded for us in the beginning.

The Congress of the United States was designed to be a coordinate branch of the Government, to exercise the powers assigned to it by the Constitution, coequal and coextensive with those of the Executive. If we have fallen upon times where the Congress of the United States, subservient and slavish, surrenders the authority and the responsibility committed to it by the Constitution, it is the beginning of the end of that government designed for us by our fathers.

Again, in the same book, on page 74, Woodrow Wilson in 1911 set down in cold type his conception of the office of President of the United States in the following language:

> The framers of the Constitution made in our President a more powerful, because a more isolated, king than the one they were imitating—

To wit, the English King.

I do not accept these expressions as a correct interpretation of the Constitution. I do not believe that the framers of our Constitution made our President an imitation of the King of England, whose exercise of power at that time was notorious and was the primary cause which led to the American Revolution. The language of the treaty-making powers of the President is equally important as an interpretation of the Constitution.

The President, of course, is not a practical lawyer. He is a sort of academic lawyer, I take it. I believe he studied law and received a degree. I think he practiced a little while and gave it up as a failure. But, sir, in the grave business in which he is now engaged let us hope he will follow the plain language of the Constitution, which requires him to conduct the negotiations leading up to a treaty by and with the advice of the Senate, at every step in those negotiations. That is what the Constitution means, if it means anything.

WHAT THE AUTOCRATS OF EUROPE DID.

If President Wilson, in view of the extraordinary occasion which exists, should refuse to call an extra session of Congress, he would be placing himself in the position of those European autocrats who throughout the war used their power of prorogation to prevent any measure of real parliamentary government in their countries.

The Emperor Francis Joseph prorogued the Austrian Reichsrath at the beginning of the war and never called it in session again.

I undertake to say that the bolshevism that to-day threatens to submerge the old governments of Europe has been promoted by the refusal in Austria-Hungary, Russia, and Germany to permit the legislatures to play any proper part in the development of policies and crystallization of public opinion. That is particularly true of Russia, where the Duma was deprived of all of its too limited powers of usefulness, as well as in Austria-Hungary.

The Bolshevik sentiment was greatly stimulated and advanced because of the people's conviction that they were being exploited and used as instruments for accomplishing the imperialistic purposes of their leagued rulers.

To-day Congress is begging the privilege of working for the country from now until the regular session convenes in December.

A thousand things need to be done to fit the country to meet the problems of the new time.

The world's deficit is fairly being dumped on the shoulders of the United States.

Our own deficit is huge, and we begin vaguely to realize that it is going to be a long-continuing one.

Every other country has been organizing its measures for handling the new problems; every country except our own.

OTHER COUNTRIES BUSY WITH RECONSTRUCTION WORK.

Every other country engaged in this war has a program of reconstruction, and it has begun to legislate upon that program and has it well developed, and in that program of reconstruction an important element is that of looking after the world's trade. What are we doing in that regard? Are we to stop work and go upon a vacation because the President of the United States is in Europe, and be beaten in the struggle for the world's trade that is to follow the war, to say nothing about meeting the grave responsibilities that rest upon us with regard to conditions in our own country?

I repeat that every country that has been involved in this war, or has been touched by this war, excepting our own country, has already inaugurated and has already legislated with regard to a program of reconstruction to meet the new conditions, a program with respect to pushing world trade into the new field, changed somewhat by the conditions of war.

Last December, when he addressed Congress, the President said nothing on this subject; he was too engrossed with getting to Europe for his league of nations effort. Of specific proposals he referred to one subject—the railroads—but he said he did not know what ought to be done with regard to that important subject. He said he hoped Congress would try to find out what ought to be done.

Congress started to investigate; and before it had fairly started the President changed his mind and announced through his Director of Railroads that he wanted a five-year plan of continued Government control adopted, and that unless it were adopted he would return the roads to their corporate owners.

Congress started to investigate his five-year proposal. The public demanded to be heard. The railroad employees demanded to be heard. The railroad owners demanded a hearing. The President changed his mind again, and before the hearing was completed we are told that the roads will not be returned at once. Thus no progress is made, no program is definite or permanent; nobody knows in what confusion the next move or change of Executive mind may involve us. So far as I now remember that is the only domestic problem about which His Excellency has found time to express himself.

I do not complain of that. The President is a busy man—a very busy man. The fact is he insists upon taking everything into his own hands.

CONGRESS DESIRES TO FUNCTION—PRESIDENT WILL NOT PERMIT.

Throughout the war he insisted on Congress legislating in blank and en bloc, to the end that everything should be done upon Executive orders. His war activities are somewhat curtailed and he seems very restive under the change. There is work enough for the President if he performs the duties assigned to the Executive under the Constitution. There is an abundance of hard work awaiting Congress.

Congress wants to perform the service it owes the country. The country is pressing for relief legislation. The President, it is said, will not permit Congress to meet on the 5th day of March and begin work on these great problems. If that be true, I think it presents a situation that demands consideration of an amendment to our Constitution that will enable Congress to convene itself in extra session.

The Austrian Emperor prorogued Parliament, refused to reconvene it, and thereby committed a tragic blunder; but the need for parliamentary government in this country is far greater than it was in Austria, or Germany, or Russia, because our institutions provide no alternative. We must have orderly government, through the laws of Congress, or we shall have stagnation and chaos, so far as concerns the complication of great problems that reorganization and industrial and commercial reconstruction imperatively demand.

Mr. President, from time to time during the consideration of this bill we have been subjected to the threat that unless certain bills embraced in the formal legislative program of this session are passed there will be a panic. But that formal program is not all the country needs. The country needs the devoted, earnest services of the Congress continuously at this time, and ought not to be deprived of them. It is entitled to know, to understand that the contest here is not merely over the program of this session; it is a contest between the President and the Parliament, wherein the Parliament is employing the only means it possesses to force an autocratic ruler to give it a chance to work for the country, to do work vitally necessary.

Not to do that work, not to have it done because autocracy reigns to-day in this country, as during the war it reigned at Vienna and Petrograd and Berlin, is to invite the same calamity that overcame the autocratic government of Europe.

OPPORTUNITY AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PRESIDENT.

The country must be made to know the truth. If that truth is that the President is the one autocrat left in the world, who insists on ruling without a Parliament, the sooner we know it the better. Even the Japanese Government has in the last few months been modified to provide the beginnings of a system of parliamentary responsibility. Here in America we have an administration yet in power which has been specifically repudiated at the polls. There is nothing like it on the side that fought with us in this war. Our repudiated administration refuses to permit our Parliament—that is, our Congress—to serve with it. The result is that while our ruler is busy with international ambitions and plans, the business of the people is neglected. It stands still, and that business is so urgent that it threatens national calamity to leave it undone.

Just think, sir, how easily the President can solve all the troubles which confront us by immediately issuing a call for an extra session of Congress to meet to-morrow, March 5—

(1) He will thereby insure a complete and thoroughgoing consideration of all these waiting appropriation bills and their speedy enactment into law within the next few weeks. Then, too, this old panic scare can be thrown into the dust heap of useless and discarded things.

(2) He will thereby insure the continued sessions of the Senate and its continued discussion of the league of nations and the terms of the treaty while they are being negotiated; thus will he happily secure from day to day the "advice" of the Senate on the proposed covenants of the treaty. This will help to a better mutual understanding and tend to make more certain the ratification of the treaty by the Senate.

(3) He will thereby insure the prompt meeting of the various committees of Congress upon whom will fall the responsibility of originating and perfecting the new legislation demanded by the country as the direct and indirect result of the war.

Mr. President and Senators, it becomes at once apparent that the President is confronted with a great opportunity and a great responsibility. It all rests with the President.

There is lodged in the hands of the President of the United States the power to convene the Congress of the United States to take up this legislation. Even on the 4th of March, one hour, one minute after the life of this Congress expires, he can merge the work of a new Congress into this Congress, to be convened by his orders under the Constitution. There need to be no moment of a hiatus. It lies with him to say whether there shall be a panic, to say whether there shall come upon the people of this country even the menace of any disaster by the failure of legislation enacted at this session. Are we to be coerced in our judgment into accepting measures, carrying billions upon billions of taxation to the people, when those measures are presented to us, with the currents of legislation gorged to overflowing banks?

INDEPENDENT CONGRESSIONAL ACTION DEMANDED.

If there was ever a time when independence of action was demanded on the part of men upon both sides of this aisle in which I now stand it is when legislation is held back by those in control, legislation of the greatest importance to the taxpayers of the country, to the destinies of this Government, all dumped upon us at a time when it can not receive any consideration whatever in an intelligent, deliberative, thoughtful way.

And yet, Mr. President, this experience through which we are passing now is but a repetition of what we had two years ago. The great legislative appropriation bills at that period were held back then just as they have been at this session, brought in here by those in control of the committees, and handed out to us, and we are told to take them and pass them, and pass them quick, or we will be held responsible for the failure of the supply bills of the Government.

Mr. President, I say that it is time for Senators who have regard for the rights of their States and for the Constitution to rise up in their might and strike down the power that destroys representative government by a legislative program such as we have been forced to grapple with for the past two or three weeks and such as we were required to deal with at the close of the last Congress two years ago. When those Senators who are responsible for the great legislative bills of every Congress choose to hold them back until there are only three or four days in which to consider such a list of appropriation bills as I will presently bring to your attention, still on the calendar and not acted upon, I say it is time for men who have any regard at all for constitutional government to serve notice upon the committees of Congress that there is to be an end of this reprehensible system that makes a mockery of responsible legislative action.

CONSTITUTIONAL V. STEAM-ROLLER LEGISLATION.

What is constitutional government? It is the right of every State to be represented here and of every representative to be heard upon the legislation which concerns his State and the country. What opportunity has anybody to be heard fairly upon these belated bills? Is there any just excuse to be given for holding them back till the last hour? Is it not time to inaugurate a change? It does not involve appropriation bills only, but many other measures of vast importance dealing with great public interests are thrust in here when they can receive no proper consideration and the attempt made to drive them through in the midst of the confusion and chaos, such as we have witnessed in the Senate for the last week.

Mr. President, I hope to have an opportunity before this Congress closes to complete the speech which I began the other day on the oil and coal bill. It was my purpose in the course of my argument to make a complete analysis of that bill. If the conference report on the bill is again presented at this session I shall satisfy the Senate and the country that the bill ought to be beaten, and beaten so badly that it will never again be offered in its present form.

What is true of the coal and oil bill is equally true of the water-power bill, the conference report upon which, with its right-of-way privilege, is also in readiness to be brought immediately before the Senate whenever a favorable opening is offered. If, sir, it does make its appearance here, I shall undertake to show with a certainty, amounting to demonstration, that it would be against the public interest to permit that bill to be enacted into law.

Mr. President, this steam-roller system of legislation is a reproach to the American Congress. It confirms a growing belief in the public mind that the Government is no longer representative of the people.

In these disturbed times Congress, the President, his Cabinet, and the Federal judges—one and all from the Supreme Court down—should so enact, administer, and interpret the laws as to strengthen and not further weaken public confidence in our Government.

WHO CONTROLS OUR GOVERNMENT?

Am I going too far when I say that representative democracy has been undermined, and that great and powerful interests have already secured control of this Government? I will quote you some pretty good Democratic authority in support of that statement.

I hold in my hand Woodrow Wilson's book entitled "The New Freedom."

I suppose he was sincere when he wrote it. At least, I do not apprehend that anyone across the aisle will rise up to accuse him of being a hypocrite or pharisee or of wanting to fool the people.

Here is just a sentence from it. Let it sink into your hearts. Take it home with you. Wake up and listen to it! Now, mark you, it was not so long ago. The copyright of this book is 1913 and the edition which I hold in my hand is 1918, and I take it that the author would not have permitted it to go to press with anything in it that he did not believe to be true even at the present time, under his own administration. Listen:

> All over the Union people are coming to feel that they have no control over the course of affairs.

I take it that the author means that the people feel that they have no control over their Government. Well, who is it, then, that does control the people's Government? Let Mr. Woodrow Wilson answer. I read from his book again, as follows:

> Suppose you go to Washington to try to get at your Government. You will always find, while you are politely listened to, the men really consulted are the men who have the biggest stake—the big bankers, the big manufacturers, the big masters of commerce, the heads of railroad corporations and of steamship corporations.

I said a few moments ago that representative democracy had been undermined in this country. I mean, sir, that the vital thing in it—the soul of it—has been destroyed. We have the form of democracy, but this is no longer a Government by the people for the benefit of the people. It is a Government dominated in every department by wealth, primarily to increase the profits of wealth. The Government grows less and less considerate of human rights, more and more regardful of property rights.

True, the citizen has the ballot. But what does that signify? He votes in a national election once in four years. The average life of a man is 33 years, and between the time he becomes 21 and casts his first ballot and the time when he is summoned to judgment he has cast, at the outside, we will say, three presidential ballots. The only time he ever touches his Government, the only time he gets within speaking distance of it, is when he casts his ballot. That is his only part in government. And of what avail is his ballot to the average man? He manages to live on in much the same way whichever party is in power.

Mr. President, our country is wonderfully rich in soil, coal, iron, copper—indeed, all of the gifts of nature are ours in abundance.

But, sir, poverty is increasing. The most learned and impartial authorities establish the alarming fact that "two-thirds of our people are poor." They are so poor that "they have little or no property except their clothes and some cheap furniture, and their average income is less than $200 per capita."

Let me ask you, in God's name, what has the ballot given in the last 20 years of the life of this Republic—what has the ballot given to the poor man, to the voter who typifies the "two-thirds of our people who are poor"? Has it given him representative government? Has it given him representation in the laws as made and administered? I deny it. The laws have been dictated by privilege, administered by privilege, and too often interpreted through our courts by privilege. Special interests have been allowed to control and to dictate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. Surely the Senator would not say that the law we passed some months back, giving the right to the American exporters to combine and fix and control the prices on goods shipped abroad, was dictated by the interests? Surely he would not say that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, the Senator is speaking ironically. He knows as we all know that the interests did dictate that legislation. After they had been allowed to fix prices in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and fleece our own people here in this country, they had the audacity to ask Congress to give them the right to go abroad and fix prices in combination upon the unfortunate people of foreign countries. And Congress bowed to their will and passed the law.

Mr. REED. Yes; but, Mr. President, if a man can fix prices for the people of foreign countries or a combination can do so, how can they do that unless they control the American trade abroad, for if it is allowed to go in and compete their combination to fix prices would not amount to much. So does it not amount to this, that the combination that fixes the prices in Europe can only be effective because they are able to fix prices upon all of the surplus products in which they are interested in America?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why, of course, that is true. Oh, Mr. President, what a mockery the whole thing is! Everybody knows just what has happened in this country, if we would be honest with ourselves.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Does he know of any trust prosecution that has drawn any blood since we organized the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not, Mr. President; but I do recall that one of the most prominent planks of the Democratic platform of 1912 declared for "the vigorous enforcement of the criminal as well as the civil law against trusts and trust officials."

I recall further that another plank in that platform demanded "the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for private monopoly to exist in the United States."

But, Mr. President, the platforms of both political parties have regularly, every four years, promised the voters to suppress trusts and combinations and destroy monopolies. Both parties have cheated the voters and broken their promises regularly every four years. Both parties have been about equally subservient to the power represented by the concentrated wealth of the country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it would not interrupt the Senator, I should like to ask him another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly. Nothing will interrupt me. It just gives me a new start.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator how he reconciles the doctrine that we should permit our merchants to combine to fix prices in European markets, so that the European will have to pay the monopoly prices fixed—how he reconciles that with the doctrine of universal brotherhood and leagues of nations and fraternity and eternal love and disinterestedness, which we are now hearing so much of?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I am willing to do almost any humanly possible thing to oblige my friend, the Senator from Missouri, but I would prefer not to undertake the task of harmonizing the views and policies of this administration. It is too big a job.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. While the Senator is discussing a great many general things, I should like to ask him what he thinks of that form of legislation which prohibits the sale of intoxicants in the United States but provides that intoxicants may be sold abroad without limit?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say that I think it is taking an unfair advantage of the folks at home. [Laughter.] I have always voted against prohibition, because I am opposed to the principle upon which it is based. My views upon that subject have not changed. I was never able to change my opinions regarding the principle involved in a measure because it seemed to be winning, and to be, as some advocates of prohibition are, in favor of prohibition for everybody else and in favor of unlimited——

Mr. REED. Irrigation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Irrigation for themselves. [Laughter.]

And so, Mr. President, after this brief digression, in the pleasant company of my two friends, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I turn back to pursue my way along the line I was following.

I find in this interesting book entitled "The New Freedom" confirmation as strong as Holy Writ in support of my assertion that the people have lost control of their Government.

BIG BANKERS DEMANDED PASSAGE OF BOND BILL.

Of course, this book was written by Mr. Woodrow Wilson two years before he became President. But I am sure that every unbiased individual in the country will agree that the great combinations and trusts—the United States Steel Co., the coal, copper, oil, the meat packers, and, indeed, all of the great monopolies that controlled two years before Mr. Wilson became President—are in stronger positions of power over the lives of our people and over their Government to-day than they were when Mr. Wilson wrote his New Freedom.

In the paragraph which I read to the Senate from the New Freedom, Mr. Wilson says:

> Suppose you go to Washington and try to get at your Government; you will always find that while you are politely listened to, the men really consulted are the men who have the biggest stake—the big bankers, the big manufacturers, the big masters of commerce, the heads of railroad corporations and of steamship corporations.

You will observe that he names the "big bankers" first in the list of those who are "always"—not just occasionally, but always—"the men really consulted."

Now, the "big bankers" have not been in the spotlight since the passage of the Federal reserve act. That law is believed by some innocent souls to have worked a miracle upon the "big bankers."

They are supposed to have been born again and purged of all their swinish sins of greed and selfishness through the sanctifying offices of the reserve board. The Federal Reserve Board manages the "big bankers"—or is managed by them. And if at any time you should want to communicate with the "big bankers," the reserve board could doubtless locate them for you.

Well, it was pretty generally understood among Republican Senators that the administration bond bill was a bad bill, and that it must not be permitted to pass.

When this became known on Saturday last there was a commotion in the field of high finance. The "big bankers," who have for some time been enjoying a quiet time in the money melon patch, let out a squeal that was distinctly heard in some parts of the Senate Chamber.

The "big bankers" demanded the passage of the administration bond bill. They liked its provisions. It was just what they wanted in their business.

They were sure of the administration Democrats in the Senate. But it was important to the "big bankers" to destroy the effectiveness of the Republican opposition to the bond bill in the Senate. Hence from somewhere—nobody seems to know or choose to tell just where—there came a hurried call for a Republican senatorial conference.

The Senate recessed Saturday evening for an hour and a half to facilitate the holding of that conference.

It was held, and a majority of the Republican Senators present decided that organized Republican opposition to the bond bill should cease.

And so we have fresh confirmation of Mr. Wilson's statement in the New Freedom that—

> The men really consulted are the men who have the biggest stake—the "big bankers."

You Democrats never could have passed your bond bill yesterday if the "big bankers" of this country had not demanded it. Their voice was heard in the Republican senatorial conference and was more potent than the appeal made there for the defeat of the bill in the public interest.

Mr. President, I think few measures have passed the Senate in my time the provisions of which were so fraught with evil as the bond bill, which was voted through this body in the gray of the morning between darkness and daylight, when all the country was wrapped in peaceful sleep, early last Sunday. That is, everybody in the country seemed to be asleep, except the "big bankers." They were awake—wide awake—very.

I desire the RECORD to show that I would have gladly aided in the defeat of the bond bill. I could not accomplish its defeat unsupported and alone. I did what I could.

For the first time in the history of our Government you have turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury the sale of billions of Government securities, which are certain to be largely bought by the "big bankers," and the Secretary of the Treasury in conference with those bankers will fix the rate of interest and the terms of exemption of the securities from taxation. It was as plain as a pikestaff from the beginning that that is what is going to happen. It is the rounding out and the consummation of the heartless, the cruel, policy—inaugurated when we entered the war—of financing it solely in the interests of the wealth of this country. You have capped it, you have topped it off, by authorizing the sale of the seven billions of obligations of our Government, and you have in effect given legislative sanction for the Secretary of the Treasury and the bankers to get together and agree what the rate of interest will be and what tax exemptions the bankers, who will furnish the bulk of the money, shall be permitted to enjoy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator know that the Republican members of the Finance Committee were opposed to that bond bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know that they were opposed to it; at least, that is the record in the committee; but I know that when the bill came before the Senate Saturday evening, notwithstanding all the brave talk about defeating the measure which had been so general upon this side for some time, opposition to the measure suddenly ceased, when, as I have strong reason to believe, word from the "big bankers" was received.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator understand that it was the program of the other side of the Chamber to lay on the table every amendment that was offered?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Ah, but suppose it was?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator that we ought to have filibustered against that bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We should have. If there is a legitimate weapon to lay hold of against an iniquitous piece of legislation which, if passed, will work a serious injury to the people of this country, I hold that it is our duty to use that parliamentary weapon to defeat it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it was, myself, I will say to the Senator; but the Democratic Party framed and passed that bill, did they not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Democratic Party framed it, and they put it on its passage, and the Republicans for a time opposed it, and then they went into conference and surrendered to the Democratic side of this Senate. That is what happened.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whether they did or not, I do not say. The Senator has his opinions about that, and I have mine.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And I think they agree.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think we should have filibustered against that bill, even if it beat every other bill that was before the Senate. I agree with the Senator about that. Nevertheless, it was the product of the Democratic Committee on Finance, and recommended by the Democratic President and the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury. It is their bill; and if the Republicans simply failed to filibuster against it—and the filibuster is not a very popular weapon, perhaps—the Democratic Party is responsible for it if it is a bad bill. They control all three branches of this Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with you that the Democratic Party begot the measure; and then I assert that, after denouncing it as illegitimate, and agreeing that the best interests of the country demanded that it be killed, a majority of Republican Senators agreed in conference to adopt and support the thing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will yield to me for a question——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want the Senator to yield the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; just for a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator will agree that the only weapon the Republican Party had in their power with which to defeat that bill, if the Senator thinks it was iniquitous—and I think it was a bad bill—was by a filibuster. Is not that so?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. We could not have beaten it except by a filibuster, which meant, inasmuch as the Democratic Party had made that bill the order of the day and given it precedence of all other bills, that every other bill would have been defeated. That was the position of the Republicans.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But in filibustering you would have been within your parliamentary rights.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Absolutely.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And I think it was as much your duty to exercise your parliamentary rights to stop a measure that you knew was bad for the people of this country as though you had not had to filibuster to defeat it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator; and I was in favor of that filibuster.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator was.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And I would have beaten every bill, including the bond bill, and advocated doing that; but, I say, we did not have a majority in the Republican conference. Nevertheless, that does not absolve the Democratic Party, which controlled the situation, from responsibility.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does not absolve the Democratic Party from bringing the bill in, and putting it upon its passage, and insisting upon its passage; neither does it absolve the Republican Party, which could have stopped its passage by the exercise of its legitimate power here under the rules of the Senate. That is where the thing stands, and we have got to take that much of the burden on our own shoulders. I am sorry for it, but that is exact truth, and let the record show it.

A FOSTER CHILD OF SPECIAL PRIVILEGE.

But I come back to this great question which a mass of people are raising in these unsettled times: "Who owns and controls our Government?"

Here is another choice passage from President Wilson, with regard to the sort of government that we had in this country at the time he published this book, the revised edition of which was printed in 1918. Listen to it:

> The Government of the United States at present is a foster child of the special interests—

What do you think of that [laughter]—1918!—

> It is not allowed to have a will of its own.

We people down here in Congress have been thinking that, too. Our part of the Government has not been allowed to have any will of its own. As the late Senator from Missouri, Mr. Stone, now sleeping his last sleep, said in one of the speeches that he made on this floor: "You have to go down to the White House, and humbly"—I am not quoting him exactly, but I am getting the meat out of it—"and humbly, with your hat in your hand, say, with bated breath: 'Mr. President, please tell me what I think.'" [Laughter.]

But let me give this quotation from Mr. Wilson in its entirety:

> The Government of the United States at present is a foster child of the special interests. It is not allowed to have a will of its own. It is told at every move: "Don't do that; you will interfere with our prosperity." And when we ask, "Where is our prosperity lodged?" a certain group of gentlemen say, "With us." The Government of the United States in recent years has not been administered by the common people of the United States.

Have I been stating the facts too strongly about the undermining of democracy?

Here is another quotation from the New Freedom that I intend to read when I finish my speech on the coal and oil bill. I will put it in now because it will bear two readings:

> Then there is the question of conservation. What is our fear about conservation? The hands that are being stretched out to monopolize our forests, to prevent or preempt the use of our great power-producing streams, the hands that are being stretched into the bowels of the earth to take possession of the great riches that lie hidden in Alaska and in the incomparable domain of the United States, are in the hands of monopoly. Are these men to continue to stand at the elbow of government and tell us how we are to save ourselves from themselves?

If you will closely examine the measures lying in wait just behind the pending deficiency bill—measures dealing with coal, oil, phosphates, and water powers—you will agree with Mr. Wilson that we can not safely trust the counsel of "these men" who "tell us how we are to save ourselves from themselves."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I ask the Senator from what revolutionary book he is reading? It is colored red. It looks very rosy to me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am reading from the New Freedom.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh!

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. "A call for the emancipation of the generous energies of a people."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A new day has dawned.

Mr. GRONNA. By whom was the book written?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Woodrow Wilson, published in New York and Garden City, Doubleday, Page & Co., 1918.

NOT A GOVERNMENT BY FREE OPINION AND CONVICTION.

I am now going to read you another particularly strong quotation from Mr. Wilson:

> We have come to be one of the worst ruled, one of the most completely controlled and dominated governments in the civilized world—no longer a government by free opinion, no longer a government by conviction and the vote of the majority, but a government by the opinion and duress of a small group of dominant men.

Mr. President, there are many millions of men in this country, native Americans, who believe that our Government to-day is just as bad as Mr. Wilson in the New Freedom, from which I have been quoting, so liberally states it to have been when he wrote his book.

These American citizens are intelligent, loyal, courageous men and women. They have the same right to discuss political conditions, and criticize the acts and policies of government that Mr. Wilson has.

I maintain that instead of inventing and devising new measures for repressing free speech and suppressing criticism of the glaring evils in government which Woodrow Wilson so well describes, it is our duty to do everything in our power to insure an extra and an immediate session of the Congress, to the end that we may at once address ourselves to the task of correcting the abuses and remedying the crying evils which Mr. Wilson says and which I think all must agree do exist.

He says this is—

> No longer a government by the conviction and vote of the majority, but a government by the opinion and duress of a small group of dominant men.

I believe that to be true. And so believing, I am opposed to our leaving Washington and going off on a vacation.

I am in favor of staying right on the job and doing our best to reform this Government.

If we want to check bolshevism, we can do it once and for all if we will make this Government serve the people. And that is only another way of saying that we should make it such a Government as Lincoln believed in.

That is our great and never-ending task—to make and keep this Government a democracy.

And Congress has other work to do.

There should be an extra session immediately, in order that the Senate have opportunity to advise with the President on the terms of the treaty while it is in the making.

There should be an extra session of Congress immediately to investigate and construct a comprehensive legislative program of industrial reorganization.

There should be an extra session of Congress immediately to reexamine, rewrite, and pass upon the long list of appropriation bills now on the calendar, but which were reported so late as to make it impossible to give them any consideration whatever at this session.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate at this hour with a detailed discussion of the program for legislation which has been urged upon Congress and which would require the uninterrupted work both of the Senate and House of Representatives for many months to come, if any regard is to be paid to the interest of the people of this country.

But I feel that I should be derelict in my duty if I permitted this session to close without calling the attention of the Senate, and as far as I am able the attention of the President and the country, to the crying need for immediate and carefully constructed legislation. And in doing this I shall not go beyond the field of legislation which has been suggested for the consideration of the Congress, either in the form of bills demanding immediate attention or in the form of a definite program proposed by Senators which should be immediately crystallized into legislation if we are to escape a real business panic and labor upheaval of the character which is now convulsing many of the countries of Europe.

I again refer to the bond bill, rushed through the Senate in the early dawn last Sunday morning, when Senators were too weary, after a continuous day and night session, to give it further attention, and which carried with it the obligation of the American people to raise $7,000,000,000 in the next few months upon terms, in effect, to be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the bankers of the country. In that bill Congress abjectly accepted the dictation that came from the administration and sought to divest itself of its responsibility by an attempted delegation of legislative authority to a department official, authority given to it under the Constitution "to borrow money on the credit of the United States."

HUMILIATING AND DANGEROUS INTERFERENCE WITH CONGRESS.

Why was it, Mr. President, that the framers of the Constitution lodged power to borrow money in the hands of the Congress? It was because the Congress, elected directly by the people, would be directly responsible to them for the money that should be borrowed. That means responsible not only for the amount borrowed but for the terms and conditions under which it should be borrowed.

Mr. President, a few years of unconditional surrender to the imperious will of the Executive has weakened the will of Congress and destroyed its character, its fiber of independence, its constitutional authority. You have come to accept treatment from the Executive as if you were schoolboys with a schoolmaster over you. We are greatly in need of something that shall awaken us to a realization of the changes that are being wrought in the very foundation structure of our Government. It is time for us to endeavor to restore the solid and well-balanced Government which the makers of the Constitution designed that we should have—an independent legislative body, an independent Executive, an independent judiciary.

Since that emblem behind you, Mr. President, was given to the free air of America, since men wrote their names to the great charter of our liberties, I think that one of the most humiliating and one of the most dangerous practices that has grown up under this administration is the presence of the Executive, sitting at the very door of this Chamber and dictating what legislation shall be enacted by this body.

The cablegram that came across the Atlantic from the President presuming even to suggest that the American Senate should not discuss the constitution of the so-called league of nations until he should first speak shows how far we have gone in five short years toward the destruction of constitutional government. If this body had in its membership to-day such men as Allen G. Thurman; George F. Edmunds; John Sherman, of Ohio; Vest, of Missouri, men who jealously maintained the constitutional independence of the American Congress, there would have been such an answer returned to the Executive as would have admonished him not to attempt further to interfere with the Senate in the exercise of a constitutional right or the discharge of a consitutional duty.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, without meaning to take the Senator from the floor, and with the understanding that that would not be the effect, I should like to say that I am one who is prepared to stand for the Senate advising and refusing to consent unless that advice is previously given.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. God bless you. I tell you, when a man on that side of the aisle has the courage to assert his right as the representative of a great State in these times, following the swift decline we have experienced in senatorial independence and responsible congressional Government, it foretells the birth of a new day and promises the restoration of representative democracy.

We do not owe our places here to the President of the United States. We have our responsibility under the Constitution to the people of this country and the States that send us here, and we should rebuke in terms that would never require repetition the first attempt on the part of the Executive to encroach upon the constitutional rights of the representatives of the people. When we fail to do that we are unworthy to be here. God will that other men shall soon declare their emancipation, and that we may again have a Government of the people such as Lincoln bespoke for us at Gettysburg.

BILLIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS REPORTED IN LAST DAYS OF SESSION.

But, Mr. President, I come back to a further discussion of the deplorable condition of our legislative calendar, and the urgent and imperative demand for an extra session to follow immediately upon the close of Congress at 12 o'clock to-day.

A mere list of the appropriation bills that have not yet been reached for consideration shows conclusively that they would require at least a month for proper examination and discussion,

The following appropriation bills are on the calendar awaiting first consideration by the Senate:

Third deficiency bill	$842,096,913
Agricultural bill	31,673,022
Indian bill (conference report)	15,430,000
Diplomatic and Consular	9,373,844
Fortifications	14,599,291
Naval	625,798,321
Army	1,238,282,000
Sundry civil	850,513,210
Total	3,627,766,561

In this connection I desire to call attention to an editorial that I wrote and published in La Follette's Magazine in March, 1917, dealing with the closing days of the Sixty-fourth Congress. I then wrote:

The Sixty-fourth Congress was to expire by limitation at 12 o'clock noon on the 4th day of March.

The next regular Congress would not meet until December 3, a period of eight months.

If Congress was to complete its work by March 4, it was absolutely necessary to report from committee the appropriation bills supplying the money necessary for the several departments of Government and to report the bills in time to give them fair consideration. This was the more necessary because of the wanton and reckless extravagance in appropriations last year and the enormous increases urged upon this Congress by the executive departments, imposing upon every Senator regardful of the interests of taxpayers already overburdened the obligation to scrutinize these measures with the greatest possible care.

But the appropriation bills were held back for some reason, until it became a matter of comment among Senators and Representatives that the bills were to be "jammed through" in a rush at the end of the session.

As the committees of Congress are organized, a few of the majority party leaders control the business and expedite it or otherwise at will.

For some unexplained reason six bills carrying an aggregate appropriation of more than $500,000,000 were so delayed by those having them in charge that they were not even placed before the Senate for consideration or attempted to be passed at all.

Six other great appropriation bills carrying an aggregate of nearly a billion dollars were so held back by those responsible for them that they were not passed and finally disposed of by the Senate until the last 48 hours of the session, while another measure had the right of way and was the all-absorbing subject for consideration.

What was the real underlying significance of such a proceeding?

Was it to create a situation where a number of the bills might escape thorough investigation and debate? For example, the naval appropriation bill will cost the people the enormous sum of $523,000,000 for the coming year. Such a bill ought to be carefully considered and thoroughly discussed. So, too, with the Army appropriation bill, carrying $278,000,000, besides a provision to force military training upon the American people. Think of attempting to drive that proposition through without opportunity for deliberation and debate!

Whatever may have been the reason for the condition of legislation described—it had been brought about. It existed and presented a situation most favorable for bringing forward a measure such as the armed ship bill.

The closing days of a Congress are always a time of tremendous pressure and severe tension.

It is one time when a measure of debatable right that has not been thoroughly considered should be kept out.

It is the one time of all others when a matter of great and momentous import to the peace of the Nation should not be thrust into the gorged and swollen flood of legislation.

Mr. President, I thought at the time I wrote that editorial that the shameful procedure I there described would never be repeated by this administration or any other. But, sir, not only is the administration pursuing the same policy to-day, but the appropriations proposed to be rushed through in the closing hours of this session are more than double those which were rushed through in the closing hours of the Sixty-fourth Congress. At that time you will observe I stated that appropriation bills carrying in the aggregate nearly a billion dollars were rushed through in the closing hours of that Congress. The bills before us now carry in appropriation nearly $4,000,000,000. For example, the naval appropriation bill then carried $523,000,000, the present bill carries nearly $700,000,000. Then the administration knew that we were entering upon a war, now it knows that we are emerging from a war, and asserts moreover that it is about to conclude a treaty of peace which would make a large Navy, not only unnecessary, but contrary to the very terms of the peace treaty it proposes to negotiate. Then the Army appropriation bill carried $278,000,000, now it carries $1,238,000,000, and the administration claims that it is about to negotiate a treaty which will make a large Army unnecessary and will moreover outlaw excessive armaments.

CONGRESS SHOULD PROVIDE FOR THE ARMY OF UNEMPLOYED.

At the time the appropriation bills were up in 1917 in the closing days of the Sixty-fourth Congress we were a Nation practically free from debt. Our industries were running at full capacity, and it could be fairly said that large as the appropriations were at that time the people could assume the responsibility without serious difficulty. To-day all this is changed. Our Nation in the short space of two years has become indebted to the unheard of sum of nearly $25,000,000,000, and the Treasury Department admits that many more billions will be added to that amount. Industry is disorganized, labor is restless and resentful. The high cost of living has brought the pinch of poverty home to millions of our people who previously lived in comfort. The 65 per cent of our people who were close to the line of actual want then, are closer still, and many millions more have passed beyond it. An army of men almost equal to the one that we sent to Europe is now out of employment and clamoring for work, and the army of the unemployed is increasing by thousands every week. Sir, if anything can make the present administration pause in its mad career, can turn its attention from affairs abroad to conditions at home, the facts and figures which I have given should produce that result.

But, sir, the appropriation bills which are awaiting action here are only part of a mass of important legislation demanding immediate attention. A number of Senators have recently presented here, in the form of bills or suggestions for debate, measures upon which the best statesmanship of the Congress ought to be engaged at this moment. I will take time only to refer to a few of them.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has recently presented his suggestions in the form of three bills which should be immediately considered. I only notice them briefly, and they are as follows:

First. Bill for board of public works.

Necessary public works are held up. This applies only to work already authorized, and its purpose is to help in the situation as to unemployment.

Statistics of 153 cities show unemployment this week of about 364,000, indicating over million men out of employment.

This was some time ago.

Second. Bill for commission to present plans of Government assistance in home building for people of moderate means.

Third. Bill for industrial trade commission.

To report plan for arbitration (voluntary), court of mediation and conciliation. Industrial accident pensions. Old-age insurance. Other industrial problems.

Last September the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] presented to the Senate a resolution which ought to have found favor with the administration of President Wilson at once. The necessity for such legislation is now imperative. At the time the resolution was presented the war was not over, although it was obvious to thoughtful men that the resistance of the enemy had been broken and that peace would soon be at hand, with the problems which it involved. That resolution was as follows:

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I send a concurrent resolution to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 21) was read, as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a committee to be known as the Joint Congressional Committee on Reconstruction, composed of six Senators and six Representatives in Congress. The members of said committee shall be selected as follows: Three Senators by the Democratic senatorial caucus, three Senators by the Republican senatorial conference, three Representatives in Congress by the Democratic House caucus, and three Representatives in Congress by the Republican House conference: Provided, That only Senators and Representatives in Congress who have been elected to serve in the Sixty-sixth Congress shall be eligible for membership on said committee. Such membership shall terminate with the service in Congress of the Member, and vacancies shall be filled in the same manner as the original selections were made, respectively.

"That said committee shall make an investigation of the following subjects and report to Congress from time to time with such recommendations as to additional legislation or otherwise as it may deem advisable:

"1. Problems affecting labor, including—

"(a) Unemployment which may follow war.

"(b) Utilization of discharged soldiers and sailors in civil employments.

"(c) Conciliation and arbitration of labor disputes.

"(d) The relation of men and women in similar employments.

"(e) Substitution of female employees for male and vice versa.

"(f) Feasibility of organizing permanent employment agencies.

"(g) Requirements for labor after the war, both in agricultural and industrial occupations.

"(h) Distribution of labor.

"(i) Employment of surplus labor on public works of which the construction or completion has been suspended due to the war.

"2. Problems affecting capital and credit, including—

"(a) All matters relating to trusts and combinations.

"(b) Federal loans to private enterprises.

"(c) Federal supervision of capital issues.

"3. Problems affecting public utilities, including—

"(a) The establishment of a railroad policy after the war and the relation of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the railroads.

"(b) All questions relating to communication by wire.

"4. Problems resulting from the demobilization of our industrial and military war resources, including—

"(a) The disposal of surplus Government properties and supplies in this country and abroad.

"(b) The conversion of munition industries into those of peace.

"(c) The demobilization of the war strength of the Army and Navy and the disposition of the men who have been in the service.

"(d) The demobilization of civil war workers.

"5. Problems affecting our foreign trade, including—

"(a) The development of new markets.

"(b) Combinations for the purpose of increasing our selling facilities.
"(c) Changes in our banking facilities necessary to cooperate with such trade.
"6. Problems affecting the continuance of existing industries and the establishment of new industries, including—
"(a) The supply and control of raw materials.
"(b) The encouragement of the production in the United States of articles that have not been made in this country heretofore.
"(c) The encouragement of private enterprise in the development of the resources of the public domain.
"(d) The utilization of a tariff on imports as a means to protect and encourage home industries.
"7. Problems relating to agriculture, including—
"(a) The advisability of continuing after the war price fixing of food products.
"(b) Federal loans to farmers.
"(c) Distribution of food products.
"(d) The allotment of lands to returned soldiers and sailors and their establishment in new homes on the public domain.
"8. Problems affecting the adequate production and effective distribution of coal, gasoline, and other fuels.
"9. Problems relating to shipping, including shipyards, and especially in regard to the sale, continuance of ownership, or leasing of both yards and ships.
"10. Housing conditions and the disposition of houses constructed by the Government during the war.
"11. War legislation now on the statute books, with reference to its repeal, extension, or amendment.
"12. And in general all matters necessarily arising during the change from the activities of war to the pursuits of peace, including those that may be referred to it by the Senate or House of Representatives.
"That the committee is authorized to employ such clerical assistance as it may deem necessary, including the services of experts, and may, by subcommittee or otherwise, send for persons or papers, administer oaths, and employ stenographers, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject before it; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate and House of Representatives; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House upon the presentation of vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, until otherwise provided by law."

It is a well-thought-out and elaborate program of reconstruction. There is good brain work behind it. There is a foresight and real statesmanship in it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I will say to the Senator that England has 83 committees dealing with the reconstruction problem, chosen from the very best men in the Empire, looking to the restoration of her industries, the furnishing of raw materials, the solving of transportation problems on land and sea, the financing of these problems, the employment of labor, the conservation of the health of labor, and many other things, all of which think in terms of human life, and not merely in terms of acquisition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is very interesting. I had seen something suggestive of the work going forward there, but nothing that bespoke the detailed thought that is reflected in the Senator's description of what he has had an opportunity to see on his recent visit abroad. And it does seem to me to be so shortsighted and so almost wickedly improvident for us to be denied the opportunity to complete the unfinished work of this session in an extra session—to be immediately convened—and then to grapple seriously with this great reconstruction problem. Usually in a short session of Congress we have about enough to do to handle the big appropriations and get through with them; and we ought to do it more promptly and in a more orderly way than that in which we have been attempting to do it in recent years.

REAL DANGER IN DEFERRING ACTION.

But, Mr. President, with the modifications of existing law which the change from war to peace brought on us, and with the unfolding of the new problems that peace has presented, how anybody could think that Congress should not be called at once to meet and grapple at once with these great issues is more than I can understand. We ought to be in session here to-morrow at 1 o'clock as a new Congress. We ought not to be permitted to forget for a moment our unfinished tasks; but, bidden by the Executive—who surely should take the same broad outlook upon the needs of this country that the statesmanship of Great Britain has so promptly recognized—we should be called here to do our work at once, without laying down the tools of our business.

It is shocking. It is unthinkable that Congress should not be employed in this great field that is calling us to service. Can it be possible that we are to wait, that the country is to wait until the President returns from Europe?

And when His Excellency returns with the treaty completed, what then? Why, then the Senate will be permitted to see the document in its entirety, and they will, of course, be at once plunged into a study and discussion of its terms.

The treaty and the appropriation bills which must go over to another session will then keep the Senate closely occupied for many weeks—it may be months.

So that we shall be fortunate indeed if the program for reconstructive legislation is not postponed, in so far as the Senate's labors upon it are concerned, until next winter.

Senators, there is a real danger in deferring action upon the problems of unemployment and industrial readjustment until the winter is upon us. That is the season when there is a serious menace in lockouts and strikes and bread lines.

If such a situation should break upon this country, it might be very dangerous, even though the great mass of the people had no real cause for complaint against the Government.

But when they have just cause to feel that the Government is not their Government, or, in the words of Mr. Woodrow Wilson, again quoting from The New Freedom, where he squarely charges that—

Our Government has been for the past few years under the control of heads of great allied corporations with special interests.

When the people can arraign their Government on such a charge of rank betrayal into the hands of special privilege—and then industrial depression and labor troubles sweep over the country—you have the basis for riots and bloodshed too horrible to contemplate.

No, no, Mr. President; there should not be a day lost. Congress should be called to meet in extra session to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

RECONSTRUCTION PROBLEMS SHOULD BE TAKEN UP AT ONCE.

Mr. OWEN. I wanted to say, as to the reports of these various committees in Great Britain, that many of them have been finished already and are in print, and they are available for our own people here; so that this experience of Great Britain is immediately available in large part, and it affords a very valuable and instructive matter. After all, bills that are drawn are generally drawn by one man, or two or three men, perhaps, working together. There is a big enough field in this progressive reconstructive program which Great Britain has carried on, and which is facing us here, to employ the best activities of the best brains of this country. There is plenty of room for everybody to get in on it, and still there will be something left.

I merely wanted to suggest that as these days come they need not be quite neglected. The opportunity of studying this experience of Great Britain, and what she has done, lies before you. It is available; it is in print; and I think it is worth while to study it, because we do really need the very best brains of this country on both sides of this Chamber.

As far as I am concerned, I am extremely anxious to cooperate, as far as I may, and I will cooperate in a spirit of sincere helpfulness, as far as I can, with the party that comes into power in this Chamber; but these problems ought not to be delayed any further than is possibly avoidable, and I think those who are desirous of constructive work ought to get at it now as quickly as possible.

If I had my way, Mr. President, I would have the Congress of the United States meet on the 1st of December—the new Congress. I would never allow a Congress going out of power, a Congress which no longer represents the constituency of the United States to meet or to legislate. In 1911 I remember taking rather an active part in a filibuster on Arizona and New Mexico on this floor. I said at that time what I thought in my heart—that that Congress was not charged with the particular duty of legislating further for the people of the United States, and I was not greatly concerned whether they did or not. I do not mean by that that I approved the policy of filibustering, because I do not. I think it is much better, with all the mistakes which the majority may make—and they will make some mistakes—to charge the majority with the responsibility which the country puts on them, and to let them take that responsibility and be responsible to the country, where they may be rebuked if they do not respond to the reasonable expectations of the people.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Oklahoma says we ought to begin this reconstruction work now. My opinion is that we ought to have begun it on the 7th day of April, 1917, the day following the declaration of war.

Mr. OWEN. I agree with the Senator there.

Mr. SMOOT. On the 11th of April of last year I made a speech in the city of Chicago, calling attention to this very subject and then expressed the opinion that Congress should not adjourn until this work was accomplished.

Mr. President, I have volume after volume of not only the testimony, but the recommendations of the numerous committees appointed by England. I also have the reports showing what has been done in Germany, and in France, and even in Italy; and a complete constructive program in all of these countries has been worked out.

Why, when the armistice was signed I do not believe that 24 hours had passed until England had her construction program under way. It was not a week until England knew just where she was going to send her ships that were not destroyed during the war for the purpose of bringing raw materials to her factories. Why, millions of dollars had been spent in the reconstruction of munition plants in order that they might be ready to manufacture goods for the commerce of the world just as soon as it became necessary to discontinue the manufacture of munitions. You can go into England to-day and you can find plants there with machinery standing alongside of machinery that is still used for the making of guns and munitions, and all that is necessary at the proper time is to change the employees from one class of work to the other. I say now that there has been no such preparation in America to take care of the laboring people who will be changed from one class of work to the other, not one thing done here to take into consideration the changed conditions of the commerce of the world; and we have been drifting along year after year with no program in view.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S ATTITUDE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like just to make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may properly do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The elaborate program that the Senator from Wisconsin has read was very carefully prepared, and was presented to the Committee on the Judiciary. The acting chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, representing the majority of that committee, informed the minority members of the subcommittee which had presented this program and had worked it out—it was worked out by the minority members under the Weeks resolution—that no action would be taken, no action would be necessary to be taken, because the President of the United States was vested with the power to do these things under the so-called Overman Act. That was the attitude taken by the majority; and then the President of the United States was not able to look out for this essential interest of the people at home at the present time, because he was engaged in Europe in formulating the terms of a league for the future peace of the world!

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; if I may do so.

Mr. OWEN. I think it is true that the members of the Cabinet to a certain extent have been engaged in trying to work out some of the plans of employing labor, and also the proposition to arrange for the lands for soldiers, and things of that sort; but I think the duty of Congress is very obvious in the matter and that Congress ought to give the brains of the representatives sent by the people to this body and to the other part of Congress, so that a legislative program should be worked out that would have the cordial sympathy and support of the representatives of the people on the floor of Congress. I think that is essential to the real success of the plan.

CONSTITUTION SHOULD BE AMENDED.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I quite agree with the Senator; and I will say that the peculiar dilemma in which Congress and the country find themselves has suggested to me the importance of an amendment to our Constitution that should broaden the convening power. I would leave it with the President to convene Congress in extraordinary session as he does now, but I believe that there ought to be a change in the Constitution that would enable Congress to convene itself. There may come a time when the very existence of the Government itself will depend upon the exercise of that power, under authority conferred by the Constitution upon Congress itself. The Congress is coordinate in its power, coequal with and independent of the Executive under the Constitution. Why, then, should it be dependent upon the will of one man as to whether it may be called here to do vital work in the way of legislation? True, its legislation is in a measure dependent upon and subject to the Executive will, through the veto power; but it still has the power to pass its will over the head of the Executive by a two-thirds vote, and in any important and critical matter there would be no question but that the vote necessary to protect the country in an hour of dire peril would be forthcoming to override the Executive.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think the Senator is well within the truth to say that Congress is at least equal with the Executive. The fact is that Congress can remove the Executive and the Executive can not remove Congress, and that need not be entirely overlooked. The great powers of the country are in Congress, and the Executive discharges his duty when he performs the legislative will of Congress as expressed in the laws of the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the theory of our Government.

Mr. OWEN. That is the theory of government, and that is the principle upon which this Government was founded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true.

Mr. OWEN. This is a democracy, and the power comes from the people to the Congress and comes from the people to the Executive as well, but the people also have put in the hands of Congress the control of the law-making power, to regulate its affairs year by year and season by season, and to change the laws as the Congress finds judicious. Of course, that carries with it the consent of the Executive, but even that consent may be overruled by the Congress. So far as the relative powers are concerned the greater power will be found in the Congress.

I think that the representatives of the people, whether executive or legislative, should sympathetically cooperate with each other in a spirit of cordiality and in a spirit of common counsel, and that is what I meant to say when I said I was prepared to refuse consent where advice was not permitted between the legislative and Executive, because I think the dignity and the honor of Congress require it to assert its functions and not to permit itself to be denied the rights which were vested in it by the Constitution of the United States.

I think there is a very easy way for the advice of the Senate to be communicated to the Executive, and that is through the organization of the Senate and through its chosen committees. I think that the Executive should advise with the Senate, and the Senate should advise with the Executive. I think there ought to be a spirit of sincere and true cooperation between the two. I think that is the best way to serve the people of the United States, and that is the policy which I think ought to be followed.

SOLUTION PROPOSED—GIVE MORE POWER TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I quite agree with the Senator. I think, however, we have fallen away in more recent years from that practice. That was the earlier practice. I think it is a historical fact that President Washington sometimes came on the floor here to confer with Members of the Senate about legislative matters, not in a spirit of dictation but of comity and of accommodation, to arrive at an understanding.

But, not to prolong this discussion, to which the views of the Senator from Oklahoma have added interest, for I know he has been a close student of democracy—of real democracy—and has done a great deal to advance in an educational way progressive democratic ideas throughout the country, I shall proceed.

I remember now that when this discussion regarding the constitutional powers of the different departments of the Government turned me aside from my line of thought, I had been touching upon the program for constructive legislation which had been presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and in a resolution by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], which I had supposed originated with him, but which we are now advised by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] was the work of a committee that spent some time upon the subject.

It bears upon the face of it the impress of close, constructive thinking. It was such a program as should, it seems to me, have found ready and sympathetic response from the Senate and from the Executive; but instead, I regret to say that it was treated in a partisan spirit that destroyed all possibility of accomplishing anything for the time being.

What, sir, was the answer of the administration to that proposal? If I recall correctly, it was merely, in effect, to refer the whole matter to the President. Such a substitute resolution was presented by one of the administration Senators. As it proposed to refer the whole program of reconstruction to the President, the plan, of course, originated with the Executive.

Other Senators, sir, have presented resolutions or suggestions for a comprehensive program of legislation to meet the new demands of the time, showing that Members of the Senate were keenly alive to the situation even if the administration was not; but up to this hour nothing has been done. Instead, sir, we have the spectacle of the President calling together governors and mayors and local officials for a conference upon national problems which can only be dealt with by Congress, and which the Congress has shown itself not only willing to deal with, but ready and anxious to take up in any comprehensive way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator permit me to clear up what might possibly be a misunderstanding? I might have conveyed the impression that this schedule or program for reconstruction was framed by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. If I said that, it is not exactly correct. It was framed by three Republican Members of the Senate, who were designated through the Republican conference. Two of the members of the three were members of the Judiciary Committee, and they were put upon a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee to deal with that same general subject, and then they presented to the Judiciary Committee this program, with the result which I have already stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for the information upon that subject. It is of interest. I found the resolution in the RECORD and was led to believe that it originated with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the credit of taking the initiative. It was upon his resolution that this work was done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Sir, I can not conceive that any President, however alluring to his ambitions may be the opportunity of playing a great part in the affairs of other countries, can close his eyes to the dangers that are threatening his own land by depriving the people of the right given them under the Constitution to have all the help which the Congress can give them in this their greatest hour of stress and danger.

I sincerely hope the President will be persuaded to convene Congress in extraordinary session within the next 48 hours. There is a great work for Congress to do. I trust it may be called by the Executive to perform that great public service.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5566) for the relief of claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution stating that it is the earnest hope of the Congress of the United States of America that the peace conference now sitting in Paris, in passing upon the rights of various peoples, will favorably consider the claims of Ireland to the right of self-determination, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. HARVEY HELM, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5566. An act for the relief of the claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark.;

H. R. 10891. An act to amend and reenact an act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia;

H. R. 14516. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920;

H. R. 15796. An act to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder;

H. R. 14945. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 15462. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to put in the RECORD the Army and Navy appropriations which have been made by Congress since the year 1900, including the appropriations which have been prepared and are now on the Senate Calendar, to show the increase in the proposed appropriations above those of preceding years at a time when we are supposed to be entering into a period of universal peace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PENROSE. That, of course, does not include the elaborate naval program which has not been reached at this session.

Mr. WEEKS. It includes this year's naval appropriations.

The table referred to is as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE ARMY.

1900	$80,430,204.06
1901	114,220,095.55
1902	115,734,049.10
1903	91,730,136.41
1904	77,888,752.83
1905	77,070,300.88
1906	70,396,631.64
1907	71,817,165.08
1908	78,634,582.75
1909	95,382,247.61
1910	101,195,883.34
1911	95,440,567.55
1912	93,374,755.97
1913	90,958,712.98
1914	94,266,145.51
1915	101,019,212.50
1916	101,974,195.87
1917	267,596,530.10
1918	273,046,322.50
1919	824,708,521.88

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVY.

1900	$48,099,969.58
1901	65,140,916.67
1902	78,101,791.00
1903	78,856,363.13
1904	81,876,791.43
1905	97,505,140.94
1906	100,336,679.94
1907	102,091,670.27
1908	98,958,507.50
1909	122,663,885.47
1910	136,935,199.05
1911	131,350,854.38
1912	126,478,338.24
1913	123,225,007.76
1914	140,800,643.53
1915	144,868,716.61
1916	149,661,864.88
1917	313,300,555.84
1918	[1] 517,273,802.08
1919	[2] 1,238,282,968.56

PROPOSED RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate for only a moment.

One of the most important questions to come before the Senate at the next session of Congress is a modification of the railroad law. The Committee on Interstate Commerce have already had extended hearings. Among others who appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee was a committee representing the security holders of the railroads, known as The National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities. They had their hearing, and they have prepared a bill which expresses their views as to what action should be taken. They have requested me to introduce the bill for them, not with any expectation of its being acted on at this session of Congress, but with the idea that if it were introduced it could be circulated to show what their position is in reference to the matter.

The owners of railroad securities of this country number over 50,000,000, nearly one-half of our population. Thirty-three million of our people are holders of life insurance policies. The policies of insurance which they carry upon their lives for the benefit of those who are to come after them are secured by investments, one-quarter of which are bonds and other securities of the railroads. The savings banks have as their investments great amounts of railroad securities. Trust estates have large amounts, individuals, colleges, and fiduciary institutions generally own them, so in the aggregate a vast proportion of our population are greatly concerned in whatever affects the railroads that have issued at one time or another the seventeen to twenty billion dollars of securities that are thus owned.

These securities are very largely represented by the organization known as The National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities. This association, through its president, has presented to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce a plan, known as the "Warfield plan," for the return and regulation of the railroads. This plan is embodied in the bill I now offer, to be referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. This bill may be subject to alterations. My purpose in now offering it is that it may be printed so that the Members of Congress and the public may be informed on this all-important question, in view of its great importance to the country.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill at this time.

[1] 1918. The estimates of the Navy Department for 1918 amounted to $379,151,701.67, the Senate appropriated $535,637,802.08, and the law for that year carried a total appropriation of $517,273,802.08.

[2] 1919. In the estimates of the Secretary of the Navy for 1919, which were sent to the Congress on October 15, 1918, when the United States was still at war, the department asked for appropriations amounting to $2,644,307,046.05. Since the signing of the armistice the Secretary has revised his former estimates, and is now asking an appropriation of $975,903,621.28, which includes $200,000,000 for the construction of battleships, etc., being the first appropriation in a proposed three-year shipbuilding program, costing $600,000,000.

The bill (S. 5679) to supplement and amend existing laws relating to the regulation of commerce; to provide for the return of railroads under Federal control to their owners; for their subsequent regulation; to incorporate National Railways Association and to define its powers and duties; and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 5679) to supplement and amend existing laws relating to the regulation of commerce; to provide for the return of railroads under Federal control to their owners; for their subsequent regulation; to incorporate National Railways Association, and to define its powers and duties; and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, as amended June 29, 1906; April 13, 1908; June 18, 1910; February 17, 1917; March 2, 1917; May 29, 1917; and August 10, 1917, is hereby amended by adding the words "or through" immediately following the word "to" where the same appears before the words "any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia," so that the same will read "to or through any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia."

SEC. 2. That section 1 of said act to regulate commerce is hereby further amended by adding to that certain provision thereof, reading as follows: "Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property wholly within one State and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any State or Territory as aforesaid, nor shall they apply to the transmission of messages by telephone, telegraph, or cable wholly within one State and not transmitted to or from a foreign country or to any State or Territory as aforesaid," the following provision: "except to the extent provided herein or reasonably necessary or incidental to the purposes hereof."

SEC. 3. That said section 1 of said act to regulate commerce as amended (40 Stats. L., p. 272) is hereby further amended by striking out the words "during the war in which the United States is now engaged," following immediately after the words "that on and after the approval of this act any person or persons who shall" where the same occur in said amendment, and also by inserting immediately after the words "or aid in obstructing or retarding the orderly conduct or movement in the United States of interstate or foreign commerce, or the orderly make-up or movement or disposition of any train, or the movement or disposition of any locomotive, car, or other vehicle on any railroad or elsewhere in the United States engaged in interstate or foreign commerce," where the same appear in said section 1 as amended as aforesaid, the following additional clause: "or who, with intent to injure, interfere with, obstruct, or destroy any property, agency, or instrumentality employed or held for use in interstate commerce, shall injure or destroy or obstruct the use of same without lawful cause or excuse."

SEC. 4. That said section 1 of said act to regulate commerce as last amended is hereby amended by striking out all that certain paragraph relating to the authority of the President to direct that, during the continuance of the war, certain traffic be given preference in transportation, beginning with the clause: "That during the continuance of the war in which the United States is now engaged the President is authorized, if he finds it necessary for the national defense and security, to direct that such traffic or shipments of commodities as, in his judgment, may be essential to the national defense and security shall have preference or priority in transportation," and ending with the clause: "and if the transportation be for the Government of the United States, it shall be paid for currently or monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any funds not otherwise appropriated," and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That in time of war or of congestion of traffic, car shortage, or other emergency or public necessity, local or general, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be authorized to put in force and maintain embargoes, license or permit systems; to order the rerouting or diversion of traffic or to control or regulate traffic at its source, or otherwise, with such exemptions or priorities as the needs of the communities and of the carriers and the public welfare may demand; and this function may in whole or in part be performed by such agents or agencies as may be appointed for that purpose by and under the control and direction of the commission. It shall be the duty of all carriers subject to this act, and their officers, agents, or employees, to obey strictly and conform promptly to such orders, and failure knowingly and willfully to comply therewith, or to do or perform whatever is necessary to the prompt execution of such orders, shall render such carriers and their officers, agents, or employees responsible therefor guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable on conviction by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That said section 1 of said act to regulate commerce as amended is hereby further amended by adding immediately after the clause: "And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent telephone, telegraph, and cable companies from entering into contracts with common carriers, for the exchange of services," the following provision: "And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the commission from establishing or approving or changing such levels or bases of rates or charges, or such rates or charges as may be necessary to give effect to the full purposes of all of the provisions of this act."

SEC. 6. That said section 1 of said act as amended is hereby further amended by the insertion immediately after that provision of said act as amended to the effect that classifications, regulations, and practices must be just and reasonable, and immediately following the words "and every such unjust and unreasonable classification, regulation, and practice with reference to commerce between the States and with foreign countries is prohibited and declared to be unlawful," the following provisions: "And it is further made the duty of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to agree upon, establish, and observe, subject to the jurisdiction of the commission, just and reasonable divisions of rates with other carriers or such divisions as may be found by the commission to be reasonable and in the public interest under the principles defined by this act, and just and reasonable routings and practices in the conduct of their business as a carrier."

SEC. 7. That the provisions of section 1 of said act to regulate commerce relating to the giving of free passes and free transportation is hereby amended by inserting immediately after the words "except to its employees and their families, its officers, agents, surgeons, physicians, and attorneys at law," the following words: "to members of the Interstate Commerce Commission or its employees, officers, or agents, or the trustees, officers, members, employees, or agents of National Railways Association and regional commerce commissions created by this act, when such employees, officers, or agents are certified as eligible to receive transportation by the respective commissions or association, and while engaged in their official or public business."

SEC. 8. That section 3 of said act prohibiting undue or unreasonable preferences or advantages is hereby amended by the addition of the following provisions: "Or to initiate or observe within any State or States intrastate rates or charges, or any general level or bases of intrastate rates or charges appreciably or substantially below the rates or charges or level or bases of interstate rates or charges lawfully observed by such carrier for like and contemporaneous or comparable service in transportation in interstate commerce or a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. All such lower intrastate rates or bases of rates, with the exceptions hereinafter authorized, are hereby declared to discriminate against and unlawfully burden interstate commerce by reason of such relation without reference to the reasonableness per se of the respective rates or levels of rates, or any question of specific discrimination as against interstate points, localities, or individuals. All carriers subject to the provisions of this act are hereby required to remove such discrimination by adjustment of the interstate rates involved or by application to the commission, if necessary, for leave to adjust the intrastate rates working the discrimination. The commission shall have jurisdiction to require and shall be under the duty to require such burden upon interstate rates or charges, or levels of rates or charges, to be removed in all cases coming before it on application, petition, or review, or upon its own motion in which such burden shall be shown to exist. The commission may, if upon investigation it finds that the facts warrant such action, require the burden or discrimination upon interstate commerce to be removed by requiring any necessary basic or horizontal or percentage increases in intrastate rates or charges, applicable to all or any specific intrastate tariffs within the area involved, or by such specific or class or commodity or other rate increases as it may find necessary; or may order such general or specific adjustment as the commission may find necessary, to be carried into effect either by direct act of the carrier or carriers involved or by any board, commission, or authority, if any, having jurisdiction over the regulation of intrastate rates within the State where such burden or discrimination exists, subject to the approval of the commission: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the commission, in cases proper for its consideration and action, from permitting the observance of specific commodity or commuters' rates or fares or specific class or commodity or other special rates, fares, or charges which may be lower than the general level of interstate rates or charges under like or comparable conditions, particularly where directly beneficial to the public, such as in case of public roads materials or like commodities, or where reasonably necessary to the development or to avoid radical readjustment of rate fabrics or hardships that would tend to be destructive of the business or welfare of any region or community: Provided further, That in any such case the proposed special rates or the special rates under inquiry are not found by the commission to be unreasonably discriminatory as against specific localities, traffic, or individuals in respect to interstate commerce, and provided that the general level of intrastate rates in such State is found equivalent to or greater than the level of interstate rates applicable under substantially similar or comparable conditions, it being the intention of this proviso to leave to the several States jurisdiction, subject to the general supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, over the adjustment of intrastate rates within their respective jurisdictions, provided that the general level of intrastate rates therein is equivalent to or greater than the level of interstate rates applicable under substantially similar or comparable conditions and where the specific rates are reasonable per se under all of the circumstances, or consented to by the carrier, and are not found unduly discriminatory as against interstate commerce or as against localities, individuals, or particular descriptions of traffic in respect to the interstate rates and charges applicable thereto and not otherwise burdensome to commerce or the carriers engaged therein.

SEC. 9. That section 3 of said act to regulate commerce is hereby further amended by the addition, immediately after the words "but this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business," of the words: "unless required by the commission as provided by this act."

SEC. 10. That section 4 of said act as amended by act approved June 18, 1910, is hereby amended by the addition at the end of said section after the words "unless after hearing by the Interstate Commerce Commission it shall be found that such proposed increase rests upon changed conditions other than the elimination of water competition," of the additional words "or is compatible with the public interest as defined in this act or otherwise."

SEC. 11. That section 5 of said act as amended by an act approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended by inserting immediately before the first paragraph prohibiting the pooling of freight and division of earnings, and also immediately before the second paragraph thereof, prohibiting railroads from owning competing water carriers in certain cases, the following words: "except as otherwise provided or authorized in this act"; also by inserting the same provision immediately before the last paragraph of said section 5, as amended, prohibiting operations in coastwise or foreign trade under certain circumstances; also by striking out of said section 5, as amended, all of those certain second and third paragraphs, providing that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine questions of fact as to competition and make orders therefor and permit certain operations by water lines where the service is in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and by substituting in lieu thereof the following provisions: "Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the commission, on application of any carrier or party in interest, to determine, after hearing, questions of facts as to the competition or possibility of competition between carriers by rail or water, or both, and whether or not such actual or potential competition as may be found to exist tends to further or obstruct the public interest in the matter of assured and adequate service at just and reasonable rates and whether such public interest would be subserved or hindered by acts prohibited in this section or by other statutes to prevent combinations in restraint of trade or by the common law. Application may be filed for the purpose of having the question determined whether any existing or proposed service, act, or practice is incompatible with the public interest. The commission may upon its own motion or upon application of any carrier or shipper, or of any State, or of the United States, institute proceedings to inquire into any contract, agreement, combination, act, or practice of any carrier subject to the provisions of this act or into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the questions of fact determined as herein provided. In determining that the contract, agreement, combination, act, or practice under investigation is in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people the commission may limit its findings or subject its conclusion to such conditions as the facts warrant.

"When any carrier subject to the provisions of this act, conceiving that the same is compatible with the public interest, shall desire to enter upon any contract, combination, agreement, or consolidation, or to purchase, sell, or lease any property to be employed in whole or in part in interstate commerce, or relating to or in aid of its business as a carrier in such commerce under circumstances prohibited by the terms of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' or by the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' or by the act approved October 15, 1914, entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' or by the provisions of any other acts of Congress amending or supplementing the said acts or sections or prohibited by the general law enforced in the courts of the United States or by the laws or decisions of the courts of any State, such carrier may file its application with the commission for a hearing and determination of the question whether, and the terms and conditions, if any, upon which said proposed contract, combination, agreement, consolidation, purchase, sale, or lease is or may be in the interest of the public and of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people. And any such inquiry may be instituted by the commission on its own motion or on the application of the United States or of any subordinate or other agency acting under authority of the United States, or of any State, or by any person interested.

"The commission shall give due notice of any hearing provided by this section to the immediate parties in interest, and also to the governor or attorney general or presiding officer or secretary of the board or commission, if any, having jurisdiction over regulation of railway rates in each State in which such proposed contract, combination, agreement, or consolidation shall be directly effective or in which all or any part of the property (if real estate, franchises, right of way, or right of trackage or leasehold) is situated, and to the Attorney General of the United States and to such other persons interested, to be given by publication or otherwise as the commission may prescribe by rules of practice or specific order; but the failure to give such notice shall not oust the commission of jurisdiction to determine the question if it shall be made to appear that full hearing or investigation was had upon the matter.

"If the commission shall, after such hearing or investigation, determine that such proposed act, practice, contract, combination, agreement, consolidation, purchase, or sale is compatible with the public interest within the meaning of this act and of this section, it shall render its finding to that effect and define the time, terms, or conditions, if any, upon which its finding is based or limited. Such finding shall be subject to suspension or review as other judgments of the commission; but if the same shall not be suspended, annulled, or restrained by a court having jurisdiction, the proposed act, practice, contract, combination, agreement, consolidation, purchase, sale, or lease, to the extent and upon the conditions found by the commission to be compatible with the public interest, shall not be unlawful, punishable, or actionable if entered into, done, or held by the parties contemplated by such finding, either as to such parties, or their privies, or their respective successors, any statute, law, or decision of any State or of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

"The several acts of Congress and sections of acts hereinabove referred to (approved July 2, 1890; Aug. 27, 1894; and Oct. 15, 1914, respectively), and all other acts amending or supplementing said acts and sections, are hereby amended so that the same shall not apply to or make unlawful, punishable, or actionable any act which may be found to be compatible with the public interest as herein contemplated. Any carrier subject to the provisions of this act which is or may be otherwise lawfully authorized under the laws of the United States and of the several States in which it does business is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into, perform, and hold any act, practice, contract, combination, agreement, consolidation, purchase, sale, lease, or property which would be unlawful but for the finding and approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission when and as contemplated by this section, and shall not be ousted or penalized by reason of such act.

"The fact that by reason of an adverse decision by the commission or its failure to act upon the questions, any act, practice, contract, combination, agreement, consolidation, purchase, sale, or lease proposed or entered into by any carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall not by the commission be found compatible with the public interest or shall be pronounced incompatible with the public interest, shall not have the effect of an adjudication conclusive in any civil or criminal proceeding that the same is or will be unlawful or in violation of any of the acts of Congress above mentioned in this section or of any other law, except in so far as such finding may constitute a valid order affirmatively binding upon the parties to whom it may be directed by virtue of some other section of this act."

SEC. 12. That section 15 of said act to regulate commerce, as amended by act approved June 29, 1906, June 18, 1910, and August 9, 1917, is hereby amended by striking out the words "the commission shall be of the opinion that any individual or joint rates or charges whatsoever" and by substituting in lieu thereof the following: "The commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rates or charges or divisions of rates, or any level or bases of rates or charges or class of rates whatsoever"; also by adding immediately after the words "or unjust or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of the provisions of this act," the words "or is not compatible with the public interest or with the reasonable support and regulation of the commerce of the United States or is insufficient to assure adequate and continuous transportation service and facilities to the public, the commission is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to determine and prescribe what will be just, reasonable, and adequate individual or joint rate or rates, charge or charges, or levels or bases of rates or classes of rates, or divisions, to be thereafter observed in such case as the maximum or minimum or fixed or proportionate rates, charges, or divisions to be charged, and what individual or joint classification regulation or practice is just, fair, and reasonable to be thereafter followed, and to make and order that the carrier or carriers shall cease and desist from any violation of this act or any practice found unjust, unfair, unreasonable, or not in the interest of the public and of the commerce of the United States, to the extent to which the commission finds the same to exist and to be incompatible with the public interest; and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate or charge for such transportation or transmission other than the rate or level of rates or charges so prescribed or permitted, or in excess of the maximum or less than the minimum so prescribed, as the case may be.

SEC. 13. That said section 15 of said act is further amended so that that provision of said section 15, which reads as follows: "the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate or rates, or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case as the maximum to be charged," shall be amended so as to read as follows: "the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate or rates, charge or charges, or divisions, or levels, or bases of rates, or class of rates to be thereafter observed," and by striking out the word "maximum" where the same appears in said provision of said section 15 hereinabove amended or elsewhere in the same paragraph, and by adding immediately after the end of said paragraph of said section 15 hereinabove amended, immediately following the provision authorizing the commission to make orders prescribing just and reasonable proportions or divisions in the absence of agreement between the carriers, the following provision: "and the commission may after hearing at any time make an order changing or prescribing the just and reasonable proportion of such rate to be received by such carrier party thereto, even in cases where the carriers may have agreed on the matter, if the commission finds that the division agreed upon is not fair or reasonable and for the public interest or that a change of the proportion agreed on is proper or necessary to carry out any of the purposes of this act and is conformable to law."

SEC. 14. That it is hereby declared to be reasonably necessary to the relinquishment of Federal control of railroads under the Federal control act approved March 21, 1918, without destructive effect upon the railroads and the commerce of the United States or without forcing radical reduction in wages, that rates and charges observed by carriers subject to this act and in effect at the beginning of Federal control, whether interstate or intrastate, should not be automatically restored or become effective as a result of the relinquishment of Federal control without due hearing and consideration of their relation to the rates or general level of rates necessary to sustain and avoid burdening the commerce of the United States, and to their effect upon the carriers subject to this act, in view of the inadequacy of normal legal remedies and procedure. To prevent such result it is hereby required that on or before the relinquishment of the railroads from Federal control and operation to their respective owners under and within the period provided by the act known as the Federal control act approved March 21, 1918, or as may be provided by any other act of Congress, the President through the Director General of Railroads or other agency employed by him in the operation of said railroads shall see that the rates and charges determined, established, and observed during Federal control, both interstate and intrastate, in effect at the time of the relinquishment of Federal control shall be on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, in the cases of changes made in the intrastate rates or tariffs in effect at the beginning of Federal control, that notice thereof shall be filed or lodged with or tendered to the commissions or other authorities of the respective States having ordinary jurisdiction over intrastate rates, if any; and the rates and charges in effect immediately before the time of such relinquishment shall, subject to such changes as may from time to time be made by or with the approval of the commission, constitute the lawful rates and charges to be observed by the carriers subject to this act, any State or local statute, rule, or regulation to the contrary notwithstanding, for not less than one year after the relinquishment of Federal control and until the Interstate Commerce Commission shall on its own motion or on application by any State authority or other persons interested find and declare that it is incompatible with the successful and orderly operations of the carriers in interstate commerce and is in the interest of the public for the resumption of normal processes in the making and taking effect of rates.

Pending such determination by the commission the several States may, after relinquishment of Federal control and before the declaration by the commission hereby authorized, declare or propose changes in such intrastate rates or charges effective at the termination of Federal control, or may proceed with hearings as to the same and make findings and orders as in ordinary cases, subject to the right of any carrier subject to this act and affected thereby to object thereto, if lower than the rates hereby declared lawful, by filing application for suspension with the commission within 30 days from the effective date of any statute, order, or ruling of such State reducing any rate or change in effect at the time of the relinquishment of Federal control, whereupon the same shall be and remain suspended until heard and determined by the commission or until the remission to the States of their normal authority, subject to this act, over intrastate rates and charges; but any statute, order, or ruling of any State in effect at the time of the relinquishment of Federal control fixing or establishing any rate of charge lower than or inconsistent with the intrastate rates or charges scheduled and charged or observed by the Director General of Railroads as to carriers subject to this act immediately before the termination of Federal control are hereby declared null and void to the extent of their conflict with this act.

The Interstate Commerce Commission shall, as promptly as possible, and not later than one year after relinquishment of Federal control, put into effect the general adjustments of interstate rates and relations between interstate and intrastate rates contemplated by this act, and by order declare when the national emergency and when the welfare of the interstate commerce of the United States justifies the remission to the several States of their normal jurisdiction, initiative, and effect, in the matter of intrastate rates of carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and may accompany or supplement such declaration with and must from time to time thereafter promulgate such specific findings, orders, rulings, or regulations as it may, on investigation or hearing, find necessary to preserve a just relation between the level of interstate and intrastate fares, rates, and charges applicable under substantially similar or comparable conditions or necessary to protect interstate commerce and localities, individuals, and particular classes of traffic from specific unjust discriminations or burdens in respect to interstate commerce.

SEC. 15. That that provision of section 15 of said act to regulate commerce as amended, providing that the commission may establish through routes and joint rates and classifications, and reading as follows: "The commission may also, after hearing, on a complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, establish through routes and joint classifications, and may establish joint rates as the maximum to be charged, and may prescribe the division of such rates as herein above provided and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated, whenever the carriers themselves shall have refused or neglected to establish voluntarily such through routes or joint classifications or joint rates," is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "The commission may also, after hearing, on a complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, establish through routes and joint classifications, and may establish joint rates as the maximum or minimum fixed rate to be charged, and may prescribe the division of such rates as herein above provided and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated whenever such action may be found in the public interest."

SEC. 16. That said section 15 of said act is hereby further amended by the addition immediately after the words "unless to do so would make such through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established," where the same appears in the paragraph limiting the power of the commission to prescribe through routes, the following additional provision: "or unless otherwise desirable in the public interest, as where a choice of routes is available and revenue from the longer haul is not required by the carrier involved to enable it to earn a fair and reasonable return upon its property investment, but additional revenue is desirable for the other railroad involved to enable it to earn a fair and reasonable return, or otherwise in the public interest."

That said section 15 is hereby further amended by striking out the proviso thereto to the effect that in case where there exist two or more through routes the shippers shall have the right to select the route were competing lines of railroads constitute portions of all routes, and by substituting in lieu thereof the following: Provided, however, That whenever the routing specified in a bill of lading or other shipping instruction is changed in accordance with the preceding provision, the rates, rules, and privileges applying at the time of shipment via the route lawfully chosen by the shipper shall be protected via the route over which such shipment may actually move."

SEC. 17. That said act to regulate commerce as amended is hereby further amended by the addition of the following section:

"SEC. 15a. That the commission shall, for the purpose of establishing rates that will more certainly sustain the transportation systems of the United States and enable them to render adequate service and pay reasonable wages, divide continental United States into rate-making districts, which it may change from time to time as may be found necessary, and shall be governed by the principles laid down in this act in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

"The commission may allocate the different railroads or systems to any one of the districts in which they may be situated or divide them or their equipment among one or more districts, or make such other adjustments as may be found desirable to accomplish the result intended by this act.

"In anticipation of the return of the railroads now under Federal control to their owners, or as soon after such return as practicable, the commission shall establish and shall thereafter maintain in effect, as nearly as may be, such rates for freight and passengers or such levels or bases of rates as will produce a reasonably assured rate of return upon the property investments of the several carriers subject to this act, as provided herein, making such orders as may be necessary to require the intrastate rates or levels or bases of rates in effect within the several States to conform to the level or bases of interstate rates most nearly comparable and to bear their just proportion in sustaining the commerce of the United States.

"The commission shall, as nearly as may be, establish and maintain freight and passenger rates, or levels of rates or charges in each rate-making district that will enable the carriers as a whole in each district and subject to this act, to earn an annual net railway operating income equal to not less than 6 per cent on the combined property investment account, determined in accordance with the accounting regulations of the commission, or such greater rate of return thereon as the commission may find to be reasonable or necessary in the public interest.

"It being impracticable to establish a level of uniform rates and charges within competitive areas which will sustain sundry carriers indispensable to the communities served by them, without enabling more favorably situated carriers to receive revenue from such rates, negligibly as to each service, but in the aggregate substantially and unreasonably in excess of the aggregate over a fair return upon its property, unless regulated in the interest of the commerce of the United States as a whole, it is hereby provided that, subject to the exceptions and conditions of this act, no carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall be authorized to receive and retain for the transportation services rendered such proportion of the rates and charges collected by it as may yield in the aggregate more than a reasonable return upon its property investment.

"The rate of 6 per cent per annum is hereby fixed as the maximum reasonable rate of return upon property employed in the public use by railroad carriers subject to this act, subject to the adjustments and the allowances in addition to 6 per cent herein provided, and subject to the right of any carrier to have recourse to the commission and the courts in proper cases within their respective jurisdictions in the assertion of the right to receive a greater rate of return or to retain a greater percentage of its earnings than herein stipulated.

"Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as requiring the commission to establish rates or levels of rates which will enable all carriers subject to the act to earn 6 per cent per annum on their respective property investments or as asserting that any carrier is entitled to more than a reasonable rate of return for each service performed notwithstanding that the aggegate of such returns may not produce operating income equivalent to 6 per cent on the property investment; but the commission is hereby directed to establish and maintain from time to time rate structures in the several regions that will enable the railroad carriers in each region, as a whole, to earn an aggregate net operating income equal to not less than 6 per cent upon their combined property investment, such aggregate rate of return being hereby declared the minimum required by the carriers, as a whole, to sustain their credit and service.

"The provisions of this section shall not be construed as depriving shippers of their right to reparation in case of overcharges, unlawfully excessive or discriminatory rates, or rates excessive in their relation to other comparable rates, but no shipper shall be entitled to recover upon the ground that or to the extent that particular rates may reflect a proportion of exeess earnings produced and to be recaptured in the public interest under the provisions of this act.

"The commission shall prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for the recapture and application in the public interest of the earnings of the respective carriers subject to this act in excess of the allowance to be permitted under the conditions provided herein, added to 6 per cent per annum upon the property investment account, or of such greater return as may in particular cases be found necessary to allow a reasonable return on the property investment. To that end the commission may define fiscal years, require such security or accountings, or prescribe such reasonable conditions as it may find necessary.

"Whenever two or more carriers are united or owned in one interest through the ownership by one of 90 per cent or more of the stock of the other or others, or are otherwise combined, they shall be considered and treated as one carrier in applying the provision of this section as to excess earnings and their accounts combined if they report separately to the commission.

"The process of recapture is hereinafter referred to as excess-earnings reduction. The fund so produced is referred to as the excess-earnings fund. The rate of reasonable return upon property investment account, whether 6 per cent per annum, as fixed by this act, or whether established at a greater rate after hearing at the instance of any particular carrier, will be referred to in this act as the standard return.

"Any carrier earning more than the standard return in any fiscal year shall be permitted to retain for such lawful use or disposition as it may determine one-third of such excess.

"In addition to such one-third carriers receiving excess earnings may be permitted, under the direction of and in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the commission and when and to the extent found desirable in the public interest, to set up and maintain on their books, before the excess-earnings reduction shall apply, such corporate reserves as a margin of safety for the protection of their credit, or for working capital or otherwise in the public interest, as may be found desirable by the commission.

"And the commission may, in its discretion and when deemed desirable in the public interest, cause to be set up out of operating income, either upon the books of the railroads or by payment into and administration of the excess-earnings fund, a reserve as a margin of safety against carrier losses due to acts of God or other extraordinary contingencies wherever occurring in the United States, to be used for no other purpose and to be set up, not out of the revenue to which the carrier is entitled as of right to retain, but only to the extent that additional provision and allowance may have been made by the commission for that purpose in establishing the base rates necessary to produce the minimum return on the property investment of carriers in the several regions. Where the reserves thus produced shall exceed the amounts found necessary from time to time, the base rate may be adjusted accordingly or the excess may be required to be paid generally into the excess-earnings fund.

"The excess earnings over the standard return and such allowances in addition thereto as may be authorized pursuant to this act shall be paid over by each carrier earning the same into the excess-earnings fund, under the regulations to be prescribed by the commission, to be employed or expended under its direction in the public interest as herein authorized.

"The excess-earnings fund shall, to the extent of not exceeding one-half thereof, be employed, invested, or expended so as to secure to meritorious or faithful employees of the carriers within the several and respective regional districts from which such excess earnings may be paid into the fund, or their actual dependents, the benefits of profit sharing, pensions, or insurance, whether life, accident, sickness, or other form, as may be found most practicable and beneficial; and the commission is authorized to prescribe such conditions, restrictions, and regulations for the application of said fund for the purposes authorized by this paragraph and to employ such agencies in administering the same as it may find reasonable and proper and as the size or condition thereof from time to time may warrant; all expenses thereof to be paid out of the portion of the fund applicable to such use, and not otherwise.

"The remainder of such excess-earnings fund and the usufruct therefrom and accumulations thereof shall constitute a revolving fund, the special property of the United States, to be employed, invested, loaned, or expended by or under the direction and subject to the control of the commission in furtherance of the public interest and of the railway commerce of the United States either by way of loans to carriers subject to this act or by way of purchase, lease, or rental of motive power, cars, or necessary facilities or equipment or otherwise, upon such terms as may be found desirable to avoid congestion, interruptions, or hindrances to the railway service of the United States by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce or to further the public service thereof.

"In the administration of such fund the commission may make use of such agencies as it may deem proper and may delegate so much of its ministerial functions relating thereto as it may find expedient, subject to the supervision and direction of the commission and to such regulations as it may prescribe in the premises; but during the existence of the National Railways Association created by this act the latter shall have the administration of said fund as provided herein. Any misappropriation of said fund or any part thereof or of any property into which the same may be converted, and any wrong, destruction, or hindrance done to any property in which it may be invested or the use thereof shall constitute an offense of the same character and be punishable under the same circumstances and to the same extent as in the case of other moneys or properties constituting general property of the United States.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby vested with plenary authority and power, to the full extent of the power of Congress to authorize or delegate the same, to make such extraordinary or horizontal rate adjustments of general application or such adjustment applicable to any class or commodity within any State, area, or district which may be ascertained and defined by the commission, or otherwise as it may find necessary, reasonable, and proper to sustain without interruption or disorganization the railway commerce of the United States during the period of transition following the relinquishment of Federal control or to meet any emergency which may thereafter arise, or in any emergency endangering the public interest or convenience or any national emergency; maintaining as far as compatible with the public interest the general relations of rates contemplated by this act; and, for the purposes stated, it may, with the consent of any carrier involved, assist, direct, or conduct its operations and properties in whole or in part, but without any liability, responsibility, or obligation upon the commission or the United States, other than as a charge against the operation, and may exercise such powers either directly or through any proper agency, under the direction of the commission, as it may determine or as may otherwise be provided by law.

"The commission shall, as promptly after the passage of this act as practicable and in anticipation of the relinquishment of Federal control, prepare for the adjustment of rates on the general basis directed by this act, and shall inaugurate the same as promptly after Federal control as the conditions warrant. The commission is affirmatively charged with responsibility to see to it that the carriers subject to this act shall be accorded rates or general levels of rates in the different rate-making districts to enable them as a whole to earn a rate of return not less in any event in the aggregate than the standard rate of return as defined in this section.

"If it should prove, upon investigation or hearing by the commission, that the rates and charges or levels of rates and charges in effect from time to time do not provide or more than provide for the reasonable minimum return on the consolidated property investment accounts of the carriers as contemplated by this act, such rates and charges or levels of rates and charges shall be adjusted accordingly; but if the commission shall find that it is to the public interest that a larger excess-earnings fund should be realized than is provided under the level of rates existing at any time, the commission shall be empowered to adjust the level accordingly."

SEC. 18. That in order to obtain new money for capital expenditures or for refunding the commission shall have authority, where such expenditure or refunding has a direct relation to interstate commerce, to consent to the sale of stock and other securities of any carrier at such discount and at such rates of dividends or interest as may be found necessary and in the public interest. If the commission shall find such procedure reasonably necessary in order to enable any carrier to secure the funds for such purpose, it may set up on the property account of the carrier, but for the sole purpose of making rates and determining excess-earnings reduction under this act such amount as the commission may find necessary or desirable in the public interest.

SEC. 19. That the commission shall also prescribe and promulgate such reasonable restrictions upon additions, betterments, extensions, new construction, or purchases, additional stations or service by carriers subject to the provisions of this act as it may find necessary in order to prevent undue burdens, duplication, or wasteful competition from being imposed upon interstate operations, and may require such reasonable notice of proposed extensions as it may prescribe; and may order the same suspended pending investigation or where incompatible with the public interest as involving the unnecessary duplication of facilities in interstate commerce or likely to result in no benefit to the public or to the carrier reasonably commensurate with the cost thereof, or unduly interfering with or inflating the interstate rate basis defined by this act; and, in like manner, the commission shall have the authority to prescribe, promulgate, and enforce compliance with reasonable rules and regulations to prevent the issue, by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, of securities or obligations, secured or unsecured, on terms that are unreasonably wasteful or improvident or for purposes incompatible with the public interest as above defined.

Upon compliance with the provisions of this section, and with any order of the commission in the particular case, or with any lawful act of Congress relating to the issue of securities by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, which may hereafter be enacted, any carrier railroad corporation subject to the act to regulate commerce shall be authorized to issue and dispose of any stocks or bonds or other evidence of interest in and indebtedness of such carrier or assume any obligation or to execute any lien upon its properties then owned or thereafter acquired and to expend the proceeds of any securities as aforesaid, if otherwise conformable to law without further findings as to compatability with the public interest.

Any carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall have full power and authority to enter into, execute, and perform any agreement, contract, act, combination, consolidation, sale, or lease, or to acquire or construct any addition, betterment, extension, improvement, or to issue or acquire or sell any security or incur any obligation and to use and employ the same or the proceeds thereof in the course of its business as a carrier, without incurring any penalty or being held to violate any statute or rule of decision of any State or of the United States on the grounds that competition may thereby be lessened or eliminated, commerce be restrained, or monopoly be created; where the same shall after hearing have been found by the commission to be affirmatively in the public interest to facilitate interstate commerce, to prevent unnecessary additions to property investment of carriers, or to avoid unnecessary duplication of facilities.

SEC. 20. That the commission may, subject to such reasonable rules and regulations as it may prescribe, delegate the preliminary hearing or investigation or the taking of testimony or the original determination of any matters intrusted to it under this act to subordinate or supplementary Federal commissions, tribunals, or agencies which may be vested with authority to act in such matters or to the commissions or authorities having jurisdiction over rates or similar matters under the laws of the several States interested in any question before or under inquiry by the commission or arising under this act; and shall, if found practicable and in the interest of harmonizing and coordinating the work and jurisdiction of the State and Federal authorities by orders in specific cases, or by general rules and regulations, provide for initial hearing or for the taking or perpetuation of testimony or for recommendations and findings by such State commissions or other State authorities or members thereof, sitting alone or in conjunction with the Interstate Commerce Commission or any Federal regional commission or members thereof, and the commission is hereby required to introduce such procedure as it may find practicable to coordinate the work, service, and jurisdiction of State and Federal authorities in furtherance of their common service in the public interest and to the end that matters of local or limited or regional interest falling within the jurisdiction of the commission or matters involving possible controversies between Federal or State authorities or matters deemed capable of solution by such procedure may be determined or reconciled upon a single record; but in any such case there shall exist a right in any person or party who would have the right under this act to be heard if the matter were heard originally or exclusively by the commission, to review the same by application to the commission within a reasonable time, not less than 30 days, to be fixed by the commission.

In the absence of any review before the commission within the time fixed or of suspension by decree, interlocutory or otherwise, of any court having jurisdiction, the finding and determination at such preliminary hearing shall be lawful and effective to all intents and purposes as if made by the commission, and shall be subject to review or suspension only to the extent and under the same circumstances as like orders or judgments of the commission; and all such commissions or other authorities qualified to act in such general matters within such State under the State laws are hereby vested with authority to act under the supervision of and subject to review by the commission to the extent that authority may be delegated by the commission and in accordance with this act.

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as restricting any lawful right of the commission, in order to expedite the performance of its duties, to perform any ministerial or other delegable act required of it by law through employees, examiners, subordinate Federal commissions, State authorities, or otherwise, as it may find expedient and consistent with the purpose of this act.

SEC. 21. That when, under license or revocable or other temporary or terminable right or agreement, any carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall have constructed, established, or maintained a facility or service in interstate commerce essentially permanent in its nature or of such character as to give rise to a reasonable public necessity for the continuation thereof, such carrier or any State or person interested may, before or after the termination of the temporary right or easement or before or after the termination or threatened termination of the service or proposed or threatened withdrawal from its public uses of the property or facilities involved, apply to the commission for an order, and the commission shall have authority to make an order requiring or authorizing the carrier whose service has been or is to be discontinued to continue the same upon such terms and conditions and for such compensation, payable or secured, as the commission after notice and hearing to such carrier and to the owner or proprietor of the property or easement to be subjected to the continuation of such use or service may determine; or the commission may, after defining the nature and extent of the easement and the service or joint or concurrent use to be extended and in the absence of agreement between the carrier and the owner or proprietor of the property to be subjected to the easement, authorize, or require such carrier to proceed by condemnation, in which event such carrier shall forthwith institute and prosecute condemnation proceedings either pursuant to the laws of the State or States having jurisdiction in the premises or in the district courts of the United States under the direct authority of this act, and shall pending the determination thereof be entitled to an injunction, on ordinary equitable principles, if necessary to restrain interferences with the public service, and on such terms as the court may prescribe. On securing an order of condemnation the same shall be complied with and the service continued unless the commission shall find the award or awards unreasonable or not justified in the public interest and relieve such carrier from proceeding with the same.

SEC. 22. That whenever the commission, upon investigation on its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that the joint use by any carriers of any facilities of transportation is necessary or desirable in the public interest to facilitate commerce, the commission shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered by order to require the carriers to enter into such joint use upon such terms as may be agreed between them, and upon failure of the carriers so to agree within the time specified in such order, the commission may enter an order fixing the measure of service or use to be granted by the owner of the facilities and the just compensation to be paid for such service or use. Such joint use may be through union depot or terminal or other companies, approved by the commission as affording the best means of utilizing the properties of two or more carriers to facilitate commerce; and in such case the commission may, by order, fix the fair relative interest and representation of each carrier in the subsidiary company upon failure of the carriers to agree. If the compensation fixed by the commission shall not be acquiesced in by either party in interest the commission shall be authorized to require the carrier required to inaugurate or join in the proposed service to proceed by condemnation to secure the easement, conditioned or limited as fixed by the commission, in the appropriate district court of the United States, under direct authority of the act, to acquire such easement or have the just compensation determined. On securing an order of condemnation the same shall be complied with and the service inaugurated and continued unless the commission shall find the award or awards unreasonable or not justified and in the public intrest grant relief from its order.

In all cases covered by the last foregoing section or by this section the commission shall have authority from time to time to make and enforce all such orders, rules, and regulations as may be reasonable and in the interest of the interstate commerce of the United States.

REGIONAL COMMERCE COMMISSIONS.

SEC. 23. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall define and shall have authority to change from time to time, as may be found by it desirable in the public interest, not less than six regulatory areas or districts which shall be known as regional districts, which need not necessarily conincide with the rate-making districts above referred to in section 15 of this act. Until more definitely defined or changed by the commission the United States shall be divided into the following regional districts:

Trunk line and New England: Being the territory east of a line drawn through Buffalo and Pittsburgh and north of the Potomac River. (This territory might be divided into two districts.)

Central freight: Being the territory west of a line drawn through Buffalo and Pittsburgh and north of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi River and south of the Illinois-Wisconsin line, including the southern peninsula of Michigan.

Southern: Being the territory south of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers and east of the Mississippi.

Western trunk line: Being the territory north of a line drawn from St. Louis through Kansas City to the Rocky Mountains and east of a north and south line to the Canadian boundary.

Southwestern: Being the territory west of the Mississippi River and south of a line drawn from St. Louis through Kansas City to the Rocky Mountains, and thence south to the Mexican boundary.

Pacific-Intermountain: Being the territory west of a north and south line through Denver, Colo.

SEC. 24. That there is hereby created and established for each regional district a commission to be known as the Regional Commerce Commission, preceded by the geographical term descriptive of each region, to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the regional commerce commissions being referred to herein as the regional commissions and the Interstate Commerce Commission as the commission. Each regional commission shall be composed of three members, who shall be native citizens of the United States and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the residents of such district, not more than two of whom shall be appointed from the same political party, and provided that not more than nine of the members of all of the regional commissions shall be appointed from the same political party. The regional commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for the term of two, four, and six years, respectively, from the 1st day of January, 1919, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and the acts amendatory thereof, or owning stocks or bonds thereof, or who is in any way pecuniarily interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office. Said regional commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. No vacancy in any regional commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of such regional commission. Each regional commissioner shall receive $7,500 compensation per annum, payable monthly. Each regional commission shall have a secretary, who shall receive $3,500 per annum, payable monthly.

SEC. 25. That the regional commissions shall have authority to exercise within their respective regional districts concurrent jurisdiction with the Interstate Commerce Commission over questions wholly or partly within such districts subject to such rules and regulations as may and are hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to the extent that the same may be delegated or assigned to such regional commission by the Interstate Commerce Commission for hearing, investigation, report, or other action, by general or specific order or regulation, but subject to review by the Interstate Commerce Commission on petition or application by any party in interest or on motion of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The regional commissions shall also have original jurisdiction, concurrently with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and subject to review at all times by the latter and to such reasonable rules and regulations as the latter may prescribe to prevent and avoid or reconcile duplication of effort and conflicts, over the initiation, change, and adjustment of specific rates, fares, charges, service, routing, or practices of the carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce within their respective regions, where the matter involved is effective wholly or to the greater extent within such region or, in cases where two or more regions are equally or generally involved, where the matter has been especially referred for investigation, determination, or other action by the commission. In the case of matters involving possible conflicts or contemporaneous hearings of the same questions, any party in interest or the regional commission may apply or suggest to the commission that the hearings should be consolidated or the one or the other suspended or the whole matter or any features thereof taken up directly and originally by the commission or withdrawn from further consideration by or referred exclusively to either regional commission or for joint hearing by all or any of the regional commissions. The commission shall have full authority to enter orders or make orders, rules, and regulations in all such matters to avoid conflict or duplication of effort or unnecessary expense or inconvenience to the carriers or the public.

SEC. 26. That all questions or causes referred to the regional commissions for investigation and decision or action shall be heard and determined or acted upon as promptly as may be, and the findings of the regional commissioner in such cases and all final orders in all cases in which they have original jurisdiction shall be filed immediately with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Such findings shall be subject to review by the Interstate Commerce Commission at the instance of any party who appeared before the regional commission or who may be permitted to intervene for the purpose of exception and appeal, either by the regional commission or Interstate Commerce Commission, at any time within 30 days, or within such extended time as may be allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission by order in such cause, by filing notice to that effect, either with the regional commission or with the Interstate Commerce Commission, whereupon the entire record and testimony taken before the regional commission shall be transmitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the finding and order of the regional commission shall be reviewed and the question or matter determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The commission shall prescribe such reasonable rules and procedure as it may find necessary for prompt and orderly hearing and proceedings before the regional commissions and commissioners and for notifying and bringing in necessary or desirable parties, permitting intervention.

On review by the commission the matter may be heard or reviewed on the record and testimony before the regional commission, but for good cause shown, on motion of any party in interest or on motion of the commission, additional testimony may be heard or ordered to be taken or the whole matter heard de novo.

Where no appeal is taken from the order or finding or decision of the regional commission the same shall be effective to all intents and purposes as an order, finding, or decision of the commission.

SEC. 27. That each regional commission shall have an office, and shall be authorized to employ such clerical or other assistance as it finds necessary. It shall make its permanent headquarters and keep its records in such city in the regional district as the regional commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission may prescribe, but may also hold its hearings at different points to serve the convenience of the public or parties in interest. The regional commissions may conduct hearings or assemble evidence through examiners or agents or assistants as it may find necessary and as may be within the procedure or rules of the commission. All of the expenses of the regional commissions, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the regional commissioners, or by their employees under their order, in making any official investigation or upon official business in any other places than in the city of their residence, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the regional commission.

SEC. 28. That the regional commission and the regional commissioners shall, subject to review by the commission, and to all lawful limitations upon the commission, have the same general powers, authority, and prerogatives in all matters and hearings before them or subject to inquiry, investigation, determination, or report by them or by any member thereof as are enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission or its members, including the right to institute and prosecute proceedings in court, to compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses, the production of books, papers, records, and accounts, the taking of testimony, the institution of contempt proceedings, and the like; and the same principles as to immunity of witnesses from prosecution shall obtain, provided that no regional commission shall permit such immunity to be secured except pursuant to general or specific orders of the commission. The regional commissions must conform in all respects to the rules and principles for action prescribed for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

SEC. 29. That the regional commissions shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed, and may sue and be sued. Any member of the regional commissions may administer oaths and affirmations and sign subpœnas. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the decision of questions requiring the action of the regional commission, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. The Interstate Commerce Commission shall make and amend from time to time uniform reasonable rules or orders for the order and regulation of such proceedings before the regional commissions it may deem requisite, but each regional commission may adopt its own reasonable rules and regulations for procedure or as to its hearings, not inconsistent with any orders or rules prescribed by the commission or with this act.

Any party may appear before such regional commission or member thereof conducting any investigation and be heard in person or by attorney.

SEC. 30. That all conflicts between the decisions or proceedings of the several regional commissions shall be reconciled or corrected by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall have plenary authority to that end.

The regional commissions may, of their own motion, docket causes with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which may be referred to the regional commission most appropriate for the consideration of the matter or to a joint hearing by two or more regional commissions, where more than one region is affected.

The regional commission shall make such reports as may be required by the Interstate Commerce Commission, may initiate or propose to the commission changes in rates, charges, routes, practices, or make recommendations in relation to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; shall carry into effect such general or horizontal or other adjustments, under the orders and directions of the commission, as may be necessary to put into effect rates or levels or bases of rates necessary to sustain the carriers subject to the act to regulate and on the general principles prescribed by this act.

SEC. 31. That the commission may appoint rate committees from each region to be made up of employees of railroads and shippers or their respective representatives and to exercise such functions and authority in relation to the initiation or tentative approval of proposed specific changes in rates and charges as the commission may find practicable and desirable.

The commission shall likewise prescribe the general procedure for the initiation of changes in rates, fares, and charges by normal processes not amounting to or as a result of a formal complaint or application for hearing filed by carrier or shipper or other party, and shall prescribe such general procedure as will, to the extent that same may be practicable and consistent with the avoidance of friction or conflict, refer the general initiation of changes, the conditions precedent to filing of changes in rates and charges and of new rates, the effective dates of such rates and all questions of suspension of proposed rates to the several regional commissions for investigation and hearing in all cases not covered by outstanding orders or decrees or other requirements of law.

Every vote and official act of such commissions shall be entered of record and a duly certified copy thereof filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission; and their proceedings shall be public upon the request of any party interested.

The Interstate Commerce Commission shall prescribe suitable regulations to coordinate the work of the regional commissions with that of the State railroad or public service commissions, with the consent of the latter, in matters of possible conflict and in other cases where practicable and desirable, and shall have authority to authorize regional commissioners to sit temporarily in regional districts and with regional commissions other than that of their appointment where any vacancy or disqualification exists, or in any case in which the Interstate Commerce Commission shall certify that it is to the public interest that one or more regional commissions shall sit or shall conduct a joint hearing upon a single record; and in such cases the judgment or decision of the regional commissions, if any, shall be the judgment of a majority of the commissioners sitting.

SEC. 32. That, subject to the right of review by the commission on application of any party in interest within 10 days after the finding of the regional commission, the regional commission for any region in which 5 per cent (being not less than 50 workmen) of the employees concerned reside shall have authority to act as a board of conciliation or arbitration in all controversies between any carrier or between the carriers as a whole in any region and the employees or any general class of employees of such carrier or carriers in such region or between any carrier or carriers and any organization directly representing not less than 5 per cent (being not less than 50 workmen) of the employees of such carriers in any region or between the employees of National Railways Association hereby created, whether affecting wages, terms, or conditions of payment or employment, wage, or occupational differences of any kind, grievances, whether of the employees in question or of other employees of the same or different employer, whenever such difference tends or is likely to interfere with, hinder, obstruct, interrupt, or burden interstate commerce or any agency thereof, temporarily or permanently, or interrupt the transit of the mails or troops or property or communications of the United States. The commission is expressly authorized to promulgate rules, regulations, reports, and procedure for the submission of all such questions and controversies to arbitration or conciliation by and before the several regional commissions or the regional commission of any region in which the requisite number of employees concerned reside. Such rules, regulations, and procedure shall provide, inter alia, that there shall be no strike, lockout, or like final action such as a horizontal reduction in wages or radical general change in the terms or conditions of employment without reasonable notice to the carrier or to the employees or class of employees to be affected, and, in the case of protest by the carrier or by not less than 5 per cent (being in excess of 50 workmen) of the employees to be affected joining in such protest, individually or through any union or organization representing not less than 5 per cent (being in excess of 50 workmen) of the employees to be affected, there shall be no such action without submission of the question to conciliation or arbitration before the regional commission for the region in which the greater number of employees concerned reside and according to such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, nor until the regional commission and, if reviewed, the commission shall announce its finding or award or its inability to reach a determination, which shall be as promptly as may be, and, unless extended by representatives of the majority of the carrier or carriers or of the employees affected, or their representatives, shall be within 90 days from the filing of an application for conciliation or arbitration or within 150 days, if reviewed. Any carrier, person, or persons violating or attempting or inducing another to violate this section or any lawful rule or regulation of the commission relating thereto shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished as provided in section 10 of this act as amended.

If at any time before a finding or award is made any of the respective opposite parties agree that the finding or award shall be conclusive and compulsory, the final finding or award therein shall be conclusive, valid, and binding to the extent that such finding or award is timely and responsive to the submission and agreement. In matters submitted for conciliation rather than arbitration to the regional commission or the commission, in case of appeal, it shall be unlawful and constitute a misdemeanor punishable as hereinabove provided for any carrier subject to this act, its officer, or employee to take, join, or induce any final action, strike, or lockout contrary to such award of conciliation within 30 days from the date thereof.

The commission shall be authorized to adopt suitable rules, regulation, and procedure and cause any such question or difference arising within the several regions to be submitted to primary hearing and determination before arbitrators selected equally by the respective regional commissions from among the carriers affected and by the employees concerned and the odd arbitrator by those thus selected respective parties or, on their failure to agree, by the appointment of a disinterested arbitrator by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The finding or award so arrived at shall be filed forthwith with the appropriate regional commission and be subject to review by such commission on the application, to be filed with such commission within 10 days after notice of the award, by any carrier or employee claiming to be adversely affected; but if no application for review is made the same shall be valid to all intents and purposes as if such arbitration or conciliation and award had been before and by the regional commission and shall be effective accordingly under penalty as above provided.

SEC. 33. That any member of the commission or of any regional commission who, by reason of his existing or former relationship to any party or question involved in any matter or controversy pending before such commission for hearing, determination, conciliation, or arbitration, or for any other good reason, shall determine that it is proper for him not to sit in determination upon the question, may cause his reasons to be entered upon the minutes of the commission and recuse himself from participation in the hearing, award, or finding. If necessary to a decision the remaining members shall call upon the President of the United States, or, in his absence or inability to act, upon the Chief Justice of the United States, who shall thereupon designate a disinterested party, otherwise eligible for appointment as commissioner, to sit in lieu of the commissioner thus recused, and the vote and decision of such person, after taking the oath of office, shall be effective as if it were the vote and decision of the commissioner for whom he was substituted.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS ASSOCIATION.

SEC. 34. That the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and such additional members as may hereafter constitute the Interstate Commerce Commission and their successors, together with eight others to be designated as herein provided by carriers, subject to the acts to regulate commerce as amended, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate and politic of the United States by the name, title, and style of National Railways Association, and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and it shall be lawful for the said corporation to have a corporate seal, to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded, and to have and exercise all necessary and incidental rights, privileges, and immunities for the purposes of the corporation hereby created and hereinafter defined.

SEC. 35. That said National Railways Association shall be an agency of the United States, to be operated in the interest of the commerce of the people of the United States conducted by carriers under private ownership and operation. It shall not be operated primarily for profit, and no person, firm, or corporation shall have a direct pecuniary interest in its earnings or profits, except as creditor or holder of its securities or under privity of contract or as beneficiary of its functions.

The specific objects and purposes for which said corporation, hereinafter referred to as the association, is created and the general powers and functions which it may exercise and discharge are as follows:

To provide an agency to assist in the orderly return to their owners of transportation systems subject to the act to regulate commerce and acts amendatory thereof.

To provide an administrative management and agency, coordinating with the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the purchase, ownership, control, leasing, direction, or operation of engines, cars, equipment, facilities, or other agencies used or proposed to be used in interstate commerce; to afford a skilled, trained, and efficient body of men experienced in railway management, operation, and finance to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission and the carriers of the United States in the performance of their respective duties and obligations; to act as an agency to perpetuate certain advantages and practices found to result from unified control or operation; to advise the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to operations, car service, car repairs, car supply, interchange, routing, standards or methods of operation, safety measures, efficiency standards, the unification of service, joint use of facilities, terminals, or other agencies of interstate commerce, the combination or consolidation of railroads, trackage agreements between railroads, the pooling of freight or other like arrangements or relations between carriers compatible with or essential to the public interest; and, generally, to act as a consulting advisory, visitorial, and executive or administrative agency of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Government of the United States, and of the carriers who shall make or be lawfully required to make use of same, in general furtherance of the commerce of the United States.

The association shall have corporate power and authority to perform any duty, act, or service lawfully delegated to it by the Interstate Commerce Commission or by any carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce.

It shall have power to receive or borrow money from the United States or from any other public or private source, to enter into conditional or limited obligations, or obligations chargeable against or dischargeable only out of the proceeds, usufruct, or avails or operation of specific chattels or properties without thereby creating any general liability against the corporation; to issue its obligations, certificates, debentures, or other evidences of interest or debt, secured or unsecured, as it may decide.

It shall have power to purchase from the United States all such equipment, cars, engines, or other railway property as may have been purchased or contracted for by the United States, acting through the President or his agencies and hereinafter generally referred to as the Railroad Administration, and not allocated to or paid for by any carrier, and to enter into agreements with the Railroad Administration as to the fair and reasonable value thereof at the time of surrender or transfer by the Railroad Administration. The association and the Railroad Administration shall have the power to agree upon such value, which may be less than the original cost thereof; and the Railroad Administration is hereby authorized to sell and transfer any such equipment to the association or to others upon fair and reasonable terms. The association shall have power to act as the agency of the President in the exercise of Federal operation pending the relinquishment thereof to any extent which may be authorized by the President or by the Railroad Administration; to hold, manage, lease, or otherwise dispose of any equipment or other property in trust or as agent for the use or benefit of the United States or any other owner or owners; or aid the Railroad Administration in any lawful way in the transition of the railroads from Federal operation; and, in general, to occupy any contract relationship to any carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or any property owned or operated by any carrier engaged in such commerce.

In times of war the association may, with the consent of the owners, take over the property and operations of any carrier or carriers, or any part thereof or to any extent, and operate same for such carrier under such terms and conditions for their timely return to the owners as may be agreed on or as Congress may by law provide.

As an incident to its general function of assisting in the commerce of the United States under private ownership and operation and not for the purpose of furthering Government ownership or proprietary operation of common carriers, and of providing or assisting in the matter of joint facilities, joint terminals, or in the matter of equipment for joint or several use or like function in furtherance of the service of the privately owned transportation systems of the United States, the association may engage in interstate, intrastate, or foreign commerce; may transport for hire passengers, express, or the mails; may construct, acquire, own, lease, operate, sell, or otherwise dispose of cars, engines, shops, stations, vessels, docks, terminals, yards, highways, ways, telephones, telegraph and cable lines, and any and all devices, agencies, and facilities of transportation, commerce, or communication incident to such general purpose; and may exercise all or any of the functions and powers authorized by this act alone or under agreement or in partnership or other relation with others.

The association shall have the further power for the general purpose above stated—

To accept, acquire, use, transfer, or otherwise dispose of grants, licenses, and franchises; to hold, own, or dispose of real estate and personal property; to issue, purchase, hold, reissue, or sell its own debentures, bonds, or other forms of indebtedness or certificate of interest or participation; to acquire, by purchase, original subscription, underwriting, or otherwise, and to hold, hypothecate, or dispose of stocks, bonds, mortgages, or other securities of any carrier in furtherance of the general purposes above stated or temporarily to protect a debt or obligation due it.

To indorse, guarantee, become surety upon, or in anywise contract with reference to, the bonds, debentures, contracts, or other obligations relating to property used or intended to be employed in interstate or foreign commerce or incidental or accessorial thereto where reasonably incidental to the general purposes and powers conferred upon the association.

To borrow and lend money, with or without security, and to mortgage, pledge, or hypothecate any property or interest the association may own; but none of the powers granted to the association by this act shall be construed as authorizing it to acquire and hold in a proprietary capacity any integral line mileage or general road haul railway property, directly or through stock or other ownership or control, other than in case of terminal, belt, or switching properties or companies or other like properties or companies, accessorial to the service of, or to be used in common or otherwise by or for the benefit of the service of carriers subject to this act other than the association itself.

SEC. 36. That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated as a loan to the association to enable it to organize and finance its operations, in part, until revenue from the excess earnings funds shall begin to be available as provided in this act; said loan shall bear such rate of interest on the moneys advanced and be payable as may be agreed between the association and the Secretary of the Treasury. No obligation of the association shall be or become binding upon the United States as an obligation expressed or implied except as specifically authorized or provided by law. For the performance of its functions, involving obligations or expenditures in excess of the foregoing appropriation, the association and persons dealing with it must look to other revenue or security.

The appropriation hereby made shall, to the extent same may be necessary, be available on vouchers duly verified and approved by the chairman or other trustee designated by the trustees for that purpose, only for the payment of the salaries of the trustees of the association; a general manager, who may be one of the trustees; a secretary; and such subordinate employees as may be found necessary; for traveling or other expenses of the employees of the association while engaged in the performance of their duties; for the compensation and expenses of engineers; counsel or other assistance in the discharge of the business of the association; and for rent and upkeep of offices and records; and for supplies and facilities.

For all expenses incurred by the association or its agents at the direct instance and as an agency of the commission payment or reimbursement therefor shall be made as other authorized expenses of the commission or its employees on approval by the proper officer of the commission and shall not be chargeable against the appropriation hereby made as a loan to the association.

For their services as trustees of the association the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall receive the sum of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly by the association, in addition to their compensation as members of the commission; the other trustees shall not receive compensation from the association other than their traveling expenses, as otherwise provided herein, except the general manager, whose salary shall be $25,000 per annum, and the secretary, who shall receive $6,000 per annum, all payable monthly by the association.

The principal office and legal domicile of the association shall be in Washington, in the District of Columbia, but the association may have office or agents and transact its business among and within the several States and in the District of Columbia, free from any license, franchise, or privilege taxes, and free from any taxes upon its income, property, or business; but this provision shall not exempt any carrier, or its income, property, or business from lawful taxation by the several States or by the United States when held or operated by the association as the agent or trustee for any such carrier.

The funds, credits, and properties belonging to the association shall not be subject to attachment, garnishment, or sequestration; nor shall property or funds in the custody of the association or credit due by it to carriers be subject to attachment, garnishment, or sequestration for the payment of debt.

The Interstate Commerce Commission shall provide suitable offices for the association in Washington.

SEC. 37. That the association shall issue no shares of stock, but the trustees may, for any lawful corporate purpose, issue notes, bonds, debentures, certificates, or other instruments, singly or in classes or series, secured or unsecured, without interest or with interest at such rate and with such maturities as the trustees may find necessary.

Whenever the commission shall find it reasonably necessary in the public interest and to the proper discharge by any carrier subject to this act of the obligations assumed by it as a carrier in interstate commerce, that such carrier should acquire any facility or property or perform or discharge any service or duty in which the association is authorized to assist, the association may proceed to that end under any contract or agreement with such carrier which may be approved by the commission, and in pursuance thereof may issue its bonds or other obligations; and in all such cases such carrier shall have plenary power and authority to guarantee any or all such obligations and perform and discharge such contract, guaranty, lien, or other obligation as it may assume in connection therewith under the direct authority of this act.

SEC. 38. That in taking over any equipment purchased by the Railroad Administration or any part thereof, or in purchasing, leasing, storing, holding, or selling other engines, cars, equipment, or property, or incurring like or other expenses in relation to property within its power to acquire, the association may execute its own direct obligations or may lend its credit or guaranty to any carrier and may in the course of its business give or take or retain a lien, trust indenture, mortgage, conditions sale, or other agreement, and such lien, trust indenture, mortgage, conditional sale, or other agreement shall be valid and effective according to its tenor and purport and shall be received in evidence and given effect in all courts, whether filed or recorded or any tax paid thereon according to State laws or not. But an original counterpart of such instrument shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and a copy thereof certified by the secretary of the commission under its seal shall be received in evidence in all courts, prima facie, in all respects as an original counterpart, executed and delivered according to its tenor and purport.

SEC. 39. That the issue of securities by the association from time to time shall not, nor shall the association in respect of its organization, powers, authority, books, records, or accounts, be subject to the jurisdiction of any State, except as herein otherwise provided.

SEC. 40. That the eight trustees of the association to be elected by carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce as amended, shall be elected by the board of directors of the class 1 railroad corporations (those showing according to the latest reports published by the Interstate Commerce Commission a gross operating revenue of $1,000,000 or more) allocated by the commission to the respective regions, which shall cause their respective selections to be certified to the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission within 60 days after the approval of this act (and, thereafter, in cases of expiration of term of office subsequently occurring, within such time and after such notice of such termination as the by-laws of the association may prescribe).

The trustees of the association other than the members of the commission may be officers, directors, or otherwise connected with or interested in carriers subject to this act, it being a purpose hereof that such trustees shall be representative of active railway management and finance.

Each directorate shall vote for one trustee from its region and for as many as required at large. The votes shall be canvassed by the commission and the nominees receiving the highest plurality in their respective regions (if not less than one-third of the directorates voting) of the votes of the several directorates voting shall be trustees selected. If no person shall receive such plurality in the case of any vacancy to be filled, the trustees elected shall by majority vote fill the vacancy by selecting one of the nominees voted as by the directorates to fill such vacancy, and in the event of their failure to act or elect, the vacancy shall be filled by the commission from such nominees. The trustees of the association shall hold their first meeting on call of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission as promptly as convenient and shall forthwith organize the association for business, elect a chairman, who shall not be chairman of the commission, one or more vice chairmen, a secretary, establish an office, adopt a corporate seal and by-laws for the government of the association, and, as soon thereafter as convenient or necessary, a general manager, and also employ such other officers or agents as may be necessary.

The trustees shall, by resolution or by by-laws, prescribe the authority of the officers or other agents.

The carrier trustees first elected shall be eligible to hold office as follows: Four for two years and four for four years, the length of their respective terms to be determined by lot or agreement at the first meeting of the trustees. Thereafter, at the expiration of their respective terms, trustees shall be elected by the boards of directors of the class 1 railroads of the respective district in which vacancies occur (or at large) or by the remaining trustees or upon their failure to elect by the commission as hereinbefore provided, their terms to be for two years, so that four carrier trustees will be elected every two years. There shall not be more than one carrier trustee from any one district, except that one of the trustees at large may be a resident of a district represented by another trustee. No carrier shall be entitled to vote in selecting a trustee from more than one district (except for trustees at large) and must be allocated for such purpose to that district in which the major portion of its mileage lies. Each carrier entitled to participate shall be entitled to cast one vote. Vacancies in the office of carrier trustee shall be filled for the remainder of the unexpired term, by election by the remaining trustees elected by the carriers.

Trustees may be removed from office by the President for misconduct or inability or failure to attend to the duties of the office.

The trustees may elect from their number an executive committee of not less than five members, of whom not less than two must be trustees elected by the railroads, which shall be authorized to exercise the duty and authority of the trustees when the trustees are not in session, subject to the by-laws and the direction of the trustees.

No trustee shall vote or alone represent the association in respect to any matter or contract in which he or any carrier with which he is connected or interested has a direct pecuniary interest except contracts or relations generally applicable to all railroads.

SEC. 41. That it shall be the duty of the association to invite and encourage the use of the association by all carriers as their common agency in all matters of general interest, such as the clearing and interchange of cars, reciprocal service, the clearing of accounts, the settlement and allocation of loss and damage claims, the arbitration of differences, and in all matters in which a common agency would be desirable; to act as a bureau of complaints to which the public may apply at any time for prompt assistance in securing attention to just grievances; to keep constantly informed as to the traffic and operating conditions of the railroads, and to anticipate and make provision for car supply and distribution; to investigate and report to the commission and to the carriers interested plans or suggestions for advancement of the commerce of the United States, for unification of service where beneficial, for joint use of terminals or facilities, for the construction of additional facilities, and in respect to all matters as to which the commission has authority to act; to make studies of traffic conditions, the capacity of the various ports, and to coordinate the rail, water, and highway transportation facilities of the United States; to suggest economies and sound principles of operation; to act as an agency to assist, direct, or enforce any order or direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and to provide at all times an efficient organization available for any national or regional emergency affecting interstate commerce.

SEC. 42. That the association shall have the right and authority to acquire, condemn, or subordinate private property, easements, or franchises to the public uses served or proposed to be served by the corporation in such cases and to the extent of such easement and so conditioned and qualified as may have been authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission as compatible with the interest of the public and of the commerce of the Nation and consistent with the purposes of the association; and may proceed for the enforcement of such right in any State court having jurisdiction of the property or defendants and jurisdiction of such matters or in any Federal district court having jurisdiction of the property or of the adverse interests of any one of them under direct authority of this act; and may act or be employed as the agency, by and with the approval or direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to acquire such rights or easements reasonably essential to the interests of the public and the commerce of the Nation, or to any carrier subject to the commerce acts of the United States, for the use of or to be transferred to, leased, or used by any such carrier in cases where the latter may be disenabled or impeded by want of corporate authority or other statutory or other impediment to exercise the right in the manner most compatible with the public interest in interstate commerce or where the same should, in such public interest, be acquired, held, operated, or owned subject to joint use of carriers.

For the purposes of the association as hereinabove defined, the association may transact its business as an ordinary private corporation on such terms as it may find reasonable or necessary in the public interest, but the charges, rents, practices, agreements, and transactions of the association shall be subject to supervision, approval, disapproval, and regulation by the commission, except that the association may enter into fixed and binding contracts in all cases where the same shall be declared to be compatible with the public interest by the Interstate Commerce Commission by specific or general order applicable thereto; and the ordinary contracts and transactions of the association which work as transfer, lien, or withdrawal, to endure for a period of more than three years, of or upon lands, terminals, rights of way, easements, licenses, or real property owned or held by the association in a proprietary capacity and devoted to public use, shall not be subject to disaffirmance by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In and about its business and operations for the general purposes stated the association shall have the right to engage in such incidental business and to exercise such accessorial powers and functions, whether local or interstate, as may assist and further the exercise of any of the powers expressly granted or be of benefit to any property held or owned by the association in a proprietary capacity, and without the payment by the association or by its agents, employees, or licenses of any State or municipal license, privilege, occupation, or franchise tax therefor or with reference thereto, except where held or operated in a representative or fiduciary capacity for some person, firm, or corporation which is or would be subject to such tax, and in such case only to the extent and in such amounts as the latter would be taxable in respect of local transactions.

The association may require any carrier or carriers at whose instance or for whose benefit it may act or acquire, or hold, operate, or manage property, to enter into contracts of guaranty or indemnity or to give security; and any such carrier is hereby authorized to comply with such requirement.

SEC. 43. That whenever the association shall, in pursuance of its general purposes above defined, condemn or acquire property, easements, rights, or licenses in pursuance or furtherance of interstate commerce, the association and its licensees, privies, and assigns, being carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, may as an incident to such license, easement, interest, or estate acquired therein from the association engage in local transactions not constituting interstate commerce per se where the same are reasonably necessary to sustain the interstate agency or service, or are ordinarily incident thereto, whether because of competitive or other conditions or by reason of the fact that the interstate use or functions thereof are practically inseparable from its local use or functions, and without the payment of any tax for the privilege or franchise, or in respect of the property employed therein, except in the case of carriers other than the association, such as is ordinarily payable by citizens of the State for the transaction of local business or in respect to property devoted to such local service or use.

SEC. 44. That the association shall in the exercise of its powers and in the administration of functions delegated to it by the Interstate Commerce Commission, in respect to leases of equipment, loans of funds, acquisition or control of terminals or other facilities, use of joint facilities, pooling, embargoes, permits, diversion of traffic, divisions, or otherwise and in its recommendations to the commission have due regard for the principle that its chief function is to foster interstate commerce among the carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, as a whole, and to assist in sustaining and stabilizing the agencies thereof to the maximum extent compatible with the public interest, and that it may, and the Interstate Commerce Commission may likewise, make due allowance for the differing requirements of the respective carriers involved and the communities which they serve, whether resulting from subnormal revenue, adverse operating conditions, or otherwise—wide discretion being vested in the association and in the commission in such matters,

SEC. 45. That the association shall have the power and be under the duty to receive, recover, and administer any funds paid or payable to it for any of its purposes or objects, and particularly such money due or paid out of the excess earnings of railroads subject to the act to regulate commerce as now or hereafter amended or as may be in accordance to law. The portions of such funds required or exacted for expenditures generally in the public interest (as distinguished from the funds held for the benefit of employees) shall be available for use in furtherance of any or all of the object powers or functions of the association, and subject to expenditure by or under authority of the trustees as in the case of ordinary private corporations.

The association shall alone be entitled to maintain civil proceedings to recover excess earnings reduction from carriers required to pay the same, and to that end shall be subrogated to any lien or security which may have been taken to secure the same, as well as to a lien upon any property, improvement, or betterment which may have been acquired by the carrier or expended upon its property and upon any debt, lien, or mortgage of the delinquent carrier to the extent to which the funds properly payable to the association may have been employed on the purchase of such property, improvement, or betterment, or in the liquidation of such debt, lien, or mortgage, but nothing in this section contained shall be construed as preventing the commission from proceeding against any carrier for the enforcement of its valid orders or to enjoin violation thereof in respect to such fund, as in other cases.

In administering such funds the association will be governed by the principles laid down by Congress in respect thereto and by any lawful rules and regulations prescribed by the commission.

SEC. 46. That such portions of such funds as are or may be required to be used in the interest of employees of a particular carrier or carriers shall be administered for that purpose in accordance with such rules, regulations, and procedure as may from time to time be prescribed or approved by the commission or, upon the failure of the commission to act, by the association. No employee of any carrier shall be held to have a beneficial interest or equity in or any cause of action or right to accounting against any carrier or against the commission or the association or any coemployee or employees of any other carrier for a recovery or accounting or contribution to secure any sum or benefit or claim against the fund as such, except as against the association alone to establish a contention that such employee or dependent is in fact a beneficiary entitled to benefits under the specific rules and regulations in force from time to time and applicable to funds which reached and are or were available and payable to the claimant.

SEC. 47. That for any misuse of the funds or injury, misuse, or depredation to the property of the association or of property in its custody, or for interference with its transactions, any person, firm, or corporation shall be guilty of an offense against the laws of the United States of the character and degree and punishable as if the funds or property involved belonged directly to or as if such interference hindered the direct action of the United States. Employees having access to funds belonging to or in custody of the association shall be bonded.

SEC. 48. That employees of the association shall not be considered as employees of the United States within the meaning of the civil-service acts or workmen's compensation acts relating to direct employees of the United States, but in all such respects the relative rights and responsibilities of the association and its employees shall be as if the association were, in respect of the matter in question, a carrier engaged in a local transaction or in interstate or intrastate commerce, as the case may be.

SEC. 49. That the acts and transactions of the association and its agreements and relations shall not constitute violation of the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies"; or the provisions of sections 73 to 77, both inclusive, of an act approved August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or the provisions of an act approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes"; or the provisions of acts amendatory thereof; or of any similar statute or ordinance of any State or municipality, by the association, or its privies or associates, or the directors, trustees, officers, agents, representatives, or employees of the association, or of its privies, in respect of or arising out of such act, transaction, agreement, or relation, or the subsequent and consistent use or enjoyment of rights or property acquired thereby; and, in any case, a finding by the Interstate Commerce Commission that the purchase, lease, or sale of any agreement as to the joint use of property, rights, franchise, or easements, the transfer of which is within the provision of this act, already or theretofore devoted to public use in interstate commerce with the express or implied consent of any State or municipality, is compatible with or desirable in the interest of the public and of the interstate commerce of the United States, shall constitute due corporate authority or power on the part of the proposed purchaser to acquire and use, and of the proposed vendor or the owner to sell or enter into agreements concerning, pursuant to the finding and approval of the commission, any common law or statutory or other legislation or limitation of any State or municipality to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 50. That the provisions of section 17 and those provisions relating to the direct application of the excess-earnings funds realized thereunder shall apply only to carriers by railroad or their employees.

SEC. 51. That if any section or provision of this act should be declared to be unconstitutional or invalid for any reason the remainder of the act shall be unaffected thereby and shall be and remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 52. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 53. That this act shall be subject to repeal, alteration, or amendment at any time.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay the pending bill aside for the purpose of considering the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What was the request?

Mr. OWEN. I asked unanimous consent to lay the pending measure aside for the purpose of considering the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am obliged to object to that, owing to changes made in the bill by the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16187) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not care at great length to discuss the pending motion to suspend the rules. This language of section 7 of the bill is an interesting commentary upon the administration by the Government of the railroads, since it informs us that under the Railroad Administration Board there has been incurred a very grave deficit, which calls for a huge outlay by the Federal Government of many millions of dollars. I have not personally verified the figures, but a very competent expert has estimated that the increase in freight and passenger rates under the new regulations established by the Federal Railroad Administrator would amount to the vast sum of $1,000,000,000 a year, which $1,000,000,000 a year represents an additional tax upon the producers of this country, and which $1,000,000,000 a year represents 5 per cent on a sum $300,000,000 more than the par value of all of the stocks and bonds of all of the railroads of the United States. Of course, even the superficial student of railway securities knows that a very large amount of these securities outstanding are selling far below par, representing in many instances mere water injected into the capital stock by the various sleight-of-hand performances of high finance.

There is a widespread propaganda throughout the country in favor of permanent Government ownership or operation of the railroads. Already the shippers and those who travel upon the railroads are beginning to feel the tremendous burden of these increased rates. Already the great increase in the freight rates is operating to reduce the production in this country of the necessities of life.

For example, many of the eastern farms, particularly Maryland farms, require lime, and the farmers can not even afford to buy the lime to-day, because the freight rate is so high on the lime that it is not possible to buy and transport it and apply it profitably to the land. In countless ways this great tax of $1,000,000,000, in the shape of additional freight rates and passenger tariffs, is depressing the productive industry of the country.

While it is true that temporarily many of the railroad employees are getting a higher money wage, yet it is to be anticipated that very shortly there will be an agitation started upon the part of the shippers for a drastic reduction in rates, which will ultimately result in a reduction in the wages of the railroad operatives of all classes.

I say I have not personally verified these figures of the experts in railway rates whom I have quoted, but I believe that the figures are substantially correct. It is an unfortunate fact, but a fact to be reckoned with, as we look forward to the great reconstruction problems, that governmental operations generally are attended by a greater inefficiency than that which attends similar operations carried on under individual or private initiative and control. I feel that it is very important that all of those who look forward toward a greater cooperation in governmental affairs, even those who have faith that we are gradually moving toward the time when there shall exist a cooperative state, as the result of the gradual elimination of competitive motives, shall realize that it would be fatal to attempt to adopt the cooperative form until there be developed a more unselfish cooperative spirit, until Government has become more efficient in all of its legitimate undertakings.

All observant and thinking men are now fully aware of the danger of putting the Federal Government permanently into business until, through a businesslike performance of the legitimate governmental functions, the officials of the Government have more fully developed cooperative capacity and the cooperative spirit.

I say this by way of introduction to what I really wish to discuss, the subject which I merely touched upon the other evening—the subject of national reconstruction.

I addressed myself particularly the other evening to the resolution which I read, which, without the preamble, simply provides that "it be the sense and judgment of the Senate that the situation is such in this country as to make it seem desirable and advisable that an extra session of the Congress should be called for the 5th of March, 1919, and that a copy of the action be sent to the President."

I stated when I was discussing at some length the various subjects to which I referred that I was most anxious to see some favorable action, either positive and affirmative or merely negative, in the direction of securing an extra session of Congress. I believe it is of the utmost importance that Congress should be in session during the coming months. I find myself in agreement with the suggestion made a short time ago, that there should be a provision by which Congress could assemble itself, in case of an emergency, without awaiting the call of the Executive. I think a constitutional amendment is not necessary in order to make that possible, for I believe the Constitution very clearly provides, the language of the Constitution being—

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day—that the date of the meeting may be determined by the Congress.

It seems perfectly clear that Congress could pass a statute, if it saw fit, providing that the Congress shall assemble at some other date than the first Monday of December.

When I closed my remarks the other evening I was referring to certain causes which we have given the people of this country for unrest and discontent. I think that all of the Members of Congress realize that there is a profound unrest and discontent in the country, and I started to discuss some of the causes for that discontent and for that unrest, some of the causes for the apparent disintegration of the national spirit, resulting in such violent conflict of opinion between the various classes of the people after what I believed to be the most harmonious and unified condition, immediately after the declaration of war, that ever existed in this country.

I said the other evening that I believed that in spite of all of the differences of opinion that existed before the war as to the wisdom of declaring war, after the war was actually declared the country was united in a great spirit of patriotism. I believe that if we had wisely handled the situation, if we had used the proper judgment in the enactment of statutes, and if there had not been made many mistakes, some of them perhaps unavoidable, by the executive and legislative departments, the country to-day would be united as never before and we would be in a condition to approach the reconstruction problems in that spirit of cooperation which would enable us to solve these problems as we solved the great problems which confronted us immediately after the declaration of war.

I referred to prosecutions under the espionage act as making for misunderstanding and disintegration. I believe altogether that several hundred people were prosecuted, convicted, or imprisoned under that portion of the espionage act referring to the right to express an opinion, which is known as the free-speech and free-press clause.

If we remember that every single individual prosecuted under this law had friends who resented that prosecution we will see how each one of those prosecutions tended to cause a center of unrest and discontent; and when we recall that some of those who were prosecuted under this statute were persons of very great prominence, with a great following, some of them representing important political parties, it is very easy to see how widespread resentment might be caused.

I know that perhaps I am in the minority in this view which I entertain, that the passage of the espionage law resulted in harm rather than in good. Take the case of the minister up in one of the New England States who preached an overenthusiastic sermon to his parishioners, which was interpreted, and probably very properly interpreted, as being an effort on his part to keep men from enlisting. It was a deplorable thing that he should have made that mistake, but when he was sentenced to the penitentiary for 20 years, so severe a sentence created, of course, a revulsion of feeling, a sense of injustice.

I referred the other evening to Alexander Hamilton's prediction as to what would happen if the alien and sedition act passed, and I referred to the fact that I had quoted that language at the time the espionage law was before the Senate and predicted that the result would be the same as that following the old alien and sedition law and, of course, the result has been the same. After all, these questions are not matters of guesswork. There are certain fundamental psychological and social laws which are as inevitable in their operation as are the physical laws. There really is no excuse for making such grave legislative blunders if we carefully observe the social and psychological laws. One of the ancient historic writers has said that "history is philosophy teaching by example," and if we want to understand the true philosophy of any proposed legislation, if we will take the trouble to turn back to history we can generally find an example which will meet the case.

In this connection I desire to read into the RECORD—and then I shall pass from the subject, because I realize that it is a debatable one and that many disagree with me entirely in my conclusions—certain language from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, where he discusses libels upon the Government. He refers to the history of the sedition law, and says:

The sedition law was passed during the administration of the elder Adams, when the fabric of government was still new and untried, and when many men seemed to think that the breath of heated party discussions might tumble it about their heads.

There was some excuse, Mr. President, in those days for such a mistake. The fathers themselves did not realize the wonderful strength of the fabric of government which they, I believe in an hour of inspiration, had created. It is not strange that they should have feared that criticism might rend or destroy that fabric of government. But there was less excuse for us. We had seen the Government formulated by the fathers withstand the shock of war, the perils of sedition, the danger of destructive civil strife, and still remain, and there was less excuse for us when we did not have faith in the strength of our governmental structure.

Continuing the quotation:

Its constitutionality was always disputed by a large party, and its impolicy was beyond question. It had a direct tendency to produce the very state of things it sought to repress; the prosecutions under it were instrumental, among other things, in the final overthrow and destruction of the party by which it was adopted, and it is impossible to conceive, at the present time, of any such state of things as would be likely to bring about its reenactment or the passage of any similar repressive statute.

When it is among the fundamental principles of the Government that the people frame their own Constitution, and that in doing so they reserve to themselves the power to amend it from time to time, as the public sentiment may change, it is difficult to conceive of any sound principle on which prosecutions for libels on the system of government can be based, except when they are made in furtherance of conspiracy with the evident intent and purpose to excite rebellion and civil war. It is very easy to lay down a rule for the discussion of constitutional questions; that they are privileged, if conducted with calmness and temperance, and that they are not indictable unless they go beyond the bounds of fair discussion. But what is calmness and temperance, and what is fair in the discussion of supposed evils in the Government? And if something is to be allowed "for a little feeling in men's minds," how great shall be the allowance? The heat of the discussion will generally be in proportion to the magnitude of the evil as it appears to the party discussing it; must the question whether he has exceeded due bounds or not be tried by judge and jury, who may sit under different circumstances from those under which he has spoken, or at least after the heat of the occasion has passed away, and who, feeling none of the excitement themselves, may think it unreasonable that anyone else should ever have felt it? The dangerous character of such prosecutions would be the more glaring if aimed at those classes who, not being admitted to a share in the Government, attacked the Constitution in the point which excluded them. Sharp criticism, ridicule, and the exhibition of such feeling as a sense of injustice engenders, are to be expected from any discussion in these cases; but when the very classes who have established the exclusion as proper and reasonable are to try as judges and jurors the assaults made upon it, they will be very likely to enter upon the examination with a preconceived notion that such assaults upon their reasonable regulations must necessarily be unreasonable. If any such principle of repression should ever be recognized in the common law of America, it might reasonably be anticipated that in times of high party excitement it would lead to prosecutions by the party in power, to bolster up wrongs and sustain abuses and oppressions by crushing adverse criticism and discussion. The evil, indeed, could not be of long continuance; for, judging from experience, the reaction would be speedy, thorough, and effectual; but it would be no less a serious evil while it lasted, the direct tendency of which would be to excite discontent and to breed a rebellious spirit. Repression of full and free discussion is dangerous in any government resting upon the will of the people. The people can not fail to believe that they are deprived of rights, and will be certain to become discontented when their discussion of public measures is sought to be circumscribed by the judgment of others upon their temperance or fairness. They must be left at liberty to speak with the freedom which the magnitude of the supposed wrongs appears in their minds to demand; and if they exceed all the proper bounds of moderation, the consolation must be that the evil likely to spring from the violent discussion will probably be less, and its correction by public sentiment more speedy, than if the terrors of the law were brought to bear to prevent the discussion.

When we remember that this espionage statute is so worded that its language, according to the Attorney General's report, is so broad as to give rise to many differing and "conflicting interpretations" by United States attorneys and United States commissioners—quoting the language of the Attorney General—when we remember that that language is so broad that undoubtedly many people were prosecuted for words which they spoke, believing themselves to be within their constitutional rights, we can readily understand that its enforcement must have been in many instances a source of discontent and irritation. It is important to remember in this connection that there is of course a large number in this country who believe they should be permitted to urge certain amendments to the Constitution, and this is justifiable, because it is the very nature of our Constitution that it is amendable, and that amendability of the Constitution affords a peaceful and lawful remedy for any legitimate cause of discontent which my arise as a result of the Constitution not being perhaps in some of its provisions entirely adequate to meet the present needs, which, of course, is a possibility, although I do not share that view myself. I believe that a fair and proper interpretation of the Constitution will permit the Federal Government to perform in an efficient manner all of its proper and legitimate functions.

Another cause for discontent, which I shall not go into at any great length, is the court-martial as it has been carried on in our Army. Every soldier subjected to an unjust court-martial becomes the center from which there are irradiations of discontent; and the more severe and the more unjust the sentence the more widespread the dissatisfaction and discontent as a result. The delay of the soldiers' mail, the failure on the part of the Government to pay allotments promptly, the payment of allotments where they should not have been paid, as happened in many instances—all these are additional causes of unrest. I have been informed of numerous instances where allotments were paid to women in humble circumstances, to families in a state bordering on destitution, paid when for some technical reason they should not have been paid, and after their payment United States marshals were sent to these humble homes, and the poor mothers, without funds, were dragged into the United States court, and restitution was demanded by the court of the money which had been paid in error, restitution then, of course, being impossible, as the money had already been expended.

I am not discussing these matters in any partisan spirit at all. I think that in approaching the question of this discontent which exists throughout the country we ought to consider it in an entirely nonpartisan spirit, and we ought to deal with it in that spirit. Many of these mistakes were inevitable. It really is not strange that when a million or more payments of allotments had to be made the machinery should at first be inadequate for the payment of the allotments, unfortunate as it is that it was so.

Of course, the long delay in the peace settlement is a source of great unrest in the country. The inevitable increasing unemployment, which is the result of the readjustments in industry, of the discharge of many persons from the munition factories, and of the release of the soldiers from the Army, is a great and a growing cause for unrest and discontent in the country. The high cost of living, the fundamental cause of which is the long-continued underproduction of food in this country, is a very grave cause for discontent, and a cause which might be removed by a proper legislative program.

I shall not at this time burden the RECORD with figures, but the figures on the production of foodstuffs extending over a number of years furnish conclusive evidence that the production of foodstuffs in this country has not kept pace with the rapid increase in our population. I do not care to discuss that question now, as I have alluded to it on previous occasions and as I am merely making a summary of certain causes of unrest which I believe exist and which I believe should be met by legislation which should be enacted at the extra session of Congress, which I am at this time advocating.

Of course, our past failures to provide adequate educational facilities for the education of our aliens and for the education of our American children and adults have resulted in a condition very grave and menacing; for, after all, an investigation of those who are responsible for the disturbances will disclose either that they are aliens who have been permitted to come here without the proper education to imbue them with the spirit of our institutions or they are native illiterates, or if not illiterates, native uneducated persons, who readily fall victims to the wiles of the agitator, the agitator promising, of course, great benefits as a result of riot and revolution.

There are many other causes for this national restlessness. I think the manner in which the railroads have been handled under the Railroad Administration has tended to cause great discontent. The shippers have found themselves confronted with very high freight rates. Every traveling man who has to pay a very greatly increased price for his ticket becomes a complainer; and I myself have observed, and I think all of us who have traveled have observed, the discontent on the part of the traveling public generally with the high costs of travel and the inconveniences at the same time—the inconveniences which, I believe, have been increased under the operation of the roads by the Government.

I have scarcely touched upon the various causes for discontent, but I think if we make a careful survey we shall find there are very many of them.

Mr. President, certainly I would not presume to trespass upon the time of the Senate in this way except that I feel it to be my duty to do so at this time, because I believe it would be perilous for us not to have an extra session of Congress, for if we do not all of the operations of the two great coordinate branches of the Federal Government will be suspended and in the most critical period of the Republic's history there will be no part of the Federal Government functioning during the coming months except the judiciary, qualifying that statement in certain particulars. Of course the subordinate officers in the executive departments will still be carrying on the routine work.

There are periods in the world's history when government seems almost unnecessary. There are happy years when men seem to be able to dwell together in harmony and in happiness without the Government functioning to any great degree. There are times when all the cementing social forces seem to be in the ascendancy and when discord among men seems almost to have disappeared. We have had many such periods in the history of the world. Such a time was the Golden Age of Greece, the reign of Augustus in Rome, the days of Charlemagne after he had conquered his foes and had founded the western Roman Empire.

But while this is true, Mr. President, there are also times when it seems as though government would utterly fail to meet the human needs, when it appears almost impossible to hold men together under any governmental form, when all human governmental institutions seem to be threatened with destruction and dissolution. This is peculiarly true of the present day. We discuss plans to unite all the sons of men in one great brotherhood. We talk about the new internationalism. We talk of international cooperation. But, Mr. President, before we consider the great problems of international cooperation it would be well for us to address ourselves to the task of holding firmly together the present fabric of government.

Mr. President, I think it is important for us to try to see things as they are and not as we would desire to have them. We have said this was a world war, but some of us have not realized what that term means. It truly has been a world war, and sometimes it looks as though the war had not yet ended. If we look abroad over the world and behold things as they really are and not as we want them to be, what do we see? We see in Europe more than 300,000,000 of the sons of men without responsible government, and as we look over the remainder of the world we see countries, with populations in the aggregate of 800,000,000 souls, which are stirred to their very depths with a profound and bitter discontent; and I am not counting, as I summarize those populations, of course, the allied countries, nor do I care at the moment to discuss the conditions which exist in England and in France, nor at any greater length the conditions as they exist in the United States. But leaving the allied countries out of the question, and taking the other countries, aside from Russia and aside from the central powers, where there is a great menacing unrest, the populations of those other countries amount in the aggregate to about 800,000,000 of people.

Yes; it is a victory without peace. This is not peace. This is the aftermath, and who can say what the final harvest shall be?

I do not wish to discuss at any length the international question, as that really is not before us. We hear much intelligent and some unintelligible discussion of the so-called league of nations. But I think too few are asking the question, What kind of nations? What kind of nations are to be built into this federation? Democracies? Let me tell you that you can not form any international compact between democracies disorderly, disordered, unorganized, unintelligent, gelatinous, and changeable in their forms. Any lasting international compact must be one between stable governments, I believe; between republics, between governments organized, integrated, ordinated, as with bone and sinew, standing firm and erect, guided by an emancipated public mind and an enlightened common conscience.

The first step in world reconstruction is the establishment of stable government in places where stable government does not to-day exist. I am not very hopeful that a permanent international compact can be made between governments of totally different forms performing their functions in entirely different ways.

An international compact to be permanent and rational should be a compact between nations which have reached a certain stage of development, which conform to a certain character, and which operate in a certain definite and orderly manner. You can not form a world federation out of disintegrating, crumbling empires. The component nations must approach closely a certain norm of structure, stability, and function. The first step toward forming an international league is to found one single government which shall be permanent and stable because established deep upon the principles of justice applied and secured to every individual in it. I think before we attempt to build it is well for us to examine the nature of the units which are to compose the structure.

It is my view that the first step toward international reconstruction is the making of peace with the enemy, a just peace, compelling the enemy to accept terms which we consider to be just to ourselves and to them. This would result in a quick release of all those in the Army and all those engaged in the nonproductive industries to productive occupations.

The next step would, I believe, be legitimate in international effort on the part of this Republic to help those peoples who have recently been liberated to establish for themselves republics approaching in form our Republic, which we have proved; and I am referring now particularly to Russia. The Russian situation has not been handled constructively. We should not have sent soldiers to Russia; they needed plows; and if we had sent the Russian people the implements and commodities which they needed at the time, it would not have been necessary, in my judgment, for us to have carried on military operations against them. The conditions there are readily understandable. It is not strange that when those people who for so many centuries had dwelt in darkness were liberated they were dazzled and intoxicated as the sunlight of freedom burst suddenly upon them. If their crude experimental form of government is carefully examined, it is not so inherently irrational in itself. It has been the motive which has animated some of the leaders and the methods which they have followed which have caused the difficulty. Of course, the essence of bolshevism, as we call it, is the will and continued attempt on the part of one to compel the other fellow by force to think as he does. That is the essence of it.

The man who has the spirit and will to compel the other fellow to agree with him, even if he has to oppress or crush him to make him do it, is a Bolshevist, whether he dwell in Washington or Moscow. If we had gone to Russia at the proper moment to work constructively there by propaganda, by educational campaign, by the distribution in some proper way of the necessities, implements, and commodities which the Russian peasants demanded, I believe we could have helped the Russian people to establish a free republic for themselves.

At the close of the great Russian campaign against Germany an American officer who had been following the Russian troops throughout the war was talking with a Russian general. This was after some disorder had manifested itself among the Russian troops. This American officer was discussing the situation with the Russian general, and the Russian general said, "Well, in time Russia will be a great Government. There will be established here a great republic. Our people are illiterate, restless; they have not found themselves, but they have three qualities with which a great nation can be founded. They have simplicity, fortitude, and faith, and, possessing those qualities, I believe that my people sometime will create a free and just republic."

After the Russian peasants were allotted their land, after the great estates were divided—and, of course, that division of the estates was nothing socialistic at all; they had to be divided, otherwise the peasants would still of necessity have remained serfs—the peasants were in an unfortunate condition because they had not the implements with which to till the land.

One close and accurate student of Russian affairs has reported that for a long time during the war in Russia 250 farmers had been obliged to work with 18 plows, and that they used these plows continuously night and day; but even with the plows constantly in use the peasants could not properly till the soil with such an inadequate supply of these and other implements.

We should, I say, make a vigorous, affirmative effort toward assisting the newly liberated peoples of the world to form republics. Then we should do here what we are not doing—we should give every possible encouragement to the free expression of purposeful and constructive liberalism. Instead of persecuting people who have new ideas as to what should be done in government, instead of trying to crush out the spirit of the radical, we ought to persuade them to cooperate; we ought to be seeking to organize this liberal and radical spirit so that, instead of following destructive, it would work along constructive lines.

After the various governments have been stabilized there should be started a movement toward international cooperative effort, not for peace alone. Peace in itself is no legitimate ultimate purpose. This is not a pacifist country; it is a progressive country. Any league of nations should not have peace alone for its objective. It should have for its purpose change and progress and advancement throughout the world.

Mr. President, this world does not want now any international league which shall be only a new and perilous balance of power worked out to suit the fancy of a group of European political reactionaries whose very breath, too sweet and dulcet, deadly and poisonous, like that of Rappacini's daughter, withers, blights, and destroys the tender leaves and fragrant buds of human hope.

Mr. President, I do not know the personnel of all of the delegates who sit around that council table, but from what I do know of them I fear that they are men who want a league to preserve the present conditions in the world. If that is the case, every scheme which they formulate must fail. Things can not remain as they are. Combinations and armed coalitions opposed to progress must all inevitably be broken. Such a league of nations is not a new invention. I am not opposing true international friendship and cooperation. I want to see international effort; I want to see international cooperation not for peace only but for world advancement. Let peace be an important incident only in a larger and affirmative plan. Let us have peace, if we can have it with justice, but not otherwise. I am not decrying international cooperative effort, which has change and progress and advance for its purpose, but I am very suspicious of any plan which puts peace first and world progress and human justice second.

I read with profound and sympathetic interest the speech of the President of January 22, 1917, in which he first proposed the league of nations. It was a great address, and with its general principles no man of liberal thought could find the slightest fault. I have listened with very great interest to the more recent debates upon this subject of a league of nations, not, however, because the subject is a new one, for the dream of some form of a league of nations is as old as the recorded thoughts, aspirations, and ambitions of mankind. Some have dreamed of international associations, as they have hoped for permanent peace, while others have advocated them because they were consumed with a hot ambition for universal power.

Phœnicia, at the very dawn of history, 1,300 years before the Christian era, had almost achieved a league when her dominion reached to all parts of the then known world and her ships controlled the traffic of the seas.

Darius the First dreamed of it when he marched his conquering hosts down into the valley of the Indus and then westward into Europe, making Thrace and Macedonia pay tribute as he pressed on beyond the Danube, venturing the fastnesses of Russia and many perils to at last receive his answer upon the plains of Marathon.

The Greeks dreamed of it when they formed the Amphictyonic councils and agreed to worship at and to defend their common shrine.

Alexander the Great dreamed of it when, after creating the Panhellenic League, he led his small but very victorious army of Macedonians and disciplined Greeks against the millions of the Persian Empire, sweeping on through Asia Minor to Egypt, where he who was subjugating the world went into the loneliness of the desert, making a pilgrimage to the shrine of Jupiter-Ammon for authoritative evidence that he was descended from the gods.

The Roman Emperors dreamed of it until beneath the scepter and within the mighty sweep and clutch of the Empire there were arraigned in restless and rebellious ranks the nations of the earth.

The Saracens dreamed of it as they marched across the hot sands of northern Africa to enter Spain, but they awakened when they crossed the Pyrenees to meet, at Tours, Charles Martel with his courageous and invincible Franks.

Charlemagne dreamed of it when he builded his western Roman Empire, and Napoleon the First when he marched his resistless legions up and down the Continent of Europe.

Who will say that William the Second did not dream of it when he launched the mightiest military machine of time and plunged through the weak and helpless lines of the heroic Belgians?

As we contemplate the ruin wrought by four years of such destructive war, it is truly a seductive dream that now, at last, by the swift stroke of a score of pens on parchment, in the magnificent throne room of Louis XVI, in the palace of Versailles, the very marbles of which are, in a sense, cemented together by the lifeblood wrung from the hearts of the peasants of France, without further disorder, without discord, with no future shedding of blood, without more teaching and enlightenment, without further labor and penetration of missionary into the dark places of the earth, with no more sacrifice by saint and martyr and seer, all the teeming millions of the sons of men of every race, tribe, and condition, and nation are to be united into a universal brotherhood, which henceforth and forever shall be ruled by charity, by love, by unimpassioned and impartial justice, by the two great golden commandments of God, and that from now on every passage of the seas and all of the paths of the turbulent oceans shall be absolutely and always free to all, and that throughout the widest confines of earth's domain the eternal word of the Spirit shall be the accepted law of mankind.

Even the authors of the plan have admitted a few slight difficulties. I shall not now be so unkind as to speak of the frailties of our nature, for we might trust that some of these might be submerged in these rising tides of New World idealism. I shall not ask you to discuss with me how those forms of human avarice and hypertrophied ambitions which have their origin in the elemental instincts and hungers of the predatory beasts who with blood-red tooth and dripping claw roam restlessly the jungle wilds shall at once by the signing of this miraculous parchment be extracted from the souls of men. I shall not now detain you for the consideration of what some would no doubt call the wholly insignificant problem of the high and low pressure areas of population in the world—the oppressive, stifling, overcrowding of some nations, the underpopulation of others, resulting in a fierce, hot, relentless competition between the populous industrial countries for the trade, the raw products, and, in some not too rare instances, the exploitation of the less populous ones. I shall not at this time refer to those very slight problems which must be solved, possibly, in order that the plan may be made sound and successful, such as the deep differences in race, systems of education, culture, and ideals which cause such remarkable antipathies and such bitter antagonisms. If only all of the nations of the earth could be formed into a liberal and progressive federation whose object should be not universal pacifism, for peace in itself may be, I say, a miserable end, but for justice and equal opportunity for advancement between nations, each so organized as to secure absolute equality of opportunity and social justice for each individual within the nation; then indeed would the dream of the centuries come true.

But to form a league of less than all the nations, a league founded on material considerations, a league to carry on war after the war, a league not of purpose and of progress, but merely a league of passivity to preserve the status quo, a league designed and dominated by the reactionary ministers who have sought to suppress the expression of and hence do not represent the truly liberal thought of their respective countries, this would be but to repeat the crime which was committed a century ago at the disgraceful congress of Vienna.

So far as I am concerned, and I believe I can speak with some confidence for many of the liberal and progressive thinkers of this and some of the other countries in this matter, I believe the formation of a league worked out in accordance with the conceptions of such reactionary ministers would be only to establish a new and perilous balance of power, which would invite fresh and perhaps final world disaster. Certain it is that so far as the liberals of America are concerned, they are looking with profound suspicion upon the proposal to establish such a league of nations as that to which the reactionaries of this country seem to be now so thoroughly committed. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to enter upon the reconstruction program which looks to the ultimate establishment of an international cooperation of purpose and of progress, provided we can enter upon such reconstruction program at the proper time. No thoughtful, practical, competent statesman would have the temerity to suggest that we can now achieve a federation of the world in a spirit of vengeance and hatred, while European nations are breaking up and anarchy and turmoil under blood-red banners are spreading devastation into not only all but a small portion of that great continent, but over a large area of Asia as well. Under any other circumstance it would be elementary to say that you can not form a federation of the world out of disintegrating nations and crumbling empires. I do not hesitate to say that however exalted may be his purposes, the views of any statesman are unworthy of even passing consideration who would at this time seek to bring about a better international order until we have first attempted to establish national stability and integrity.

My views upon this subject are expressed in a resolution which was introduced early in January, which resolution called for an immediate peace with the enemy; then for a Pan American conference looking to the establishment of a Pan American league; and then later for an intercontinental conference, if I may call it that, between the nations of the Western Continent and those upon the European Continent, to see whether some plan could be worked out for the progress and advancement of the world, and particularly for the advancement of the people who have lived for centuries under conditions that in their essentials have remained practically unchanged.

How shall the governments meet their responsibilities to the people of Africa, for example?

If the international agreements are not to be merely for the preservation of present world conditions, but constructive and progressive in their purpose, then at Paris there must be formulated policies for the advancement, through cooperation, of the backward peoples of the world. How shall the problem of Africa be solved?

The African problem is a stupendous one, in which are involved many great questions affecting the future history of the world. Africa represents about one-fourth of the earth's land surface. Take Europe with its 3,795,788 square miles, India with its 1,766,642 square miles, China with its 1,532,420 square miles, the United States with its 3,092,679 square miles, and lay them down on Africa and there will still be room to spare. Add Ireland, 32,360 square miles; Scotland, 30,405 square miles; Wales, 7,446 square miles; and still the area of Africa will not be covered. There, on that continent, is every resource—coal, mineral, and water power. There we find every climate—the hot, dry air of the desert; the cold, invigorating atmosphere of plateau and mountain; the damp and deadly miasmas of swamp and jungle, many of which only await the engineering and constructive skill of man to be redeemed. It has been estimated that one-eighth of the world's population lives on the Dark Continent—for we must still call it the Dark Continent—many of its inhabitants living under conditions of heathenism and savagery substantially the same as those which prevailed in the unknown Hinterland when the Pyramids were new and the great Rameses ruled in Egypt. Shall this great problem of Africa be solved by new partitions, balanced rivalries, and competitions, all for exploitation, or shall there be cooperation for exploration, constructive development, with an education and an elevation of the inhabitants, with due consideration for their environmental and mental needs? The German colonies in Africa occupied an area almost one-third of that of the United States. How shall these colonies be used and disposed of in harmony with such a constructive and cooperative policy as is so sorely needed?

The civilized countries of the world owe a duty to Africa which has not been met. What are we to do about it? Are we to form a league to preserve world conditions as they are? This can not be done. There must be change and progress and advancement. The whitening bones and rusting manacles which strew the paths from central Africa to the Portuguese slave colonies on the west will plead to Heaven in protest until this African problem is solved in some constructive and humanitarian way.

I am urging an extra session of the Congress of the United States because it is my duty to do so. I do not think, in the face of such a world condition, that it is tolerable that the legislative branches of this great Republic should be dissolved when there are great national and world problems demanding such immediate solution.

These problems will not wait. If the legislative bodies which are presumed to represent the people in whom there has been awakened a great, new, liberal spirit do not solve them, the people must solve them for themselves. The old world is passing and we must face the new, meeting all exigencies with courage and with constructive legislative measures.

Oh, yes; we have some problems here in our own country—problems we have never solved, and, to our shame be it said, problems which we have never really with determination and intelligence and persistence tried to solve; problems which we have been trying to gloss over and minimize.

I have referred to this question of unemployment. Now, this problem of unemployment is not any transient one. It is here all the time. It is not a war problem. It is a problem we have with us constantly. Unemployment means poverty, and the poor we have always with us. There is only one reason for poverty in this country. That reason is governmental incompetence.

We have here a country capable of supporting in comfort and luxury 500,000,000 people. And, if we could support upon our soil five times our present population, there is something radically wrong with the machinery of our Government when 14 per cent of our people live in penury and want. There is something radically wrong when there are 10,000,000 people in the United States living in what is called primary poverty, which means a condition of poverty where the individual has not enough to eat and to wear, and not such suitable accommodations as would keep him in fair physical condition. There is something radically wrong when we have 3,000,000 paupers who must live upon the charity doled out to them by their more fortunate brothers.

I have already several times referred to the subject of unemployment and to the necessity of organizing efficient agencies for the dealing with this problem which is so fundamental, for out of unemployment, I say, grows that poverty which is the mother of so many human ills. I have already alluded to the fact that the census, as now conducted, and that the employment agencies, as now operated, do not and can not furnish us with any adequate statistics of unemployment. It is not generally realized in this country how widespread and persistent is this great evil of unemployment.

In 1900 it was estimated by the Census Bureau that 23,753,836 males of 10 years of age and over were engaged in gainful occupations, and that of this number 5,227,472, or approximately 22 per cent, were unemployed at some time during the year, and that of 5,319,397 females, 10 years of age and over, who were engaged in gainful occupations, 1,241,492, or approximately 23.3 per cent, were unemployed. Or, out of a total of 29,073,233 of all of those employed thus, 6,468,964, or 22.3 per cent, were unemployed at some time during the year. These figures, which I have quoted as they are given, are, of course, only approximately accurate, but probably they are most conservative estimates.

That is a serious problem. When you find that over one-fifth of all the working people are out of work because they can not find work to do in a country like this, you can make up your mind that something is wrong. As unemployment is the mother of poverty, so poverty is the mother of countless human ills—ill health, illiteracy, child labor, disease, malnutrition. But why call the roll of all the grisly train that marches after poverty, the daughter of unemployment?

The United States Bureau of Labor, in one of its bulletins, states:

> To the frequent question as to the amount of unemployment in this country, the reply must be that the statistics do not make possible any estimate of the number of unemployed persons in the United States at any time.

It is quite probable that the figures given before indicate those who are unemployed from necessity, and that we have no knowledge whatever of those who are unemployed from choice, either because of an indisposition to work or because of an inability to find to them attractive employment. It is to be remembered, of course, that much voluntary unemployment is the result of a maladjustment of the individual to his environment because of his training and education, which may have been defective or unsuitable. In connection with this subject of unemployment I shall not discuss the seasonal unemployment which, of course, contributes to these figures of unemployment which are so startling, and the periodical variations which cause unemployment during times of industrial depression following eras of prosperity.

Not only is this subject of unemployment practically important in connection with measures looking to the amelioration of the condition of those who desire work and can not find it, but it is most important to know what proportion of the population is ordinarily engaged in gainful or productive activities, in order that we may estimate what reserve of productive capacity there may be which can be drawn upon to meet sudden emergencies, such as war particularly, demanding the utmost possible of our productive power. Probably in ordinary times the proportion of workers to the rest of the population, taking the average of a long number of years and disregarding seasonal and periodic unemployment, does not vary greatly. In 1890, for example, the total number of employed was 22,735,661 out of a population, of those 10 years of age and over, of 47,413,559, or 48 per cent of the population over 10 years of age and 36.3 per cent of the total population. In other words, it is probable that in ordinary times approximately one-third of the population supports by its labor the remaining two-thirds. While it is an important fact that the wealth of the country and the prosperity of its citizens must in a general way depend upon the proportion of its productive capacity which is generally employed, I shall not discuss this large question at this time. The practical problem which confronts us is the finding of employment for those who habitually work and who desire to work but who are unable to find suitable employment.

Our statistics, while because of the method of their gathering they are only approximately accurate, are nevertheless abundant and convincing on this subject of the unemployment of those desiring work. The American Labor Legislation Review, Volume V, No. 2, gives a very valuable summary of this subject, in which it gives the figures gathered by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and other agencies on the large number of the unemployed in New York in 1914 and 1915, to which figures I have heretofore alluded, and the census figures, showing that approximately one-quarter of all workers are at certain periods of the year unemployed; that out of 24,400,402 working-class families in 33 States 12,154 heads of families had been unemployed for an average of 9.43 weeks during the year, and that in New York State the reports of the Department of Labor indicated an average of unemployment of 18.1 per cent, and that the Federal census of manufacturers of 1905 shows that in one month 7,017,138 wage earners were employed, while in another month there were only 4,599,091, leaving a difference of 2,418,047, or practically two and one-half million workers who were either unemployed or compelled to seek new employment during the year.

While of course some of the unemployment is due to physical incapacity, yet a study made at a municipal lodging house in 1914, where 2,000 men were examined, showed that 62 per cent of the total were considered physically able to do hard manual labor, 18 per cent medium hard work, and 9 per cent light work only, while only 10 per cent were considered to be physically incapacitated.

There are figures to indicate that while the proportion of those habitually employed to the total population does not ordinarily, under normal conditions, vary widely over a period of years, yet there has been a gradual increase in this proportion of those so habitually employed. During the extraordinary conditions of war no doubt a much larger proportion than one-third of the population was productively employed. The English statistics, showing the large increase in the number of women in industry, clearly indicate that England drew heavily, of necessity, upon her reserve productive capacity by utilizing more workers; but our statistics on this subject are deficient. Nevertheless it is certain that a much larger number than ordinarily were employed in productive industry, and that these having learned to labor productively will desire to continue in gainful occupations. It is quite possible that as high a proportion as 50 per cent of our population was at work, including those in military establishments, during the war, and if this be true we may anticipate a greater unemployment problem than we have ever had before. For a long time a readjustment has been in progress in the direction of an increase in the proportion of those engaged in industry to the total population and toward an increase in the average age of those employed by the abolishment of child labor and the prolongation of the period of school life. When I discuss the subject of illiteracy and the improper training of our youth, I shall again call attention to the fact that approximately 76.1 per cent of those of school age are under 15 years of age, and that only one in five continues his education after the age of 15. A further readjustment, such as that to which I have referred, by abolishing child labor and by the prolongation of the period of training would result in great good in many directions.

I desire to call particular attention at this time, when the problem of surplus unemployed labor is so pressing, to the supreme importance of abolishing child labor and of the placing in schools for further training at Government expense of all those in need of further education, for by doing this we would go far in the direction of taking up what may be called the labor slack. I need not enlarge upon what I have already said concerning the dealing with the child-labor problem by the placing of all children in school.

As I stated the other evening, I am one of those peculiar individuals who believe you can not solve problems until you see them. We can not work out these problems until we know all the factors involved in them. For the same amount of money we are expending at present we could have, by a proper reorganization of the agencies, a rational census, which would inform us exactly what the condition of the country was with reference to such problems at any particular time.

We have some very serious international problems. I know that many of you hate the Russians. I know that the term Bolshevist has become a term of reproach, and I know that it is human that in our hearts there should be a hatred of the Germans. But let me warn you against the serious consideration of any international policy which would force together the Germans and the Russians. The Germans are the greatest organizers in the world, and all huge Russia needs is a better national organization. Let me raise a voice of warning against any international policy which would tend, as our adopted and announced policy is tending, to place those nations together, for if by chance Germany and Russia should be welded together in the fires of the hatred of the allied nations, and if they should then make appeal to the smoldering antagonisms on the part of some of the oriental peoples toward the western—China, for example, or India—I tell you, Senators, there would then be created another combination or armed coalition against the one now proposed under this so-called league, to hold which in check would require all the power of our western civilization. It would be fatal to allow Germany and Russia to cooperate in organizing and arraying the eastern against the western powers.

Senators, beware of the proposed coalition which would tend to divide the world into two mighty armed camps. A Senator upon this floor recently described the former alliance of Russia,

France, and England as a league of nations, and so it was. But let us have no new leagues worked out on such a plan. We must deal constructively with this Russian problem. There is no room for emotionalism in international politics. Reason must prevail. There must be foresight and cool calculation. We must make an effort to curb this hatred for and abuse of the Russian people and swiftly formulate a policy toward Russia which would bind that Nation to us in the perpetual bonds of friendship and in a peace not to be broken. A most thoughtful student of this problem has said that Russia, being agricultural, continental, and now liberated, is our most natural ally in Europe. If for no other purpose, the Senate should remain in session to formulate plans for the winning again of the friendship of this mighty Russian Nation by helping its people to solve their serious economic and governmental problems.

I have collected quite a large number of facts here with reference to the unemployment problem in this country and with reference to some of the other pressing problems which must be dealt with during the reconstruction period and in an entirely new and radical manner. We have already recognized the fact that the conduct of employment bureaus is a legitimate function of the Federal Government, because we already have them. There is no question as to the constitutionality of our having Federal employment bureaus. The argument now seems to be that it is constitutional to have inefficient Federal employment bureaus but it would be unconstitutional to have efficient ones.

We have Federal public-health bureaus, but they are not functioning properly; they are not organized effectively. When I interrupted the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in his very able argument—and I would say, in passing, that it is a source of regret to me that more could not have been in the Chamber during his most masterly address this morning on the subject of reconstruction—I asked him this question, whether he thought that poverty and misery in this country would be increased as a result of the expenditures for the war. We were, it is true, as I said to him then, a fairly wealthy country when the war broke out. Our national wealth, according to the Census Bureau, was estimated in 1912 at something over $187,739,000,000—not a niggardly estimate but a good, big, generous American estimate, when we consider that the assessed valuation of all of the property in the United States in that year amounted to about $69,500,000,000.

A recent debate disclosed the fact that we had spent about $33,000,000,000 on this war, or between one-sixth and one-fifth of our total national wealth as estimated by the census, or well toward one-half our national wealth as disclosed by the assessed valuation of our property as given above. I asked the Senator from Wisconsin if he thought that the expenditure of a sum one-half the amount of our assessed valuation of wealth would in the end result in greater misery and poverty among our people in the absence of some constructive policy which would result in a quick recovery from these fearful drains of war, and the Senator was sure that unfortunate conditions would probably by such expenditures be aggravated.

Mr. President, we wondered why the Germans fought on against what seemed to be such hopeless odds; but this may be the answer: Among the German people there are some of the shrewdest political economists in all the world, and they calculated that if they could keep us spending $30,000,000,000 a year for two or three years, we and the allies would become financially embarrassed, and that they might then at last overcome the world. No nation in all the world could have long withstood an enemy while spending money as we were spending it. War is not a matter of arms alone. It is no longer a matter of battles, a series of such brilliant charges as Napoleon led across Europe with a few hundred thousand men. It is nation standing against nation, resource against resource, dollar against dollar, reserve power against reserve power, and in the end the nation is sure to win that can save the most men and money while securing the greatest possible power in actual conflict.

We were bleeding money at every pore, and we had built up such a spirit of intolerance here that for one to ask whether a particular expenditure was justified or not was almost considered to be treason. The treason, if treason there was, must have been on the part of those who refused to consider the need for economy, for in the end, if he could have held out, they would have proven themselves to be the true friends of the Kaiser. I can not verify it, but I believe that out of every dollar expended for the war 40 cents were utterly wasted, thrown away because of the spirit of intolerance which would persecute a man for asking why this extravagant expenditure and why that, when true patriotism consisted in hoarding every resource to provide men, ammunition, and ordnance with which to crush the enemy. If we merely drift on now with our hundred-year-old machinery and go back to our old-fashioned way of conducting the public business, this country will be a poverty-oppressed Nation for a century to come as a result of all of this useless and wicked waste, for it was that, even if it was incidental to a noble and heroic undertaking.

With our growing population and our depleted resources it has now become a necessity for us to organize the Nation upon a rational basis, like one great industry, in which every possible producer who will shall have a place to work to assist in the creation of that new national wealth which must not only offset these fearful losses but meet the constantly growing and pressing national needs.

Mr. President, the liberty for which our heroes fought on the banks of the Marne must be battled for even yet again on platform and in forum and in the legislative halls of the Republic if those who have been liberated from the menace of governmental bondage are to be more truly liberated from the bondage of the oppression of unfavored and unfair circumstances, those narrow and confining circumstances which prevent that higher development and enlightenment of the individual without which there can be no life of abundant freedom.

[At this point a message from the House of Representatives was received announcing the passage by the House of a resolution relative to the rights of Ireland.]

Mr. FRANCE. There is the voice of Ireland. If it is anything for Ireland, I shall ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. FRANCE. I do not yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Maryland to ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution just received affecting Ireland.

Mr. FRANCE. I presumed it could be done without my yielding the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think this resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. At any rate, I do not think a resolution of that character should be called up at this hour, when there are only a half dozen Senators on the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. I think that is a perfectly proper suggestion on the part of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. President, I have not really touched upon what I wished to say with reference to the census, and I have scarcely touched upon the subject of national reconstruction, of which the census question is but one phase.

I was saying that the international questions are very interesting, but, after all, we must remember that our destiny lies on this side of the ocean, and that it is by what we do here that the fate of the world shall be determined. It is for us to build here a Government so strong, so free, so just to every other nation and to every citizen within it and in every other nation that not alone by the balance of world power, which we do now and must forever hold, but by the resistless persuasiveness of our own exalted purposes, wrought into the fabric of a beneficent and efficient government, we may lead all the nations on toward that better, more perfect, permanently peaceful civilization under which not only every nation but every man of all these millions of the sons of men who, under present world conditions, dwell in ignorance and degradation may be lifted up to a place in the sun, up to the level of the higher life, growth, happiness; up to the level of a larger opportunity; up to some vision of those eternal truths which a man must see, of which he must have some comprehension, if he is to live a life of abundant freedom.

Mr. President, these are but informal remarks. I have not reached the body of what I had intended to say, but, in view of the increasing daylight, I feel disposed to yield the floor.

I shall not ask for the immediate consideration of my resolution, which would have advised the President that it is the sense of the Senate that there should be an extra session of Congress. I trust that the friends of the President in his own party, for the sake of that party and for the sake of the great Republic, the problems of which can not wait until next December to be solved, will go to the President and plead with him in order that the legislative bodies of the Republic may continue after to-day's midday sun.

I know it is wearing; I know there are many men in this Chamber who are worn, weak, and weary with the burdens which they have borne; but I know that there is not one of them who is not willing to go on working, who is not willing to stay here, if need be, until he gives up his life in the cause of the Republic, a faithful servant of the Republic, firm in the faith that if he shall fall in her service some other, perhaps better, braver man will seize from his weakened arm and trembling hands her glorious banner and bear it yet ever forward in the van of the vast procession of mankind, whose faces, eastward looking, shine now with the first radiance caught from the glancing rays of a glorious sun rising in splendor on a better age.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. With the permission of the Senator, I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to make the final report of the joint subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives. The subcommittee makes its final report and recommends that the committee be discontinued. I wish to file the report at this time as the law requires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire any other action taken other than the filing of the report?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am rather of the opinion that the report ought to be agreed to, because the committee asks to be discontinued. It is a unanimous report from the committee, and, if there is no objection, I should like to have that done.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not yield the floor for the purpose of taking up and discussing the report.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is not to be discussed. In any case, the report itself would carry with it the discontinuance of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will it provoke any controversy?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it is unanimously signed by all the members of the joint committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Will the Senator from Illinois lose the floor by virtue of the consideration of the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. If I am to lose the floor, I will not yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not so understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. As much as I dislike to, I feel that I must object to the matter being considered. I can not yield more than for the presentation of the report. I think the parliamentary ruling will be that if I yield for the consideration of the report that I had yielded the floor. If the Chair will announce and the Senate will agree unanimously that I will not lose the floor, then I will consent.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I had no intention of taking the Senator off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report presented by the Senator from South Carolina will be received and printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Report of the joint subcommittee of the Committees on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, created under joint resolution No. 25 of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The above-named committee begs leave to report as follows:

The joint subcommittee, created by public resolution No. 25 of the the Sixty-fourth Congress, made its report to Congress on January 9, 1917, and recommended therein that the time for making a complete report be extended to the first Monday in December following. Congress approved the recommendation, and in public resolution No. 44, Sixty-fourth Congress, approved January 15, 1917, so provided.

It was the purpose of the joint subcommittee to enter upon this investigation actively upon the adjournment of Congress on March 4 of that year. However, war with Germany was declared in April of the same year, and conditions became so abnormal that no investigation conducted would elicit information affording a safe basis for a comprehensive revision of existing laws and methods of railroad operation believed to be susceptible of material improvement under normal conditions. Recognizing the difficulties and importance of the task, Congress, in an act approved October 6, 1917, extended the time for the making of this report until the first Monday in December, 1918.

Notwithstanding the work incident to the war, your committee has taken a large amount of testimony and devoted much time to the study of the questions covered by the resolution. Since the creation of the joint subcommittee the Government has taken over the railroads and operated them as a war necessity.

In view of the fact that the appropriate committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, respectively, have the whole subject under consideration—the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate having just concluded, for the time being at least, exhaustive hearings—it is deemed inadvisable that the said joint subcommittee resume its activities, and it is so recommended.

Respectfully submitted.

E. D. SMITH.
O. W. UNDERWOOD.
JOE T. ROBINSON.
CHARLES E. TOWNSEND.
ALBERT B. CUMMINS.
T. W. SIMS.
FRANK E. DOREMUS.
DAN V. STEPHENS.
JOHN J. ESCH.
E. L. HAMILTON.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. For what purpose does the Senator desire me to yield?

Mr. REED. I am not trying to take the Senator from the floor. I am addressing the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think anyone would do that; but the Chair is the presiding officer of this body, and I am subject to his opinion.

Mr. REED. I wanted to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is always in order, of course.

Mr. REED. I think it is in the nature of it. I wanted to ask the Chair if formal reports of committees could not be handed in, put in the basket, and be printed in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no morning hour. An objection by a single Senator to the report of the committee would prevent it from being presented. The Chair has no idea whether any Senator will raise the question as to the Senator from Illinois losing the floor by yielding to the Senator from Missouri for the purpose of making a report. The Chair does not raise the question himself, but it has been the uniform decision of the Presiding Officer of this body that if some one does raise the question the Senator will lose the floor.

Mr. REED. I was not asking about that, but I was asking if a report could not be put in the basket like we do bills?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Any Senator could raise an objection to the Senator from Illinois yielding for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would really like to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. REED. I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I fear that I would lose my right to the floor.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN resumed his speech. After having spoken for a few minutes,

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois if he will yield to me to render a report from the Woman Suffrage Committee. I understand the Senator from Illinois is in favor of woman suffrage, and I should like to ask the Senator to yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. For what purpose?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To make a report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I must decline to yield. I would greatly like to show the courtesy to the Senator, but the time is so short in which I can give this information to the public that it might be stopped if I yield to merely parliamentary formalties.

Mr. President, this is the only occasion for the present session that I shall have an opportunity to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD something that has been overlooked, but is of considerable significance. It is a belated report on the "Four Minute Men." Seeing that the bond bill has gone through and that next month there will be a campaign on for the sale of Government securities, in which the same organization will be used, it becomes important to give this information, so that this machinery may be availed of in like manner for the coming campaign.

The author of this is now abroad in the service of his country. Mr. Creel was the author of this delectable document. It is headed, "(4) Minute Men (4) Copyright 1917." The figure "4" is inclosed in a circle on both the right and the left, and the words "Minute Men" between the two. Below is the expression "Report on speaker." Here is the way the matter is classified, this is the method of presenting the subject: "Name of speaker"; "date of speech"; "subject of speech"; "spoke for — minutes"; "speech was —— good." Then, after the word "good," is a square similar to that on the selective primary ballot in some States, in which the intelligent voter can mark his choice. "Speech was —— good"; then a square for marking; then the word "Fair"; then another square for marking; then follows "Bad," with another square. Therefore one is limited to the same space in expressing his sentiments by marking an "X."

Below are the plans and specifications. On the left hand of each notation is a square, so that the person making the report can mark it up. First, "Not loud enough." Not many Senators would be checked up improperly on this specification; second, "Not forceful"; third, "Did not know subject"; fourth, "Bad language"; fifth, "Remarks offensive." These are the demerit classifications in which it steadily goes from bad to worse.

On the other side are merit specifications, with a square before each for marking: "Put it across"; "Well received"; "Good applause"; "Made big hit"; "Did not appear." This appears to be the crowning calamity as well as the high flood of good fortune of the entire collection. "Please put 'X' in square or squares which are most applicable to speech. Please criticize frankly and freely. * * * Until further notice, speaker should report at ——— o'clock. Sign name and theater."

"Signed ———, manager."

This was the blank sent out to all of the moving-picture shows and theaters in the United States where the Four Minute Men appeared for the manager to report the kind of performer the Four Minute Man was.

I can imagine that under the head "Put it across" there are many optimistic reports made. I can well understand "Received raptures of applause of the audience."

"Made a big hit." I can imagine that many times that was reported favorably. Generally speaking, the Four Minute Men were a very useful collection. I intended at the time I made some remarks some months ago on this subject to include this, but unfortunately I had mislaid it and could not incorporate it at that time in the body of my remarks. So now I embrace the opportunity to perfect the comments I submitted at that time on this question. It would have been unfair to have left out this, because it is one of Mr. Creel's masterpieces and ought to be preserved in the gallery among other national celebrities.

I have next, Mr. President, a subject which I do not enter upon with any great satisfaction, but because it is necessary; but before taking that up as a sort of addendum to the former report, I have one that is copyrighted by Roger W. Babson, the statistician of one of the departments.

Mr. Babson is not only a statistician of note, but he is a magazine writer of considerable repute. Mr. Babson has dealt with statistics in many ways. He can produce some of the most marvelous as well as the most stupefying results when he is running at large among a large quantity of statistics of anybody I know of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wonder if the Senator would permit us to go into executive session to confirm some nominations?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should very much like to if the emergencies permitted, but they do not. I regret that a number of very deserving gentlemen ought to have their appointments and nominations confirmed, but I shall be obliged to forego that luxury.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to know just what the question is that is now before the Senate. The Senator has addressed the Senate upon this bill once, if my recollection serves me.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Colorado is in error. I addressed myself to the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to suspend the rules. I am now addressing myself to the $750,000,000 appropriation, section 7 of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. It would require, of course, some statement of that kind to convey to me the notion that the Senator is discussing the merits of the bill. If my inquiry can only be answered in such a way as that the Senator can keep the floor, of course I am helpless.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is clearly the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to suspend the rules. That is the question that is before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Even then, I will say to the Senator, the Senator from Illinois has the right to speak twice on that subject.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not say he could not speak twice under the rules, but I said that was the motion before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, proceed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I can not yield.

Mr. MYERS. Just a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the floor, and the time is so short that I fear I can not complete my remarks.

Mr. MYERS. This is only a question. It could not take the Senator from the floor. May I ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. If it will not interfere with my possession of the floor.

Mr. MYERS. It could not—just a question. I will undertake to answer for that. What I want to ask is this: If the Senate would give unanimous consent to go into executive session, and would give unanimous consent that upon the ending of the executive session the Senator from Illinois should have the floor and resume his speech, would he consent to that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, much as I would like to go into executive session, as far as I am concerned, I know that it would interrupt the continuity of my remarks. I have a carefully prepared address and I do not wish to have it marred by interruptions, even of executive sessions and the confirmation of a great number of deserving patriots.

I was about to remark on Mr. Babson's production. It is headed "Velvet, or the Rag-bag."

This may seem to be remotely connected with the $750,000,000 appropriation, but it will connect itself by a very logical sequence in a short time.

> Velvet, or the rag bag. Excess wages are so much velvet. Hang on to that velvet. Velvet now, or rag bags later.
> United States Department of Labor.
> W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor.
> For extra copies address Roger W. Babson, Director General, Information and Education Service, Department of Labor, 1706 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.

Anybody who is not director general or something now is of small account. He is a mere subordinate. These imposing documents are sent out for the purpose of directing the public in economizing. I suppose that is a handmaid of the local savings bank in every community, advising them to keep what remains above the high cost of living and add it to their accumulations.

The matter to which I referred a moment ago, that was temporarily interrupted by this explanation, is one part of the press report on the Executive's comments on certain Members of this body. I did not wish at that time to pursue this branch of the inquiry. It was early in the evening, Mr. President. I felt somewhat buoyant, full of superabundant vitality, and perhaps I was more prone to levity and displayed a lack of being impressed with my solemn surroundings; but I thought it best not to pursue the matter into any serious inquiry at all, so I did not take up the branch of this press report which seemed at the time to possess serious consequences, but I now do so.

The press report continues that—

> If he—
>
> The Executive—
>
> had his way, he would hang them—
>
> The Senators opposing him—
>
> upon a gibbet as high as heaven, but that the gibbet would not be erected in the direction of heaven.

I take this subject to any corrections that may be made. I trust it may be so corrected that even the truth of this statement will be disputed and that the Executive did not indulge in such remarks.

I say in a spirit of seriousness, Mr. President, that if this report is false, the newspaper or the reporter writing such news in a newspaper published in the Capital and circulating it before the general public ought to be investigated, to the end that it be not repeated. If the report is correct, in substance at least, an investigation is equally necessary. Men are in the Leavenworth Penitentiary for saying less than this about officers of the United States Government. It is a felony if it is anything. If any person outside were to make a statement that if the President favored the peace league and fought Senators who were opposed to it, the President ought to be hanged as high as heaven, a Senator making that statement outside of this body ought to be indicted and sent to prison. If he made it inside of this body, he ought to be dealt with under the parliamentary situation and rules so as to discipline him for such a statement. It passes the rules either of criticism or of argument. Merely because certain Senators differ from the President on matters which will soon be pending here is no occasion for the severity of the remarks, assuming them to be true. If not, the fault is upon the newspaper and the person writing them. If they are true, the fault is upon the Executive for making such a statement. If he made the remarks he would require this morning 45 individual gibbets to be erected in Washington. There would be 45 executions. Assuming this press report to be true, he must have absorbed while in Europe strange ideas of free government. The President has committed an act which is a crime if committed by others. Is he beyond the laws? This sounds like the language of kings. They have executioners. It sounds like the king who ordered Mordecai in the scriptural days to be suspended from the gibbet. If sojourn abroad leads to such language, let us pray that few of our population will make the trip; that they will remain on their native soil and keep intact the ideals of free government and the use of proper language.

The President, assuming that he will leave to-morrow according to schedule, will have a souvenir of the fray to take with him to Paris. The resolution presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, with the signatures of a number of the Members on this side of the Chamber, will be for the Parisian information on what public sentiment is and what the views of the Senators are on this question. It may look somewhat to them like there is a sentiment against the league, and that it would be more popular in this country to devote the energies of the peace conference to drafting a treaty of peace, in order that it might be seasonably concluded.

Section 7 of the bill H. R. 16187 reads as follows:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for carrying out the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, $750,000,000, which shall be in addition to the appropriation of $500,000,000 made in section 6 of said act, and shall be subject in all respects to the same authority for, and restriction of, expenditure as the said $500,000,000.

Let me recur now to the $500,000,000 revolving fund provided in the act of March 21, 1918. The $500,000,000 revolving fund has, like all other revolving funds, revolved with such rapidity it has vanished. It is no longer a resource for the relief of the railways. The $750,000,000 added makes $1,250,000,000 required to be appropriated from the Public Treasury for the relief of the steam railways of the country. This $1,250,000,000 is the first price we pay for the Government operation of the railways. Concede that it be a war measure; concede that it would not be fair at all to say that it is an incident of Government ownership. I shall not argue exclusively upon that ground, because, in fairness to those who believe otherwise, it will hardly be a just comparison to make. However, it does demonstrate one thing—that in spite of an increase in the earnings of the railways, it does not enable us to pay the operating expenses of the roads.

We are entirely familiar with the—about 40 per cent—increase in freight rates and passenger fares and the war tax upon traffic. We are familiar with the extra charges levied for a time on traveling in other than merely day coaches. All of them together made a very large increase in income.

The Interstate Commerce Commission reporting for 1918 for eight months beginning with January and ending in August—I have not the last one, but the average kept up fairly well for eight months—showed the operating revenues were $3,051,828,939, as compared with 1917 of like operating revenues of $2,611,121,387.

Quoting from memory, not having before me the report for the full 12 months from the commission, I state, in round figures, that the increase in railway operating revenues for the 12 months of 1918 were something like $4,000,000,000, compared with 1917 of something over $3,000,000,000. As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] stated early this morning or late last night, the increase in the operating revenues of the railways whose incomes are above one billion showed an increase of one billion for 1918. We would expect by such vast increases, notwithstanding some increases in operating expenses, to have shown at least a small net revenue. We realize that the cost of material has increased, that there are certain improvements that must be made, that there are some of the maintenance charges that are indispensable to the safe operation of the roads. These cost more than in ordinary times. Some increases have been made in the pay rolls and wage scale. We were all entirely familiar when we heard the demand for the eight-hour day from the railway trainmen's union what it meant. We knew that it did not mean a shortening of their actual hours of service down to eight hours. We knew that it meant an increase of wages and nothing else. I was prepared for that result, because I am myself sufficiently familiar with the issue to know that that was what would happen, and it did happen. The men were not complaining about working over eight hours. What they wished was overtime pay, and that it what they got.

Altogether the operating expenses in 1918 increased so greatly over the operating expenses of 1917 as to show no net revenue for the roads of the class named—those with operating revenues of one billion or more. This does not take into account the smaller lines with less than $1,000,000 operating revenues per annum.

Not only was there no net revenues, but when the 12 months were figured up by the accountants, when a report was made, it showed that under Government control there was a deficit of more than $200,000,000. It was first reported at $250,000,000, but that was an estimated figure. Subsequently it was reduced to a trifle over $200,000,000. This means, Mr. President, that all the income of the railways of the class named was paid out, and not only that, but after paying the charges against the roads and their operating expenses, more than $200,000,000 of deficit occurred. Possibly some of this $500,000,000 revolving fund was devoted to taking care of this deficit. It is characteristic, however, of all Government undertakings that if there is anything in the Treasury properly devoted to that undertaking the cash disappears, but the undertaking still goes on. However much the income may be, however much the public may be taxed in railway fares and in freight rates, in every instance the increased operating revenue disappears and a deficit results; any appropriation made of the public funds is in addition to that set aside to pay this deficit, and the deficit continues from year to year. I do not know of any Government undertaking that ever showed a net revenue or surplus. Invariably they spend all they can get their hands on and then rush into the Treasury and get anything more that may be accessible. This is following the general rule on such subjects.

Therefore, when we remember that the railways are owned by private parties, the difficulty immediately suggests itself. The shares are held by a great variety of people, some wealthy, but many of them of small means. The securities, in the form of bonds, trust, or equipment certificates, are held by a more general distribution. Some of them are securities proper for the investment of trust funds. Savings banks take them. Various forms of trust having long-time maturity are invested in the stocks of some of these bonds and certificates.

There are certain railways that never have been speculative enterprises. I can name a score of them. I know a great many persons in private life about whom the world knows but little, comparatively small investors who have bought not only the shares of those nonspeculative roads, but they have bought the bonds and equipment certificates as well. Illustrations are the Chicago Northwestern Road has not been a speculative one; the Illinois Central has not; the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy has not been a speculative road. In the shares representing the capital stock of these companies there is no water. The shares are in fact boiled down. The actual capital invested, represented by surplus and by property, both of which are actually employed in the operating of the road, exceed, many at least once, some 50 per cent, some 30 per cent the capitalized shares that represent the nominal value only of the property.

There is no reason apparent why the Government should not out of the earnings of the roads have had a fund to pay the standard return prescribed in the act under which they were taken over by the Government. What has the Government done with all the revenues collected last year? It will soon be 12 months since the steam railways were taken by the Government. The first immediate result reaching the public in tangible form was the increase of rates both for freight and for passenger travel. I say nothing of the inconvenience caused during a portion of the war period. We expected to be inconvenienced. Nobody could live as we were accustomed to in normal times. They have, however, an inconvenient habit of collecting charges several times.

I had occasion to pay railway fare from the Rocky Mountains to Chicago last September. A through one-way ticket was purchased at a Rocky Mountain point, paid for, and the war tax paid at the same time. At Kansas City, immediately on leaving, the passengers were by the conductor compelled to pay another war tax. Shortly before reaching Moberly, Mo., another conductor having come on to take the train through to Hannibal, Mo., yet another war tax was collected, which with the one paid at the Rocky Mountain point made three war taxes, at least, in addition to the regular fare and the charge for the Pullman reservation. They are all of them patriotic and are willing to pay once, but they do not understand why they are called on to pay from two to three times.

The process is in course of laborious investigation. Some of the papers come back occasionally. There are the usual blanks, a growing heap of documents, until it looks like a report in the old days of the claim agent for some property owner against a railroad for killing at a railway crossing an especially valuable cow. I have settled many of those claims in my time, and there never yet was a scrub cow killed by a steam railroad in the territory where I operated. They were all of the highest pedigree. Their offspring's potentialities in the future were of fabulous value. The quantities of milk they gave were astounding. With a lactometer test the average of butter fat was enough to keep an entire family, even if there was no race suicide.

But it always piles up a great many papers. We always investigated carefully the character of the cow before we paid, and the claim agent's papers would come in. I went through laboriously, reading each report and item, and then I arrived at some conclusion of what I thought was necessary to pay for this departed pet of the family. I always was careful to explain that there could be no money compensation for lacerated affections; that mere nervous shock consequent upon the loss of this bovine was not a matter of pecuniary compensation; and that it was limited to the cost, as if the cow were an entire stranger in the community.

But a few of these claims that came back reminded me of the old days. They are investigating, and in only one case yet have I received any money since last fall. That was in a matter with an express company. I think the manager lived here in Washington. I do not know what the motive was, but I take it that he is a business man and knew something about the express business before he entered the Government service; possibly he was an expressman before he was called on to Uncle Sam's pay roll and has yet the active habits that belong to private business. That creeping paralysis which belongs to departmental life has not yet smitten his frame, and so he has a mistaken notion that a thing ought to be closed up some time this side of eternity, and he, in a businesslike way, recommended payment, and I got a check back as a refund.

But in spite of all this money that is an overcharge, and the legitimate increase in rates, there has been no net operating revenue to the roads. So when it came to pay the standard returns, Mr. President, there was nothing in the Treasury with which to pay it. Hence section 7 of this bill.

I met between 1.30 and 2 o'clock this morning, at the entrance to the marble room, a very intelligent looking gentleman. I would take it by the cut of his clothes that they were made by a tailor in New York City. He had an alert look. If I were to guess him off just on a cursory inspection of his person and air, I would say he was "familiar with the Street," as it is called in the city. I would not classify him as a lamb in stock operations. He might be one who sometimes shears the lambs and might occasionally in some catastrophe have been sheared himself, but it would be an accident; it would not be any established conspiracy. He wanted to know what the chances were for this $750,000,000. I said, "I can give you the facts and you can draw your own conclusion. You are a stranger to me." He said, "Will it pass?" I said, "My friend, I do not want you to talk to me. I am going to state the facts. I can not tell you whether it will pass or not." I said, "Unless the Chair makes an arbitrary ruling, and I very much doubt, whoever occupies the chair, that that will be done, because the majority here may be converted soon into a minority, and they want the same rule they are using now to defend themselves some time; besides it is an old rule here in the Senate. I doubt very much whether any of us will be taken off our feet." I said, "In that event, if I get the floor and do not drop dead, the appropriation will not pass." I did not say it quite that loud. I did not whisper it. It was in an ordinary conversational tone. He said, "Thank you," and the last I saw of him his coattails were disappearing around the corner as he broke for the elevator. I imagine he was going to the long distance telephone.

In all probability a number of gentlemen are selling "short." I can not keep them from it. If I told him with equal assurance it would pass, he would have been "long" on the market instead of "short." You can not keep them from investing. Let them go. That is not a matter of concern to me.

What I am concerned about is that this $750,000,000 is to be supplied to fill the failure of the Government to conserve its income and its capital. In due time on an examination—there have been no hearings which are worthy of the name—if on due examination the $750,000,000 are required they will be forthcoming.

I know we are told that there will be a very great slump in value, and some, as I intimated last night, thought it would create receiverships for the roads. The Governmnt is running these roads, and it will not repudiate this obligation to pay the standard return. This credit ought to be good. In proper season the appropriation will be made, when the bill is brought into this body as it ought to be.

I sympathize with the criticism made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] when he says that this is not the way to pass bills, much less bills of such magnitude as the one in question. There will be no repudiation of this obligation, and everybody knows it. If on the market chances are taken that is not the concern of the Senate or of the Government having charge of the property.

It occurs to me that in the management of the railways the Government has not acted with prudence. It has used all of the income, making no provision for the payment of the standard returns which are known inevitably to fall due. All of the income having been paid out there is but one recourse to the Government—that is, to come to Congress and ask for $750,000,000 taxes to supply the revenue that has been lost.

This leads me, Mr. President, to inquire generally what the outgo amounts to and to what is it devoted? For instance, in the dollar of railway operating revenue, when paid out by the very slender margin under private ownership and management, the dollar which was paid out on operating expenses showed 43.71 cents out of the dollar for labor; it showed 10.52 cents for fuel and locomotive supplies; it showed 14.60 cents for material, way, equipment supplies, and other expenses; it showed 1.92 cents for loss and damage; it showed 5.41 cents for taxes; it showed 8.53 cents devoted to dividends, reserves, and surplus; it showed 1.47 cents for betterments; 3.27 cents for rent and lease of roads; it showed 10.58 cents interest on funded and unfunded debts.

This completed the whole hundred cents for each dollar paid out on operating expenses. It showed the largest proportion of the dollar of expenditure was devoted to labor—43.71 cents out of 100 cents of expenditure. Labor was in 1917 receiving the largest portion of the expenditure, and that has increased very materially; quoting from memory alone, I believe about 52 cents out of the dollar in 1918 were devoted to the labor account.

This necessarily means a subtraction from some of the other accounts. There can not be a diminution in the interest on funded and unfunded debts; that is a fixed charge. There can be no such change in that to correspond with the increases in other items of expenditure, because that is a contractual relation and can not be diminished, however much that may be desired.

The supplies necessary for operation, the materials for repairs and maintenance, show in 1918 very large increases, consequently there is only one place where a reduction could be made.

A share of stock promises to the holder nothing. It is simply an evidence of an interest in the business. It shows that a portion of what is left after expenses are paid from the earnings, if anything, will be distributed in the form of dividends, but the share promises to pay nothing. The other forms of securities do. They promise to pay a definite amount for interest purposes. Therefore in the dividends on shares is where it is more likely to show a reduction. This can be avoided only by an appropriation to provide the standard return. The operating revenues having provided nothing for these payments, that is the only recourse left, and the taxpayer of the country must understand that in Government operation in that way he must be called upon to equalize the difference as one of the necessary results of Government operation, making a proper allowance from the fact that this operating period was in war times.

The railways, however, are not the only Government undertaking of the control of utilities. The telegraphs, telephones, and cables under an act of Congress, claimed to be necessary as a war measure, were taken over by the Government. The cables were the last seized. There was no apparent reason why that should be done; there has been no reason apparently since given for taking the telephones and telegraphs. It was merely done not for a war purpose but for the purpose of testing out an economic theory of the Government undertaking to do something. It had no relation to war, but it was an experiment in civil life, and the conduct of those having charge of them since that time, including the head of the department, confirms the statement.

All of these utilities, of course, must be operated by some kind of a commission, by a bureau or department or some commission or coterie of men who have charge and who become like any other commission. It may start with some show of difference at the beginning, but eventually the new broom becomes an old one and it no longer sweeps any better than the average.

Here is a warning against Government commissions issued by President Wilson in 1908, which, of course, was some four years prior to his election:

> Governmental commissions can not be said to understand business better than those who conduct it. Their regulative interference with business will only complete the confusion and embarrassments into which we are so rapidly stumbling. The old processes of law are the more difficult, but the more effective. We must discover just what transactions we want to put an end to; we must have once more the reign of law rather than the reign of Government officials.

This is the general criticism that belongs to all commissions. I know of none that do not in time fall into that condition. Keeping this in mind as the inevitable result of commissions, we are brought face to face with the telephones, the telegraph, and the marine cables administered practically by a board. They are not administered by a department head, although nominally that is true; those affairs are administered by several men, one of whom is the chief of the bureau, others are his subordinates. He works under the President, but in reality he works on his own initiative. The Government undertaking in the control of these three utilities must, in the very nature of things, work out as other commission enterprises do; they must result as the management of the railroads, which, in spite of the large increase in rates, has resulted in a deficit and a call upon the Public Treasury for taxes to make good that deficit. Therefore it becomes material in this inquiry as to section 7 of the pending bill to examine the course we are traveling.

It is proper for us to undertake to say whether we will continue that course in order that appropriations may in turn, session after session, be supplied in the same way. The steam railways have been under Government control longer than the others, but it is only a question of time when the telephones and telegraphs and the cables will return a like deficit, to be made up by appropriations of Congress.

There was no reason for taking over the cables and the telegraphs and the telephones other than as an experiment of an economic theory and to make a test as to whether the Government could successfully operate them. It has been claimed for a long time that the Government can operate these enterprises cheaper than can private owners. It is said further that they can give the public better service at a lower price. So they have undertaken by this experiment to demonstrate whether that is so. The war was a more convenient pretext, but these utilities were not taken over for the purpose of rendering them more of an instrumentality to manage the war; it was for the purpose of testing the theory to which I have alluded.

Therefore under the power delegated by an act of Congress by a proclamation of the President the Postmaster General seized the telephones and telegraphs. He gave a statement why following the proclamation of the President. In addition to that, sometime afterwards a letter appeared, or a communication, addressed by Theodore N. Vail, the president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., to Mr. Burleson, saying that he believed the Government ought to take all of the wires and put them under one head, and recommending that it be done. It was done accordingly. There were certain conditions attending the various companies operating the telegraphs and telephones of the country, as well as the cable service. Mr. Vail is probably the best authority or as good an authority as there is in the country on telephones. Back in 1870 sometime Mr. Bell, now living in this city, began to investigate the transmission of sound by wire. It resulted in the knowledge, practically applied, that sound could be transmitted through a wire charged with an electric current with a very greatly increased audibility. Its transmission was assured for certain distances. Others were investigating along the same lines. Mr. Gray had some investigations pending, and it took somewhat extended litigation over the question of the priority in the patents. It was adjudged finally that the honor as well as the exclusive right of being declared the original investigator or discoverer of this method of transmitting sound belonged to Mr. Alexander Graham Bell.

Following that a company was organized. Soon several companies were organized in various States of the Union. Farseeing men, with imagination and with courage and with knowledge of the invention began to see that it was a great business possibility; so the companies multiplied. The principal company finally became a merger of many of the smaller companies. Mr. Sabin some years ago was the president of the first large company; and he was succeeded later in the management by others who, with their associates, formed what is now the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Mr. Vail is its head. It is a rather large business enterprise. This Telephone & Telegraph Co. is the holding company for the Bell Telephone Co. It has their patents, their plants, all of their visible tangible property, as well as their good will and intangible assets.

I turn now to page 288 of Poor's Manual of Public Utilities for the year 1917. It is headed:

THE BELL SYSTEM.

American Telephone & Telegraph Co.: Incorporated March 3, 1885, in New York. It is the parent company of the so-called "Bell System" operating in the United States and Canada. The "parent" company directly operates the long distance lines; "the associated companies," in which parent company usually owns the majority of all the stocks, do the exchange and toll business under license received from parent company. For early history, see Manual for 1910, page 1007. The entire capital stock of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. was formerly owned by the American Bell Telephone Co. The last-named company, in March 1910, transferred all of the stocks and all of the bonds of the licensees to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., receiving therefor payment in stock of the latter, and two shares of the stock of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. were given for each share of the American Bell Telephone Co., calling for $51,772,600 American Telephone & Telegraph Co. stock. The long-distance lines (for development of which, see Manual for 1910, p. 1008) extend from the important cities on the Atlantic seaboard throughout the country, to St. Paul, Minn., Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, Kansas City, Little Rock, and New Orleans, forming main lines over which telephone communications between practically all the exchange stations within the territorial limits above defined may be established. The company early in 1911 placed in operation a long-distance line between New York and Denver. The formal opening of the transcontinental telephone line extending from Boston and New York, on the Atlantic seaboard, to San Francisco, on the Pacific, on January 25, 1915, has been followed by the extension of "extreme distance" transmission into all of the States of the Union by applying new improvements to the plant of the Bell System. It is now possible to talk from points in any one State to some points in every other State of the Union, while over a large part of the territory covered by the Bell System it is possible for any subscriber to talk to any other subscriber regardless of distance.

Aside from long-distance lines, the Bell instruments, which are leased to operating companies, and its real estate, substantially all of the assets of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. consist of securities of local telephone companies operating throughout the United States and Canada (see list in Manual for 1910). The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. furnishes each of these companies in the United States all needed telephones, replaces them with others when required, grants the rights to use all patents owned or controlled by it, performs central administration, and does engineering, accounting, legal, and other services. The consideration therefor paid by the associated companies amounts to 4½ per cent of their gross telephone receipts. In addition to its interests in the associated telephone companies the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. owns over 95 per cent of the capital stock (over 50 per cent was owned from organizations and 20 per cent acquired in 1908 by exchange for convertible bonds; remainder acquired since) of the Western Electric Co. (Inc.), a large manufacturer of telephone and other electrical apparatus and instruments. The Western Electric Co. (Inc.) sells telephonic apparatus to all associated companies.

I wish to stop here long enough to say that this company was not content with its holdings as referred to here, but it has been constantly reaching out to control other wire systems. A large number of local telephone companies exist in the country. They run all the way from the farmers' mutual, with no capital stock, with a charge to the shareholder or member covering merely the cost of service and maintenance, to that of the company capitalized for a considerable amount, paid for and operating like any other business enterprise. So these mergers and acquisitions have increased from time to time. Not only that, but it became the ambition of Mr. Vail to control the telegraph and cable companies. He acquired, or his company did, shares of stock. It appears on page 1382 of the same volume from which I have heretofore read, under the head of "Western Union Telegraph Co.," that—

On December 15, 1909, a contract was made between the Western Union and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., providing for the joint occupancy and use of existing and future plant facilities which will, when fully worked out, add greatly to the efficiency of the service and economical operation of both companies.

It has not in the past been possible for the Western Union to keep a large proportion of its offices open both day and night, Sundays and holidays, but under arrangements which are now in operation in some sections of the country it is expected to be able to maintain continuous telegraph and cable service 24 hours a day and every night in the year.

Lease of the Anglo-American Telegraph Co. and Direct United States Cable Co.: On October 11, 1911, stockholders of the Western Union Telegraph Co. ratified the leases of the lines and ocean cables of these companies for 99 years from April 1, 1911; dividends on the £7,000,000 Anglo-American Co. stock being guaranteed at the rate of 6 per cent on the preferred stock, 1½ per cent on the deferred ordinary, and 3¾ per cent on the ordinary stock. The rental of the Direct United States Cable Co. is £58,568 per annum. Dividends on its £1,214,200 capital stock not to exceed 5 per cent, without permission of the Western Union Telegraph Co. On April 1, 1912, the operation of these lines and cables was consolidated under the direct management of the Western Union Telegraph Co. in combination with its own lines and Atlantic cables, thus giving it eight trans-Atlantic cables.

A system of cable letters and deferred cable messages at reduced rates was inaugurated on January 1, 1912.

This, in substance, relating to the Western Union, is the initial point of the acquisition of the shares of stock by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in the Western Union. If I remember now, speaking from memory—I will read this later—nearly $30,000,000 par value of shares of the Western Union were acquired by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. This secured the favorable contract referred to in Poor's Manual, which I have just read. It was a part of Mr. Vail's ambition for a merger of all the wire enterprises, both telephonic and telegraphic.

However, along in 1914 it seems that the Department of Justice became inquisitive, or before that time they had started the investigation. They looked into the transaction. They placed their ban upon it. They did not then favor the activities of Mr. Vail in such mergers; so there was some effort by the Department of Justice to undo this merger, with the result indicated in the report. This is referred to in the following language:

Sale of $30,000,000 stock held by American Telephone & Telegraph Co. It was announced on February 16, 1914, that in accordance with the agreement entered into with the Department of Justice the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. had sold its entire holdings of about $30,000,000 stock of the Western Union Telegraph Co. to a syndicate formed by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. under an arrangement by which the privilege was reserved to stockholders of the Western Union Telegraph Co. to subscribe for the same, pro rata, at $63 per share on or before March 24, 1914, to an amount equal to 40 per cent of their holdings as of record on February 28, 1914.

It seems that the Department of Justice frowned upon this transaction; so, in order to "unscramble" the combination that had been made, a banking and bond house became the trustees of the shares that had been held by the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. This preserved the property rights but it was supposed broke the community of management between the two companies. As a matter of fact, while the possession was changed, the ownership remained substantially as it was before. The operation of the two companies was about the same. I never had any criticism to make of that feature of the transaction. It was a public convenience. It enabled information to be transmitted more promptly and even at less expense than it was before. However, Mr. Vail's activities were not dampened by this unfriendly sentiment of the authorities. He had before that time undertaken on several occasions—at least two—to acquire the Postal Cable stock, a majority of it at least, so as to control that company. His ambition, and a very laudable one from a private viewpoint, was that all methods of wire communication should be brought under one head.

In pursuance of that plan his activities can be explained. He had the largest telephone company in the country. It controlled in turn the Western Electric, manufacturing telephonic supplies. He had acquired control of the Western Union. It was but natural that he felt the world was not yet conquered with wire, and he must reach out for the Postal Cable. Accordingly in private negotiations he attempted to secure a majority of the shares of the Postal Cable.

I now wish to examine the formation of the Postal Cable Co. in order to show the magnitude of the undertaking which the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. undertook to absorb. It was no small concern. These men were possessed of large conception. They were not dealing in small enterprises.

The Mackay Co. is a volunteer association, formed in Massachusetts under a trust deed of December 19, 1903, to consolidate the holdings of the stockholders interested in the submarine cable system known as the Commercial Cable, a telegraph system known as the Postal Telegraph, and to acquire an interest in and finance other telegraph cable and telephone companies:

Managed by 10 trustees elected annually. The Mackay companies owned the entire capital stock of the Commercial Cable Co. ($25,000,000) and the various companies constituting the land-line system, known as the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. and also the whole or part of the capital stock of other cable and telegraph companies in the United States, Canada, and Europe. The income of the subordinate companies of the Mackay companies is greater than is required to pay the dividends of the Mackay companies, but its policy is to obtain from those companies only enough money to meet those dividends.

The Commercial Cable Co. was incorporated December 12, 1883, in New York, capital stock, authorized and issued, $25,000,000 (shares $100), all owned by the Mackay companies. In connection with the acquisitions as of January 1, 1897, of the properties of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., the above $20,000,000 4 per cent bonds were issued. Reserves at January 1, 1914 (latest rendered), $8,058,449 (1910, $7,494,957).

The Commercial Cable Co. has paid regular quarterly dividends since 1889. Owns five submarine cables running from Europe to America, cables from Ireland to England and France, and cables along the North American coast, giving the company such diversified routes across the Atlantic as to render almost impossible the disruption of all the cables at the same time. The company completed during 1907 its underground cables from Bristol to London. During 1910 a new additional submarine cable was laid from Waterville, Ireland, to Weston, England, with underground connection to London. During 1911 the company completed the removal and enlargement of its terminal facilities in London, England, and now has 12 offices in London, besides direct wires to and offices in all the principal cities of Great Britain. During 1912 another cable was extended from Newfoundland to New York, involving the laying of 892 miles of cable; the Far Rockaway-New York improvement which entailed the construction of new underground lines for 22 miles was completed. During 1913 the company renewed parts of the oldest of its three cables between Waterville, Ireland, and Weston-super-Mare, England. The Comercial Cable Co. in 1915 completed a fireproof building in St. Johns, Newfoundland, from which the two trans-Atlantic and the two New York cables landing at Newfoundland are being operated. Two and one-half miles of underground lines were constructed to make the improved connection.

The Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. owns a telegraph system throughout the United States. During the year 1908 additional wires were strung on one of the transcontinental land lines, and the service of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. was extended to Tonopah and the mining regions of that district in the western part of the United States. During 1909 a new pole line on a new route was constructed from Sacramento, Cal., to Reno, Nev., which, by the completion of a line from Reno, Nev., to Salt Lake City, Utah, and from Seattle to Spokane, Wash., gives the company an entirely new transcontinental route from the East to the Pacific coast. The company formerly had a contract for exchange of business with the Independent Texas Telegraph Co. The latter recently passed into the control of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., leaving the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. without access to Texas and adjoining States; as a result the company during 1911 extended its system from Wichita, Kans., down through the States of Oklahoma and Texas to Galveston, nearly 1,000 miles; another line was built from Baton Rouge, La., to Houston, Tex., and still another from a point opposite Memphis, Tenn., through Arkansas and Texas to Dallas. The year 1912 witnessed the extension of the company's lines throughout Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana. During 1913 the company extended its system into parts of Missouri and North Dakota not heretofore reached, and strung many additional wires on its poles throughout the country. In 1914 substantial extensions were made to new cities and towns. In addition to the stringing of numerous wires a new pole line was constructed from Cheyenne to Laramie, Wyo., and from Fort Steele, Wyo., across the State of Wyoming to Salt Lake City, Utah, via Ogden, a distance of 412 miles.

The decision in favor of the Postal Co. in the suit against the Western Union and Southern Pacific companies to prevent the Western Union Co. from keeping the Postal Co. off the right of way of the Southern Pacific Railway was affirmed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, thus ending that litigation.

By the use of what is known as the composite circuit device, by which there is obtained both a telephone and a telegraph use of two wires at the same time without either service interfering with the other, the Postal Co. is furnishing long-distance telephone service in various States in the Union and the financial results are said to be very satisfactory. Extensions of this long-distance telephone service are constantly being made.

I read this, Mr. President, in order to show the activities of the Postal Cable Co., that it is an aggressive, going company. From its original organization it has carried on its business; it has enlarged the territory covered by its wires; it has laid additional cables across the ocean and has increased its business and extended constantly its facilities for rendering service to the public.

Mr. Vail saw this rival in the field. He failed to obtain control through acquiring a majority of the shares of stock. Matters remained that way until he wrote his letter to Mr. Burleson. The war had given to Congress the occasion for delegating very extensive powers to the President and to the executive department. Among them was the power referred to awhile ago to take the wires of the country if necessary as a war measure.

That joint resolution, approved July 16, 1918, provides:

That the President during the continuance of the present war is authorized and empowered, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the national security or defense, to supervise or to take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, which supervision, possession, control, or operation shall not extend beyond the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, That just compensation shall be made for such supervision, possession, control, or operation, to be determined by the President; and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145, of the Judicial Code: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transmission of Government communications, or the issue of stocks and bonds by such system or systems.

This joint resolution, Mr. President, it will be observed, does not authorize the taking of wire companies for the trying out of economic theories. It is expressly stated by the resolution, and that is the measure of authority in the hands of the Executive, that the President, in his discretion, may take these utilities when he deems it necessary for the national security or defense. Under that resolution the President did act, and Mr. Burleson's department became the one placed in charge.

With matters in this condition, and with this delegated power to the Executive, after all these precedent activities by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to acquire rival and competitive enterprises, Mr. Vail, the head of the company, wrote the communication to Postmaster General Burleson advising the taking of the lines by the Government.

There is nothing in the communication, which I will place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD after a while, to show that the national security or defense required the taking of these utilities by the Government. There is some theoretical allusion, but no facts are stated to justify such conduct.

Shortly after the President's proclamation Mr. Burleson was in conference with Mr. Vail. Mr. Vail became the Postmaster General's adviser on all wire matters.

Mr. President, hereby hangeth a tale. I regret that I must expose to an unfeeling public what I believe to be true. I think I will vote as long and as hard to prevent anybody from having his property confiscated as any Senator on this side of the Chamber, at least, but I do not wish the heads of large enterprises to take advantage of these powers in order to impose upon the Government unwise experiments or undertakings.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. had become a very large enterprise. The capital stock of the company affords no indication of the actual resources of the different concerns. Many subordinate companies had their stock issued and held by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. The truth is, Mr. President, a number of men at the head of large concerns have come to the conclusion that they would just as lieve the Government would take over these enterprises as not. They have, and I think I violate no confidence in saying so, on divers occasions said that this agitation for Government ownership possessed no terrors for them. If the Government wanted to take their property, it could do so. It could only take the property, however, by paying what it was worth. These various gentlemen were of the opinion that, if the Government could furnish more evidence of the value of the property than they could, it was welcome to it. Probably nobody in the United States knows more of the value of telephone properties than the American Telephone & Telegraph people and their associates. If anybody can furnish more evidence in a condemnation suit than they can, his name or their names have not yet appeared.

I believe that the head of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., his associates, and all who are connected with the investments concerned are very ready to unload their property upon the United States Government, taking either cash or Government securities, in whole or in part, in payment. In other words, Mr. President, Mr. Vail, of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., having failed in private enterprise to take the Postal Cable Co. and to acquire the smaller telephone companies, having failed to monopolize the wire world in the United States as well as the cable companies across the ocean, took this method of approaching Mr. Burleson and those in authority for the purpose of accomplishing through the delegated power under war purposes what he failed to accomplish by economic processes and by the instrumentalities of private business. Therefore we find the Postmaster General, acting with Mr. Vail, taking possession of the rival company which Mr. Vail and his associates had tried to take in private life by the purchase of a majority of the shares of the stock and had failed. The Government, in other words, is made the instrument to accomplish by the abuse of delegated governmental power what Mr. Vail had failed to accomplish in his efforts to put his rivals out of business and to merge all of the wire companies of the United States under his control.

The Postmaster General, having been for a long time a convert to Government ownership, saw here a chance to test out his theory. He and Mr. Vail, with widely different motives, became associated in the joint enterprise. The Postal Cable properties were seized, their officers were ejected from the management of their properties; their contract for compensation was made, I think—and the proof, I believe, shows it—on the suggestion of Mr. Vail himself.

The Postal Cable Co. has no watered stock. Its stock, if anything, is concentrated in value. Therefore, when it came to fixing compensation, as the report here shows, the Western Union was given compensation on its stock issue and so was the Postal Cable; but the Postal Cable having concentrated stock and the Western Union a very liberally issued stock, the compensation is out of all proportion as to one and unjust in its figure as to the other.

This, of course, makes no difference to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; it makes no difference whether they ever have their property returned to them or not. They are secure; they can prove the value of their property; they can easily ascertain how much will be required by the Government to be paid. They can take the compensation and retire from the telephone business and be gainers by the operation.

The joint resolution authorizing the President to take over the wire communication of the country was passed on July 16, 1918. No emergency existed at that time. The only reason then given for the passage of the joint resolution was that Congress was about to take a recess, and it was advisable that the President should have the power to take control of the wires in case an emergency arose. Well, we are about to take another recess; whether Congress desires it or not, it appears to be imminent. That recess is fraught with more danger than the former, because, as I suggested the other day, not only will Congress be absent but the President also will be absent. The Nation will be headless. There is nothing left in the country to perform its official functions but the courts.

I now quote from the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] on the occasion of the pendency of the joint resolution of July 16, 1918. In that debate on that measure he said:

> The committee does not present this bill to the Senate with a viewpoint that there is any necessity in this hour confronting the country as a reason why these lines should be taken over.

My esteemed colleague from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] said in the same debate:

> The power to him granted by the joint resolution is never to be exercised until, subsequently to its passage, there are circumstances manifest to him from evidence incontrovertible, proved, and evident that for the national security or for the defense of the country he should step in and assume that control.

There was no emergency existing at the time that the resolution was passed. On July 21, 1918, however, the President signed a proclamation taking over the telegraphs and telephones. There was no change in the telegraph situation in those five days between the passage of the joint resolution and the signing of the proclamation. No claim was made at any time that the telegraph and telephone service was not highly efficient. The President designated the Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, to take over the control of the telephones and telegraphs. Mr. Burleson appointed a committee to direct the telephones and telegraphs, consisting of Mr. John C. Koons, First Assistant Postmaster General; William H. Lamar, Solicitor of the Post Office Department; and David J. Lewis, a member of the Tariff Commission. Neither of these men had any experience or knowledge of the telegraph business. Burleson and Lewis both were avowed Government-ownership men, and, as is well known to everybody, have been for many years.

Mr. Burleson assumed control of the telegraphs and telephones on August 4, 1918. From that day to this he has not taken a single step to change in any way the operation of the telegraphs and telephones of the country. He has suggested no improvements; he has made no changes; he has done nothing in any way to transform the service from what it was when the Government took it. If there had been any change to indicate that a necessity for ever taking them, it would furnish corroborative evidence of that necessity, but not a thing has been done, except in some instances to impair the service and increase the charge.

I think Members of the Senate and their constituents will all remember the schedule of charges made not long ago in connection with the installation of telephones. If a telephone was moved from one side of a man's office to another or in a private room, an installation charge of $2 was made against the private user. If there were a new telephone installed, there was an installation charge of $5 if it were for a private house, and if it were for a business or professional house the installation charge was $10. Yet under private management there was no installation charge by the company; the telephone company put in your phone, and there was no charge made for that service.

They moved it for you from one place to another without charge. This ornamental addition to the revenues of the companies since the Government took them is in keeping with the increase of cost in the steam railways. There have been no improvements, but there have been increases in the charges. That is the history of every Government controlled utility in the world. As soon as the Government takes charge additional costs are found. It was found, for instance, in England, where the telegraph service has been in the hands of the Government, under the postal department for some years, that no sooner did the Government take it than additional charges crept in from time to time. In England when you send a telegram you are charged for the telegram blank, you are charged for the address—the longer the address, the more the charge—a charge is made for the body of the telegram, and a charge is made for the signature, and your number, or address, or hotel where you can be found in case an answer is required. You pay extra in each instance both for the address of the receiver and of the sender. These charges are like the installation charge on the telephone. They are additions all the time to the cost of the service, and the general public pays the price.

The principal occupation of the Post Office Department has been in increasing all telephone rates. A long schedule of rates has gone up. These increases in most instances are in the interest of the Bell Telephone Co. The award of compensation in the case of the Bell and Western Union companies were very liberal, but in the case of the Postal Telegraph Co. were confiscatory. Burleson has done everything in his power, in my judgment, to break up the morale of the Postal Telegraph staff; he has removed its vice president and general manager and one of its general superintendents. He it is who is the directing agency of the Post Office Department having charge of the wire system. He has placed the telephones and telegraphs under the domination of the Bell system and the Western Union officials, and, in a manner to which I will refer subsequently, has threatened to consolidate the Postal Telegraph offices with the Western Union offices, and has only been curbed from doing this by the great public outcry which has been made against any act on his part to eliminate the competition between the Postal Telegraph Cable Co. and the other one.

The question now before Congress is as to setting a time for the return of these properties. They ought not to be kept under present conditions. While there is only an armistice we know quite well that the war is over. I find that these gentlemen—the Postmaster General, the president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and Mr. Carlton, of the Western Union—are all in favor of extending that control from two to five years. The excuse is made that many of the independent telephone companies would face bankruptcy if returned at this time. None of these independent telephone companies wished to be taken over when they were taken, and if their threatened bankruptcy had been given as a reason for taking control when the joint resolution of July 16, 1918, was under discussion, that joint resolution would have been rejected by Congress.

None of these private telephone companies complained of conditions of threatened bankruptcy at the time this joint resolution was pending or before it. If they were not bankrupt then, what has occurred since that time to make them bankrupt unless it is the management of the Government and the unwise interference of the Postal Department in their management?

I can understand, for instance, why some of them are becoming bankrupt. Let me take one local subordinate company. A long-distance toll of $25 was collected, using the wires of the Bell Telephone or the American Telephone & Telegraph connection outside, and the local subordinate company—not a hostile company, but a subordinate company of the Bell. It was the initiative point. The point with which the talking was done was New York City. The total time required a payment of $25 toll. The local telephone company, the subordinate company of the Bell Telephone Co., got 20 cents out of the $25, and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. got $24.80 out of the $25. The local company or district company is in the hands of a receiver. Of course, it is threatened with bankruptcy. Nobody would expect anything else. It does not make any difference how much business it does; the more business it does, the poorer it gets. It is like operating one of these American steamships. Much talk about our merchant marine and about sending our commerce around the world is heard, and we can talk in swelling tones about getting the markets of the earth with our great merchant shipping; but you could not give a business man the best steamship built and make him operate it under present conditions and the present laws if it were a gift and he had to run the boat, because eventually he would be bankrupt. He would meet the competition of other shipping companies, and no American steamship can meet the competition of the steamship companies of the world and remain solvent unless it has the Government Treasury back of it to make up its deficit, just as the Government railways here want this $750,000,000 to make them even. It is no surprise the telephone companies are becoming bankrupt. It is because under Government ownership they could not well become anything else.

The truth of the matter is that, except in a few instances, these independent telephone companies are in good financial condition; and the real reason behind the proposed extension is that the officials of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and of the Western Union wish to have the Government tide their companies over these days of high costs and help them to maintain their dividends and to increase rates for those companies, and in the meantime to carry out the long-cherished ambition of gathering into a single fold all the wire communications of this country.

After that has been done, if the wire companies are returned to their owners it will be one owner, and by indirection there will have been accomplished what Mr. Vail was unable to accomplish by private enterprise, the Government having been used as an agency to accomplish this purpose.

I think an examination of the annual reports made since 1910 will show, in substance, that the officials of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. have advocated the gathering of all wire companies under one head. Mr. Burleson, in his testimony before the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, very frankly stated, a very short time ago, that "competition should be eliminated; that the period for competition is past." Mr. Burleson is carrying out the plan that has been in the minds of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the Western Union for a long time. Every day that this Government control is extended means either making a surer Government ownership possible, or the crushing of the competition of the Postal Telegraph and all the independent telephone companies. I believe no reason exists for longer holding and operation of the wire companies by the Government. The telegraph companies are in no need of any pecuniary help from the Government, and even the Postmaster General does not claim in any of his reports that they are. He confines his reasons for continued control entirely to the weak condition of the telephone companies.

Why, then, keep the telegraph companies? The telegraph companies could be returned to their owners at midnight tonight without causing the slightest disturbance to business or to the companies themselves. Mr. Burleson, in his control of the telegraphs, is deteriorating the service and breaking up the morale of the men.

Another possible reason which occurs for holding on to them is to increase telegraph rates, as proposed by the Western Union to the Postal Co., but which the latter declined to agree to, and will not do unless forced by the Postmaster General. It would be no violent act, because railroad charges have been increased. The general public do not use telegraph facilities as they do transportation, and it will probably cause less objection than the increase in railway rates. Mr. Burleson has had nothing to do with the actual operation of the companies. He has left that to subordinates or to others who know accurately the condition of the business. Neither has he done anything to change their operation for war purposes or for any other purposes; but his further control does seriously endanger the future status of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., because of the avowed purpose to put that company out of business by combining it with its rivals. The best way to enable that to be done is to extend and continue the control through governmental agencies.

The Postal Cable officials are out and gone. They have been ejected from their offices. Their papers and property have been taken away from them in the name of a pretended war necessity. The power given to the President under the joint resolution of Congress to take over the cables was not exercised until November 2. This proclamation of the President taking over the cables was suppressed until November 16, five days after the armistice was signed. Here, too, Mr. Burleson has done absolutely nothing regarding the operation of the cables, and they are being operated just in the way they were before he took them over. He has removed, however, from the cable company its officers. Mr. Mackay has been removed; George G. Ward, vice president and general manager, has been removed; William W. Cook, the general counsel of the Commercial Cable Co., has been removed, and there has been placed as director of these cables instead Mr. Carlton, the president of the Western Union Telegraph Co., the rival of the Commercial Cable Co.

I have a map of the marine cables showing how much of the cables in question are controlled by the Commercial Cable Co.'s cables. The seizure of these lines by the President, through Mr. Burleson, shows that this control is very limited. The part of the cable lines under the control of the Post Office Department is limited to the marginal waters, or the 3-mile limit through which the cables extend. Beyond that, when it reaches the high seas, the department has no control whatever over the lines. Beyond that, the original company controls the wires; and when it reaches the European shores or territory, there the British companies control. These are matters of private contract. Even under this proclamation nothing can be done beyond the 3-mile limit in this country. The cables ought, not only in justice to the private owners, but in justice to the Senate itself, to be returned to their owners.

The first evidence of the spirit of the employees of the telephone systems held by the Government is manifested in the press reports of this morning. I do not think the Postmaster General is a judicious or a wise head of a department to deal with the employees in the service. I have had my criticisms to make of unions and unionized service. It was only, however, where their members interfered with the laws of the country, or by the rules of some union they undertook to say that a man could not run his business without their permission, or that no man could earn a living unless he joined the union. On those grounds I have criticized them and fought them, in their own territory and mine. On everything else, they can get as much on my vote as on that of any other Senator in this body; but they can not obtain from me apologies for their lawless conduct, now or hereafter, and they never have been able to do so.

Mr. Burleson, however, I think is a very injudicious man to deal with either union or nonunion men. His conduct is arbitrary, and I think he lacks a sympathetic understanding of the man who works in the service. I believe he is somewhat oblivious to the rights of union employees. They have the right to organize and have the equal protection of the law, just as much as anybody else has. I would not see them discriminated against any more than I would see them discriminate against somebody else.

The organized telephone operators of the United States have voted to strike in protest against the administration of Director General Burleson. Returns from the strike vote, received yesterday at the headquarters of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers at the A. F. of L. Building in this city, from Miss Julia O'Connor, president of the Telephone Operators' Department of the Brotherhood, show an overwhelming majority in favor of the strike. In New England, the only section from which the tabulated vote has so far been received in Washington, the figures are 7,444 for the strike to 20 against, according to John J. Purcell, international representative of the brotherhood. On the Pacific Coast 95 per cent of the operators voted in favor of the strike.

That is a very striking figure for Mr. Burleson. If he is only able to count 20 votes on a popular referendum, it is time for him to indulge in a searching self-analysis in his closet and find out whether there is not something he ought to do himself.

The date of the strike will be fixed by the executive board of the International Brotherhood, which meantime is taking a referendum as to the amount of per capita tax to be levied upon its 135,000 members to support the strike. It is expected that a fund of more than $600,000 will be raised immediately.

If the telegraph operators vote to strike, as is expected, there will be a simultaneous stoppage of wire communication the country over.

Mr. Burleson, however—this is not generally a matter of public information—on the cables has run up against unexpected opposition from the British Government, which resents Mr. Burleson's attempt to control the operations of cable companies in British territory, just as we would resent any attempt of the British postmaster general to conduct the operations of cables landing on American shores. This has nullified Mr. Burleson's attempted control over the cables and makes his control merely nominal. For this reason, if for no other, the cables should be returned immediately, as Mr. Burleson's control is of no effect. There was never any necessity for his taking over the cables, as during the four years of the European war they transacted the heavy cable business due to the war as efficiently as it could possibly be transacted, and to take them over after the armistice was signed was a high-handed outrage.

Mr. President, Mr. Burleson, the Postmaster General, has stated that he took the cables over on the advice of Mr. Vail, of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. It seems as if the two connect their advice and conduct, that one is accomplishing what the other desires. Mr. Vail, in 1909, secured, as I have read from the 1917 Poor's Manual, a controlling interest in the Western Union Telegraph Co. in his march toward a nation-wide wire monopoly. In 1911, in furtherance of this plan, he secured a lease of the Anglo-American and Direct United States cables, British corporations—six cables in all—but in order to get these leases he had to pay a considerable price, the annual rental amounting to about $1,600,000. They also pay an annual rental of $700,000 for two cables leased many years ago, making a total annual rental of $2,300,000, and now that four out of these eight leased cables are disrupted and are not doing any business, it is not surprising that the Western Union wishes the Government to carry the load of these rentals. This annual rental has proven a heavy burden to the Western Union Telegraph Co., and it is very natural and not surprising that the Western Union wishes the Government to take over the cables in order that the Western Union might shift this load from its shoulders over to that of the United States Government.

These leases were made for a term of 99 years, and the President of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., realizing that he had led the Western Union into a bad bargain that might prove unsatisfactory, would like to help that company out with the assistance of the Government or of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Burleson's control of the cables is limited, as indicated by the map which I have shown here, as stated to the 3-mile limit of the United States. He does not even control the main sections of the cables which run from Canada to Europe. His control is not a control, but only a nominal control of the lines.

It might be well to point out here that in order to justify the cable seizure it has been stated that America is backward in the way of cable communication and that the cable companies are not in a position to finance future extensions. I have heard that criticism made several times and have seen it printed in the press.

The Commercial Cable Co. is ready and able to take care of any and all the cable extensions, and the fact that the Pacific cable was laid from San Francisco to the Philippines, China, and Japan in 1902, without Government assistance, when the Western Union and allied interests were appealing to Congress for a subsidy to lay such a cable, shows that the Commercial Cable Co. does not hesitate to lay necessary cables.

The Central and South American Telegraph Co., also an American Cable Co., operates an extensive system of cables to Cuba, Panama, down the west coast of South America to Chile and across the Andes to Buenos Aires, and is now making contracts for the manufacture of cables to be laid to Brazil, and up to Cuba and the United States, completing the circuit of the entire South American Continent. It will in due time spread this line through all the points in the Caribbean Basin so as to cover not only Central and South America, but everything in the West Indies and the Caribbean Sea.

The intimation has also been made that direct cables should be laid from the United States to Europe, without touching Canada. But this is only made to appeal to American prejudice and to help Mr. Vail's schemes. This is only made, I think, to arouse American sentiment and to help out this plan of consolidation. I have not seen anything lately that would indicate that we were extremely hostile to England, not in the league of nations where we undertake as a mandatory nation to finance and furnish Army, Navy, men, life, and money to protect England's possessions around the world, however, a still small voice rises from the Post Office Department complaining because a cable line from this country goes to Canada instead of running straight across the Atlantic from our own shores. We are going to have a $750,000,000 Navy, and if the Canadians grow querulous we can protect our cable line in Newfoundland. I have no fear that any rights will be lost. The fact of the matter is that a direct cable from the United States to any part of the British Isles or the European Continent is not feasible, because the distance is too great for the electric current through a continuous length of cable, and it could not be successfully operated. It must be relayed. The line must go to Canada and then from Canada across, which is a shorter stretch of cable. There must be something else discovered in the way of utilizing electricity before it can be conducted that distance. Mr. Vail must evolve a more economical process so that an electric current will carry farther over a submarine cable than it does now.

I remember when the limit some years ago in electrical development for the conveying of electricity was about 70 miles. After that the lines leased reduced it to a point where commercially it was no longer profitable. One could build a plant to generate the electricity new cheaper than you could carry it from that particular point. Along came the hydroelectric plant, and if that were to be made profitable some better method of longer transmission was to be discovered. All electrical processes, as we are aware, are only in the infancy of development, but we might discover a way of carrying electricity much farther. From 70 miles I do not know how far they conduct the current at the present time. I am a year or two behind the latest information, but I know that electrical energy is carried from the Cooper Dam in the Mississippi rapids at Keokuk, Iowa, to St. Louis, Mo., 100,000 horsepower being transmitted over the wire and landed in St. Louis at a profitable figure. The street cars, the power, and the electric lights in part are furnished by the energy generated at the Cooper Dam. So a method of improved transmission had to be discovered. It was done by relaying the electricity. It was carried a given distance, put into coils, and then relayed again and started over a new line.

The cable companies would welcome any means of laying direct cables because that would cut out the expense of relay stations in Canada, but, as stated before, it is electrically and commercially inexpedient and would only result in vastly greater investment and much delay to service. There is only one direct cable from the United States to Europe, and that is the cable of the French Cable Co. from Cape Cod, Mass., to Brest, France. That cable was laid in 1879 and has never been a success and has deterred the cable companies from laying further direct cables.

This is original information that has not been given to the press yet. I think it is of great importance that Senators assimilate this. The chance will not come this way again this session.

A continuation of Mr. Burleson's control over the cables can not improve the service one iota, and the only effect is to weaken the morale of the staff and help the Western Union pay its heavy losses to the British cable companies. Like everything else the Government gets its hands on, the rates go up and the service goes down.

I have become, Mr. President, almost a perpetual critic since the Government has taken over these utilities, and I have been dependent upon the Government telephone service. I spend a large part of my idle hours in controversy. One can engage in that safely over a wire. However, it does not develop the more lovable tendencies of one's character, and I fear that the result may be permanent in time upon me if I do not have more equable surroundings.

Returning, however, to larger subjects, the British Empire is practically linked up entirely by cables owned by British private interests, and the British Government has always encouraged and preferred private cable companies, and the only few instances where the British Government owns any cables is where private enterprise would not lay cables because of the certainty of a loss in operation.

Mr. George D. Ward, the vice president and general manager of the Commercial Cable Co., summed up the cable situation in a recent interview as follows, which I have taken the pains to preserve:

If the cables were all taken over by governments Great Britain would have a decided advantage over the United States. That country would be entirely independent of the United States for transoceanic communication, because both ends of the main Atlantic cable sections land on British territory. The United States would be in no such position. There is only one cable running direct from the United States to Europe, and for economic reasons, efficiency, and maintenance it is not very likely there will be another. The distance is too great and such a lengthy cable is of very much less practical value than cables of shorter lengths. All the other cables from the United States form only parts of the trans-Atlantic system. They run from points in the United States to points in Nova Scotia or Newfoundland or the French island of St. Pierre and thence traverse the Atlantic to Great Britain or France. Consequently the vital sections of the cables, namely, the main Atlantic Ocean portions, are completely under the jurisdiction of the British or French Governments. I can hardly conceive that even in the event of dual Government ownership of the cables the British and Canadian Governments would consider any other government but their own having control over the operations of the cables between Canada and Great Britain. Under these circumstances the United States would be left merely with a control over the American ends of the cables between American territory and Canada or Newfoundland.

It is true that certain short channel cables connecting Great Britain with continental Europe are owned jointly by the British and continental countries where they land, but in such cases each government controls one end of the cable and either government can suspend the operation at will. The British Government, notwithstanding that it owns its telegraph system in Great Britain, has always encouraged, fostered, and subsidized private cable enterprises, and the Eastern Co.'s cable system, a British-owned enterprise, is the largest cable system in the world, running from England to Africa, South America, Asia, and Australia. Even the German Government, as paternalistic as it was, never owned any long-distance cables, but all their cables to America and in the Pacific were owned by private enterprise. As stated above, however, the United States Government could acquire only one end of the cable line from the United States to Canada or Newfoundland, and therefore the most essential part of the control, namely, the main Atlantic section, would remain in foreign hands and communication with North America maintained independent of the United States Government. This might affect American business interests and be a source of international complications, and I do not think that the American Government should, or that the American public would, care to embark on any such project.

All governments allow a foreign corporation to make landings on their shores because foreign corporations may be controlled by the governments without disturbing the relations between governments, but if the cables were owned by the government differences and disputes might arise from time to time and cause diplomatic embarrassment. The European governments have fostered the development of private cable enterprises where the cables land on foreign territory because they have recognized the impracticability of such cables being owned by the governments.

I do not see on what ground the Postmaster General can feel that unless he takes over the control of the cables some difficulty may arise to interrupt continuous communication within the next few months. For over four years of the war our cables have been operated to their utmost capacity. Notwithstanding the constant menace by enemy submarines our repair ship has been engaged for months at a time in the middle of the Atlantic restoring cable communication. The British Government has expressed high appreciation of the work that has been done in this respect. We have managed to keep our cables intact in spite of all of the difficulties and dangers incident to the war. Nothing has been left undone to provide a continuous service to meet the exceptional demands of the war emergency.

The United States Government has had a special representative, in addition to the censorship staff (and censorship in Europe), to watch the operations of the cables and I feel sure he will certify that the companies have bent every effort to meet the Government and public needs. What we have been unable to do the Government could not have done.

With all due respect to the Postmaster General it is unfair to use the recent temporary conditions as an argument for Government possession. Both the Western Union and ourselves suffered severely from staff shortage owing to the influenza epidemic. Our cable system was intact, theirs was partially interrupted.

In Great Britain our concessions gave the Government the right to take over the control of our cables during war if they see fit, but that Government has made no attempt whatever to use this power, because they have undoubtedly realized that the companies were doing everything that it was possible to do to render the best possible service. Furthermore, even if the British Government should at any time exercise that right, it is very properly provided in the concession that such right shall only apply to that portion of the company's property within British territory.

I am unable to understand the reasons given by the Postmaster General for taking over the cables. Just what he means by his statement concerning continuous transmission being bounded neither by continents nor oceans, etc., is difficult to comprehend. There is absolutely no restriction or limitation of continuous transmission under present conditions.

The present situation with regard to the relations between land-line and cable companies is very clear and practical, and I am sure is the most desirable to the users of cables. It provides a choice of cable routes which many users of the cables both here and in Europe consider important.

Just how the American Postmaster General's control will be applied to the cables in foreign countries I can not see. Foreign Governments have always been jealous of their right to maintain jurisdiction over the operation of cables in their own countries, and stipulations to that effect are contained in the concessions granted by foreign Governments to private companies. The British, French, and Portuguese concessions under which this company's cables are landed in Europe forbid the transfer of any of the rights or powers conferred upon the company by such concessions. As stated above, in all of the cable systems crossing the Atlantic, excepting the French company's, the main sections begin and terminate on British territory. A very large number of messages are exchanged between Canada and Great Britain without ever touching the United States. It is difficult to imagine that the British or Canadian authorities would yield the right to the United States Postmaster General to control the business between Great Britain and Canada. I foresee the possibility of international difficulties in the proposal which are likely to terminate to the disadvantage of American interests.

American enterprise controls and operates 13 trans-Atlantic cables. In addition, a French company owns two. Under the principle of reciprocity, American cable companies have secured concessions in foreign countries to land and operate their cables. The United States has allowed British and French companies to land cables in the United States, in return for which Great Britain and France have allowed American companies to land cables in those countries.

To sum up the whole situation, any further extension of Mr. Burleson's control over the telephones, telegraphs, and cables can only result in the following:

1. To increase telephone and telegraph rates in the interest of the Bell Telephone Co. and Western Union Telegraph Co. He has already increased telephone rates and threatens to increase telegraph rates, and he very frankly stated before the House committee that if the Government operation showed a loss he would have to increase rates to make it up. The expert of the Massachusetts Public Service Commission has stated that more than $1,000,000 a year, and perhaps twice that amount, will be added to the receipts of the Bell Co. operating in New England through the operations of the new phone rates ordered by Mr. Burleson.

2. To help out the Bell and Western Union companies to tide over this period of high costs. This does not mean that if the lines were turned back the Bell and Western Union would go into bankruptcy, because the Western Union now has investments in its reserve funds, consisting of railroad and other outside bonds, of $15,000,000, but if that company's lines were turned back now to that company by the Government they would not earn as much for the next two or three years as they would under the compensation awards made by Mr. Burleson. The Bell Co. would also earn less if released, but would be far from bankruptcy.

3. To help the Bell and Western Union gather in all competing companies, including the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., Mr. Burleson stated before the House committee that "competition should be eliminated."

I stated in the Senate a few weeks ago:

I wish to take time by the forelock now and say that Theodore N. Vail, who is Mr. Burleson's assistant, is more interested in unloading the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. upon the United States than he is in the ultimate effect it will have upon the morale of the American people after it is done. He is interested in and has been interested in this scheme for several years, and Mr. Burleson knows it. He is a Bolshevist in the telephone, telegraph, and cable world in disguise. He ought not to sail in Washington under false colors. His views are generally known. He believes in Government ownership for the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. because it is the best prospect of unloading that he sees in the immediate future. The public have not taken very kindly to telephone stock concerned in that investment, and so he sees a possible purchaser in the Government. That is the reason why he and Mr. Burleson have found themselves to be kindred spirits and are engaged in a common enterprise, though from entirely different motives. Mr. Vail undertook to gather in all forms of wire communication on land and sea into his company. He failed. He now, with Burleson, is trying the same thing in the name of the Government.

And every day Government control is continued means that the taxpayers are being assessed to make up the losses which Mr. Burleson is incurring under his compensation awards.

Section 7 of this bill, calling for an appropriation of $750,000,000 for the purpose of paying compensation to the railways, in addition to the $500,000,000 in the revolving fund in the original bill, is only the payment for this Government enterprise, and if the experiment is continued for a given time it will produce other deficits to be made up by annual appropriations.

I now come to the question of compensation. It is a regular story by itself, and I am obliged because of lack of time to condense and to omit many interesting features. I have put it in small compass in order that within the allotted time I may present the salient facts to Senators for their information. If they do not have the time to look into the detailed report, I have provided a summary, which I have presented here. I do this in order to save the time of everybody interested in this question.

The compensation awarded by Mr. Burleson to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. was announced on October 7 and that to the Western Union Telegraph Co. on October 10. Evidently both compensations were worked on simultaneously with that of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

This compensation provided for the payment by the Government of the annual interest and existing amortization charges on all outstanding securities or obligations of the Bell system in the hands of the public; also of dividends at the existing rate of 8 per cent per annum upon the share capital of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and also at the existing rate in the case of the share capital of the subsidiary companies held by the public.

This is of especial importance in view of section 7, because these dividends are guaranteed by contract with the Government. The dividends must either be earned after all operating expenses are paid, or, if they are not forthcoming, appropriations have got to be made, as in the case of this $750,000,000 appropriation. Our limitation here will be reached after a while.

We can not go on levying taxes forever. The pay day, of which I spoke last night, will come at some time.

Also all charges for interest and dividends and other costs of securing necessary additional capital; and also all charges for interest and dividends on new securities or share capital issued for the discharge, conversion, renewal, or extension of present obligations. In addition to this, Mr. Burleson also agreed to make provision for depreciation and obsolescence relatively equal to that of the past—an average of 5.72 per cent annually on the book value of the depreciable property, including additions; Mr. Burleson also agreed to continue the existing license and rental contracts between the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidiary companies.

One of the greatest abuses which presumably have been perpetuated in these contracts between Mr. Burleson and the Bell Telephone companies is the arrangement by which the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. exacts an unconscionable proportion of the long-distance tolls from its subsidiary companies, which is merely a means of keeping down the profits of the subsidiary companies, and thus heading off demands for reductions in rates. When a subsidiary of this large company, like the one running from Indianapolis, Ind., out to central Illinois, is in the hands of receivers, there will be no possible chance for reducing rates; there would be a very much better chance of increasing rates in order to make it a profitable going concern.

In a sworn affidavit, in a suit in Chicago, by the minority stockholders of the Central Union Telegraph Co.—a subsidiary Bell company controlled by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.—against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., it was stated that on a message originated by the Central Union Co. at Springfield, Ill., to New York, occupying a period of 15 or 20 minutes, the total charge for which would be in the neighborhood of $25, the Central Union Co. would receive 20 cents and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. $24.80.

This condition presented itself in a suit by the minority stockholders. The condition served two purposes: First, it secures against a reduction of the rate; it furnishes a foundation for an increase even, in order that the company may survive and do a profitable business. That is one of the foundations. The other would be where a receivership is had in order to freeze out the minority stockholders of the district company. That is a familiar process; it used to be quite a fashionable thing for railways to do this; nearly every one of the old steam railways has gone through the processes of organization and reorganization, in which the fortune of the small investor has disappeared.

This is the case I referred to briefly awhile ago. In this suit it was also testified that the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. took 95 per cent of the long-distance tolls from the local Bell Co. in Missouri. When it is considered that the local company actually does all the work in connection with this long-distance business, besides originating it and maintaining the local plant at its own expense, establishes the exchanges, secures the subscribers, does the advertising, makes out the charges, and collects the entire toll, it will be seen that when the local company gets any such miserable proportions on the long-distance telephone business as are mentioned above, it is a clear case of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. taking practically all of the tolls to keep down the profits of the local company. In addition to this abuse, Mr. Burleson, by his agreement with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., has also perpetuated the abuse by which the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. exacts 4½ per cent of the gross receipts of the local telephone companies from local calls. This has been denounced by many public-service commissions. The perpetuation of these abuses by Mr. Burleson indicates a close relationship between himself and Mr. Vail.

To show further the favoritism practiced by Mr. Burleson toward the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., I will cite the case of the Central Union Telephone Co., which is a subsidiary of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the majority of the stock being held by that company. The minority stockholders are, however, suing the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for an accounting, charging that the profits of the Commercial Union were illegally diverted to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. The Commercial Union is in the hands of a receiver. Under its contract for compensation with the Postmaster General the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. awarded $2,000,000 to the Commercial Union as its share of the compensation from the Postmaster General. The receivers of the Commercial Union objected to being treated as a constituent company of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and demanded that they be allowed to negotiate a separate contract for compensation with the Postmaster General. When the receivers attempted to do so, they were met by the proposition by the Postmaster General that he would pay the receivers if they were treated as independent of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., only $1,000,000, but if they allowed themselves to become a part of the contract between the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the Postmaster General, the Central Union would be paid $2,000,000.

I think this incident speaks for itself, Mr. President. It shows the close communication between the unfair conditions existing between a subordinate company, the majority of whose stock is held by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and the action of the Postmaster General in perpetuating a practice which is not only unfair but is reprehensible.

As to whether or not the Postmaster General is losing money on his award of compensation to the Bell Telephone Co., only a statement from him would show, and even that statement would have to be examined, in all probability, very closely. We are familiar with the bookkeeping practiced in certain departments. It is one of those things that are not what they appear to be. A person must have faith in things unseen, and have the ability to penetrate far beyond the figures in mere columns, and have technical and accurate knowledge of bookkeeping, before he can interpret some of the methods presented by Government reports.

We do know that last year (1917), according to the annual report of the American (Bell) Telephone & Telegraph Co., it only earned 8.83 per cent on its capital stock while it was paying an 8 per cent dividend. We know also that due to its enormous payments for the purpose of either buying out or crushing out independent telephone companies during the last seven or eight years and also due to its general extravagant methods its expenses have been gradually cutting into its profits, and each succeeding year shows a smaller margin of profit over its dividend, in 1917 it being only 0.83 per cent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHERMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana rises to a parliamentary inquiry. He has the right to make that.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has now been reading from a document for a period of a half hour or more. I invite attention to Rule XI of the Senate Rules, as follows:

When the reading of a paper is called for and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate.

I appreciate that heretofore that rule has had this construction—that when a Senator asks for the reading of a paper at the desk he is not entitled to have it read if objection is made except by the order of the Senate, and it has not been applied to prevent the reading of the paper by the Senator himself. But, Mr. President, I am not aware that since my time, at least, the question which I now desire to raise has been raised. The reason for the rule is as forceful when the paper is read by the Senator himself as it is when the request is made that it be read from the desk.

I read from section 32 of Jefferson's Manual, in illustration of the rule, as follows:

When papers are laid before the House or referred to a committee every Member has a right to have them once read at the table before he can be compelled to vote on them; but it is a great though common error to suppose that he has a right, toties quoties, to have acts, journals, accounts, or papers on the table read independently of the will of the House.

The delay and interruption which this might be made to produce evince the impossibility of the existence of such a right.

There is, indeed, so manifest a propriety of permitting every Member to have as much information as possible on every question on which he is to vote that when he desires the reading, if it be seen that it is really for information and not for delay, the Speaker directs it to be read without putting a question if no one objects; but if objected to a question must be put.

It is equally an error to suppose that any Member has a right, without a question put, to lay a book or paper on the table and have it read, on suggesting that it contains matter infringing on the privileges of the House.

For the same reason, a Member has not a right to read a paper in his place, if it be objected to, without leave of the House, but this rigor is never exercised but where there is an intentional or gross abuse of the time and patience of the House.

A Member has not a right even to read his own speech, committed to writing, without leave. This also is to prevent an abuse of time, and therefore is not refused but where that is intended.

Mr. President, the rules to which I have adverted exist because, as said by Mr. Jefferson in his Manual:

The delay and interruption which this might be made to produce evince the impossibility of the existence of such a right.

There is, indeed, so manifest a propriety of permitting every Member to have as much information as possible on every question on which he is to vote that when he desires the reading, if it be seen that it is really for information and not for delay, the Speaker directs it to be read without putting a question, if no one objects; but if objected to a question must be put.

I inquire, Mr. President, if I now object to the further reading of the paper from which the Senator has been reading for the past half hour, whether it would be found objectionable under the rule?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate makes and construes its own rules. This is a new proposition with reference to the construction of the rules of the Senate. If the point of order is made, the Chair will refer it to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I say just a word? I just stepped to the Senator's desk and asked him if this was a paper prepared by anyone else but himself. He said no, that every word of it was prepared by himself, and it was his speech. If the point of order is made and sustained against this, no Senator could prepare a speech and read it from his desk; and I do not think the Senate desires to make any such ruling.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if this is a speech which the Senator has prepared to present to the Senate at this time——

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. WALSH. But I understand that he is reading from a document quite apart from his speech.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Montana that the Senator from Illinois has stated within two minutes that every word he has written himself and prepared for a speech.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is not the question.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I know it is not the question.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator has prepared a speech and is making a speech here on the floor with respect to something that is before the Senate, I am not going to make the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. This is on the railroad item of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the question could be referred to the Senate, unless it be a matter of proof, which would take an investigating committee to hear evidence, I can make the statement that everything that is in this paper—the greater part of which is memoranda—is found in Poor's Manual of 1917 and other investment data, or in the advance information that will be in the Manual of 1918. This matter has been taken by me and incorporated in a paper. I have it in various forms, referring to various public utilities. It is the analysis and the knitting together of the facts contained in these reports. Some of them are taken from the reports published in financial journals. This is not a paper any more than the addresses read by Senators here on the floor in a prepared typewritten or printed speech of their own. This is my own production. If the Senate wishes to establish a precedent of that kind, I can not help it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I accept the statement of the Senator that it is his own work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has withdrawn his point of order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt his address for the purpose of tendering an amendment just to have the amendment read, and then he may proceed with his address?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Chair does not think it would result in my losing the floor, I will do so.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish it not to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. My colleague and myself could not control the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. LEWIS. I not only have no desire to do that, but I should feel pained if any action of mine unconsciously did it. If I sought to take the Senator off the floor, I would do it openly.

Then, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: If the Senator now holding the floor should yield to me to tender an amendment to the pending bill and to have the amendment read, would that tend to take the Senator from the floor or at all affect his rights?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If any Senator should raise the parliamentary question, it would.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not yield unless the Chair would feel at liberty to assure me that it would not interfere with my possession of the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say to my colleague that the Chair informs me that it might imperil the Senator, and for that reason I shall not ask him to yield to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be very glad to do so for my colleague, if possible.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank my colleague.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the condition in which these various companies are found is outlined in Poor's Manual of Public Utilities, which is an established authority, and in a variety of reports made and published in financial journals. The New York Journal of Commerce and the Wall Street Journal are some of the current publications from which we draw those matters that are not yet reduced to book form. All of them are found in the files in the Congressional Library and are sent over by the Research Department to the office of any Senator or Representative desiring them.

The conditions shown by these reports in every instance indicate that with the subordinate company, with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., a minority series of the shareholders own a majority in the subordinate or subsidiary companies in every instance in which I have made an examination. As to the practice objected to by the minority stockholders of the subsidiary companies, however unjust it may be, however unprofitable, and however unfair, whether the subordinate company is in receivership or not, that condition has been approved and continued in the Post Office Department. That is generally true. I have found no exception to this statement. Whether it is done in all cases or not, I am not able to say, because I have not, with the limited time at my command, been able to examine the reports of the numerous companies which are subordinate to the holding company headed by Mr. Vail. If there are any in which this is not true, I will gladly accept the correction by those who have detailed practical knowledge that I do not have.

It appears, then, that the Postmaster General awarded to the Bell Co. an 8 per cent dividend on its shares of capital stock. This left a margin of only eighty-three one-hundredths of one cent on the dollar of the surplus available for dividend purposes in the treasury of the company. This is known to be a very narrow margin. It reaches the point of danger. No going concern subject to heavy contingent charges can survive upon such a margin. The telephone and the telegraph business, like the railroad business, is subject to very great hazards in its operation. To-day a storm some place prostrates 25 or 30 miles of poles. A fire some place else burns up a central office. A strike in some distant part of the United States suspends service. The earnings are suspended at the same time. The natural result is that a heavy surplus must be carried to meet the emergencies of the business. This is no more than a prudent course of conduct followed by every large business in the country. A bank carries a surplus. If it is distributed down to eighty-three one-hundredths of a cent on the dollar of all its surplus and only has that small margin left to meet expenses, it would not be a prudent banking business. It would be an absorption of its earned surplus and dividends to an alarming extent. Still, this is what is done under Government guaranty and contract with companies favored by Mr. Burleson.

It appears from the reports which I have gathered that there is but little doubt that Mr. Burleson, on behalf of the Government, is losing money on the contract he has made with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. This is virtually admitted by the Solicitor of the Post Office Department in his testimony before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on January 14, 1919. I do not want to commit this to memory. I wish to quote it from the paper. If I were to quote it from my memory somebody would say that I was fabricating out of the prolific recesses of my desire to criticize somebody. A paper not long ago said I had "degenerated into a mere knocker" anyhow. So, to escape that, I want to quote from the official hearings made by the Congress. I think I might remedy this unjust suspicion that I am caviling or acting in a captious spirit. I do not use those classic phrases myself. I abjured the slang many years ago. It is sometimes very expressive, but it shocks some fastidious ears, and I would very much prefer to adhere to the King's English of established form.

But this is what the testimony says:

That the Bell Co. had been having a surplus of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year, but that the increased cost of labor has more than wiped out that preceding surplus of the Bell Telephone Co..

If this means anything at all, Mr. President, it is that the Bell telephone lines are not earning for Mr. Burleson the amount of compensation under the contract which he has awarded to it.

During 1917 the stock of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. sold as high as 128¼. There are a good many fluctuations in stocks that are incapable of explanation. I followed the stock market at different times, not as an interested party having investments of my own, but for the purpose of accommodating certain clients in former years. It is a very peculiar thing. Prices are certainly depressed, and from no known cause that you can ascertain. They shoot up to the zenith for the same reason. It is outside the knowledge of anybody except the agency that causes it, and sometimes that remains a hidden source forever. Some of them we penetrate in legal investigations where the parties were put under oath and have been able to find why these fluctuations occurred.

But here was stock in 1917 at 128¼. That was a fair price. There are two ways of buying securities or shares on the market or handling them. The one is to accumulate and go long on the market, and the other is to sell with the falling market what you do not have and go short. You sell short, in other words. That 128½ high price with somebody holding securities in large volume is a good time to unload. Let the public digest the securities.

This stock gradually at 128½ began slipping, and in March, 1918, its annual report for the year 1917 was published, and it showed only an earning of 8.3 per cent on its stock, out of which was paid an 8 per cent dividend. By August, 1918, this telephone stock had slid from 128½ down to 90⅝, quoted on the New York Stock Exchange. Where did it come from—all these shares of stocks handled in that time?

When the price was 128½ the gentlemen who had an abundant supply of that stock let loose of it and fed it out to the absorbing public. They digested it at 128½. After they had disposed of it at 128½ in August, 1918, after the dear public had accumulated a long line of it, after the lambs had been well sheared, then the price fell to 90⅝, and this is one of the concerns the manager of which the Government is, hand in glove, effecting a great moral reform.

This, of course, I have taken the pains to prepare and put on paper. I can not be accused, however, of borrowing this language from the report. That is not found in Poor's Manual or in Moody's Investor.

This can only be learned by interviewing brokers, and there are gentlemen from Illinois who have gone out to New York and taken up their habitation there. Some of them are old clients of mine; some old neighbors. They are still engaged on the Street in New York, just as they were down on La Salle Street in Chicago. The field is a little greater; the operations are a little more strenuous if anything, but they are coming along. They follow all these things, and they give me, without the liberty of using their names, any information I ask for except their own operations. I do not ask to become their father confessor on those things. I only want to know what the general drift of things has been where they operate.

There were rumors in the financial district. They started a steady rise, and on October 5, two days before Mr. Burleson's compensation contract with the Bell Telephone Co. was made public, the stock was selling at 104½. The patient was convalescent.

That reminds me of the time the standard return for the steam railways was agreed upon the hill. There was much expectation in financial circles at that time. Telegrams were coming and going quick and fast. Codes of all kinds were employed. A considerable sum of money changed hands on the fluctuations in the market. That was a buying speculation, because when the compensation contract became known prices immediately stiffened on railway shares.

The query always comes up, Did some one have advance information as to the very liberal compensation provided for the telephone company? On October 9, two days afterwards only, was this great increase noticed from ninety and a fraction up to 104, and four days afterwards the price rose to 109½. I get these figures from the Wall Street Journal, showing the sales made on the exchange that day. This indicated that the people concerned and who knew, having advance information, that the Post Office Department treatment of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its affiliated concerns was regarded as very satisfactory to the company. Is it not possible that these men connected with the company mentioned and having close affiliations through its head of the principal company with the Post Office Department, knew what the contract was, and that the leak occurred beginning at the head? There were no mistakes made. They knew what they were doing.

[At this point Mr. SHERMAN yielded that Mr. UNDERWOOD might call up House joint resolution 436, which occupied the attention of the Senate until the hour arrived for final adjournment.]

SENATOR FROM NEW MEXICO.

During the delivery of Mr. SHERMAN's speech,

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to present——

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not yield, I understand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think I have a privileged matter to present. I hope the Senator will not decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico rises to a question of privilege, which he has a right to raise.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to present credentials showing the reelection of my colleague, Senator FALL, of New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from New Mexico has a right to present the credentials of his colleague. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

THE CANVASSING BOARD OF THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

This is to certify that ALBERT BACON FALL was duly and regularly elected in accordance with law to the office of United States Senator at the general election held in said State of New Mexico on the 5th day of November, in the year 1918, as shown by the returns of said election on file in the office of the secretary of state and as declared and determined by the State canvassing board, consisting of the governor, the secretary of state, and the chief justice of the State of New Mexico.

In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of New Mexico this 5th day of December, A. D. 1918, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third.

W. E. LINDSEY,
Governor of New Mexico.
[SEAL.]
ANTONIO LUCERO,
Secretary of State.
RICHARD H. HANNA,
Chief Justice of New Mexico.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announces as the senatorial members of the Public Buildings Commission, a commission provided for in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1920, with a view of controlling and allotting space in owned or leased Government buildings in the District of Columbia, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES (S. DOC. NO. 444).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 15, 1918, a list of civil employees in the Department of Justice on March 1, 1919, and the number discharged during the previous two weeks, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF THE MAIL (H. DOC. NO. 1843).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General transmitting, pursuant to law, information relative to the readjustment of compensation to be paid to railroad companies for the transportation of mails, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

PNEUMATIC-TUBE SYSTEM.

Mr. CALDER introduced a bill (S. 5680) to provide for the purchase and operation of pneumatic-tube mail service in the cities of New York, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; Boston, Mass.; and St. Louis, Mo., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

TREATMENT OF INFLUENZA.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 to discover the virus of influenza, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 436) providing for the appointment by each Member of the House of Representatives of one secretary and one clerk, whose names shall be placed on the rolls and paid in monthly installments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On March 3:

S. 4723. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5236. An act to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States.

On March 4:

S. 3797. An act validating applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes;

S. 5554. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5566. An act for the relief of the claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark.

CLERICAL ASSISTANTS OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. A joint resolution has just come from the House which is a House matter. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Illinois, I am directing a parliamentary inquiry. The joint resolution is a matter relating to House business in reference to their clerks; and I desire to make the parliamentary inquiry if it be in order to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution of the House. It is purely a House matter; and I ask if it can not be done by unanimous consent without taking the Senator from Illinois off of the floor or displacing the bill now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution which has just come from the House in relation to their own matter may be considered without taking the Senator from Illinois off the floor or displacing the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 436) providing for the appointment by each Member of the House of Representatives of one secretary and one clerk, whose names shall be placed on the rolls and paid in monthly installments, was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that hereafter each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner of the House of Representatives shall have for clerical assistance necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, one secretary at $2,000 per annum and one clerk at $1,200 per annum, whose names shall be placed on the rolls and who shall be paid in monthly installments by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Such secretary and clerk shall be appointed by the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner and certified to the Clerk of the House of Representatives at the beginning of his term of office, and shall be subject to removal at any time by such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, with or without cause; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to the benefits of this provision.

Section 2 provides that this act shall take effect July 1, 1919, and that the appropriation for clerical assistance for the fiscal year 1920, carried in the act "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," shall be applied during said fiscal year in the manner above set forth.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the joint resolution, as follows:

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War within 30 days after the approval of this act to demobilize and muster out of the military service of the United States all drafted and volunteer soldiers within the United States who make application for discharge, except the Regular Army and except soldiers under medical treatment, and those being detained for trial by courts-martial or punished in pursuance of a court-martial sentence.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not press his amendment to this House measure. It is purely a matter of the House, and the amendment which the Senator offers involves general legislation. It is customary for each House to take care of its own domestic affairs. I do not think that we are showing proper courtesy to the House in attempting to interfere with the passage of their resolution.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in offering this amendment I certainly intend no discourtesy to the House, and I dislike not to accede to the request of the Senator from Alabama. I had intended to offer this amendment to the pending bill—the general deficiency bill. In my judgment, it is a great deal more important to have our soldier boys mustered out of the camps and returned to their homes than it is to provide Members of the House with additonal clerks. I do not object to providing Members of the other House with sufficient clerical force to discharge the business devolving upon them, but I think it is unfortunate—I think a much stronger term could be used to describe the action of this Congress in adjourning without enacting legislation requiring and compelling the demobilization of the Armies in the United States.

This amendment relates exclusively to soldiers within the United States. The Secretary of War has announced that he could demobilize 30,000 soldiers a day. In 30 days he could demobilize 900,000. According to a recent published statement there are 799,000 troops encamped in America. This does not call for an impossibility. The amendment does not relate to soldiers who are now in Europe. Much as I would like to hasten their demobilization, I do not undertake to meddle with that situation. International affairs are complicated, and I would not undertake upon such short notice precipitately to interfere with the control of the Army in Europe by the Commander in Chief. I speak thus provisionally of the troops in Europe because I do not have sufficient information upon which to base a judgment. I do not wish either to sacrifice our interest or to neglect our duty. I am, however, strong in the conviction that our troops should be withdrawn from Europe as rapidly as the military situation and the public interest will permit. To keep them in Europe away from their country, away from their homes, away from their families one day longer than necessity demands would be an act of the highest injustice, an act of deepest ingratitude. Not only duty, gratitude, and justice plead for their early return but sound public policy dictates their early return. The return to normal conditions, the economic readjustment of the country, must wait upon their coming home. This is true of every class of our soldiers without reference to their business or occupation. This is especially true of those engaged in agriculture. The springtime is at hand. The seedtime is here. To lose 30 days or to lose 60 days now is in many respects equivalent to the loss of the year. Their achievements in France have earned for them the right to a speedy return to the land that gave them birth. Next to their brilliant behavior upon the field one of the chiefest glories of our soldiers is the fact that when our country called the citizen became a soldier almost upon the instant, "ready to do or die." It is equally to their glory that as soon as the war was ended the soldiers desired to become citizens, desired to exchange the pursuits of war for the pursuits of peace. This is the mightiest bulwark of our free institutions and the best assurance of their perpetuity. America claims them. Speed their return.

There ought not to be a single vote in the Senate against the adoption of this amendment. I offer it to this House joint resolution because it is the only vehicle which promises any hope of success. I do not doubt that the House of Representatives would rejoice to afford the opportunity for enacting this legislation. I can not withdraw the amendment. The Senate must take the responsibility of its defeat.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me, I should like to say to him that, in my judgment, his amendment, even if it were adopted, ought to be amended so as to exclude soldiers who are necessary to guard the cantonments, which can not be left vacant and entirely uncared for. For that purpose quite a large force may be necessary. There ought to be in the Senator's amendment a provision excluding such force as may be necessary to preserve and to guard the cantonments after demobilization takes place.

Mr. GORE. Let the Government hire caretakers to take care of these encampments. We did not draft our soldiers to do service of that sort. Soldiers were drawn into the military service to fight for the honor and in defense of their country. They were not drafted, they were not taken from their homes and their families in order to become mere caretakers to drive birds and bats out of these institutions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senate knows that in the half hour remaining, if this amendment is adopted, the legislation can not pass the House. We shall be doing something that is a distinct discourtesy to the House, without accomplishing anything. For that reason I hope that the amendment will be defeated and that the joint resolution may be passed.

Mr. GORE. I can only reply that I certainly intend no discourtesy to the House; but if I am driven to the point where I must choose between being discourteous to the House of Representatives and being unjust to these soldier boys, I shall take my choice without hesitation, and shall not be unjust to the soldiers. I want the Senate to take its choice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator and the Senate can accomplish nothing if they put this amendment on. It will merely defeat the joint resolution and involve a failure to act in a courteous way to the House.

Mr. GORE. This joint resolution can be messaged to the House in five minutes and would be concurred in by the House, and I have no doubt that the House would rejoice to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the joint resolution. I ask that my amendment be read as a separate section.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of this resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was unanimous consent given. That is the only way the Chair would consent to invade the rights of the Senator from Illinois. When this joint resolution shall have been disposed of he will still hold the floor, or the Chair would feel that the Senate had not dealt fairly with the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask another question. A Senator has a right to object at any time during the consideration of the joint resolution, has he not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. I think a Senator has that right. That is what I desired to know.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator will let my amendment be read, after that he can raise the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to make this point of order against the pending amendment. I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the House joint resolution, not to displace the pending business or to take the Senator from Illinois off the floor, and I make the point of order that under the unanimous consent given for this particular joint resolution to be considered it is not subject to amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. To which I reply——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. A point of order of that sort, I believe, has no precedent, and not only has no such point of order ever been sustained, but, in my judgment, it has never been made during the history of the United States Senate. To say that when unanimous consent was given to take up this resolution, that it comes before the Senate—a legislative body, a deliberative body—like the laws of the Medes and Persians, not to be changed, not to be amended, but to be taken as it is written, the suggestion, Mr. President, is preposterous.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like——

Mr. LEWIS. I ask to have my amendment read.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I yield, if I do not lose my place.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Chair a parliamentary question. At any time during the consideration of the joint resolution, it having been taken up by unanimous consent, an objection to it would defeat its further consideration, would it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where is the rule?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to look up the rule; but I know that that has been the practice in taking up the calendar under Rule VIII. In that connection it has always been held that an objection could be made at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but this is entirely a different case.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I am aware of that.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask that my amendment be read.

Mr. GORE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask that my amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that it is not an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, but is an entirely new amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. It has not been changed to make it conform to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. I should like to have it designated as an amendment to that amendment, it having been sent to the desk without having been made to conform.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is impossible to designate things in that way. The proposal of the Senator from Illinois has nothing to do with the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. PITTMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GORE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LEWIS. The question of germaneness has not been raised. If it were raised, I would have a right to be heard on that issue. I ask to have my amendment read, and then its germaneness may be passed upon by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the Senate notes with interest that the President of the United States returns at once to resume his labors for the peace of the world and the adjustment of the terms of the obligations on Germany as a just penalty for the war it waged: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate expresses by this resolution its wish for the safe journey of the President, the safe return to his own country, and for every success in any undertaking that makes for the welfare of the United States and its people and the betterment of the world; be it further

Resolved, That the Senate earnestly approves all proper efforts of the President to effect a league of peace that can bring an arrangement guaranteeing the tranquillity of nations and the mutual friendships of the world.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to be heard on the proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would be very glad to vote for that resolution.

Mr. LEWIS. And so would the Senate if it had the chance, I am sure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has nothing to do with the question as to whether it is an amendment to the pending amendment. It is not an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEWIS. I asked to tender it as such, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator did, but that does not make any difference.

Mr. LEWIS. The point has not been made from any source that it is not within parliamentary rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has to rule upon the question as to whether the amendment is an amendment or not, in the first place.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I tender it as a substitute, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. I make the point of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois that there is an amendment pending to the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is all the Chair is trying to do, namely, to dispose, first, of the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. He is observing the rule.

Mr. LEWIS. I may be pardoned for saying that it was impossible for me to understand quite the point the Chair was making, because the amendment not having been stated, I was not given the opportunity to make issue, but I did not know on what ground the honorable Vice President ruled it out of order, or under what rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon the ground that two amendments can not be pending at the same time. That certainly is clear.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I understand it is not on the ground that the amendment is not germane or that it is not——

Mr. PITTMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has moved to lay the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] on the table. That question is pending, and it is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GORE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it too late to have the amendment read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote is now being taken on the motion to table the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Let the roll call proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I am compelled to withhold my vote, as I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. As he is not present I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I find that I am paired, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bankhead	Gay	Kendrick	Martin, Va.
Beckham	Gerry	King	Myers
Chamberlain	Henderson	Kirby	Nelson
Culberson	Hitchcock	Lewis	Overman
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Martin, Ky.	Pittman

Pollock	Shafroth	Smith, S. C.	Underwood
Pomerene	Sheppard	Swanson	Walsh
Ransdell	Shields	Thomas	Williams
Robinson	Simmons	Thompson
Saulsbury	Smith, Ga.	Trammell

NAYS—47.

Baird	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Harding	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Hardwick	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Cummins	Kellogg	Norris	Vardaman
Curtis	Kenyon	Nugent	Wadsworth
Fernald	Knox	Page	Warren
France	La Follette	Penrose	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Poindexter	Weeks
Gore	Lodge	Reed	Wolcott
Gronna	McCumber	Sherman

NOT VOTING—11

Ashurst	Goff	Owen	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Hollis	Phelan	Townsend
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Ariz.

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment so as to make it provide that the soldiers shall be demobilized within 60 days.

I think that the demobilization has been entirely too much retarded. I believe that a great many of our soldiers who have been drafted into the service are yet in the camps when by all right and sense of justice they ought to be at home carrying on their own private business affairs. At the same time I believe that to restrict the demobilization within a period of 30 days would possibly not allow sufficient time. For that reason I offer an amendment to make it 60 days.

I do not believe that our soldiers should be retained for the purpose of performing chores around the camps. I do not believe that they should be retained for the purpose of acting as the man Friday or the lackey for some officers who may desire to keep them around at different camps throughout the country. I do not believe that they should be retained for the purpose of acting as chauffeurs and lackeys for officers in other localities for running their cars. They were not drafted into the service for this purpose. A great many of those that are retained are being used there for other purposes than military purposes. Therefore I offer this amendment and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I think it would be very unfortunate for the Senate of the United States to express its assent to this proposition. The Army appropriation bill has not passed. The amendments which were made to the Army appropriation bill fixed the number of men of the enlisted and commissioned personnel. That bill has not passed, and has not been acted on at all, although I have tried to have it taken up. In the meantime, to undertake now to demobilize the Army within 30 or 60 days, it seems to me, would be a very great mistake.

I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator from Florida with reference to the improper uses that have been made of the enlisted personnel of the Army; but, notwithstanding that, there is a high duty that the United States has to perform in the emergency which confronts us. Until the Army has been reorganized on the basis of a force appropriate to insist upon the rights of the United States, and until the Senate and the Congress have had an opportunity to act upon the whole subject, there ought not to be any change in present conditions.

I therefore express the hope that the amendment of the Senator may not be adopted, but that the whole subject may be deferred until the Army has been reorganized either upon the plan suggested in the Army appropriation bill or upon some other basis yet to be agreed upon.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. He understands that this amendment does not relate to the troops that are in Europe but is confined to the troops that are in the United States? It seems to me that the contingency which he describes could be met by the troops returning from Europe.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not so sure that that is true. The entire Army is a whole; and in order to make it coordinate and fit with the troops abroad, it ought to remain in its present state until the whole subject has been disposed of.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask to perfect the amendment by inserting the word "now" before the words "within the United States," so as to meet that situation, although, as I have said before, I favor the early and the speedy demobilization of all the troops in the United States and as many of the troops in Europe as is consistent with the public interest. This is a high and solemn duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the amendment of the Senator from Florida be laid on the table; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a motion to lay on the table and is not debatable. The yeas and nays are requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If this amendment is laid on the table, does that carry the whole proposition with it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I make the same transfer as before, and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). I desire the RECORD to show that my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on account of serious illness in his family.

The roll call resulted—yeas 44, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Baird	Hale	McNary	Shields
Borah	Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Hardwick	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Spencer
Colt	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Underwood
Fernald	Kenyon	Page	Vardaman
France	Knox	Penrose	Warren
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson
Gore	Lenroot	Reed	Weeks
Gronna	Lodge	Sherman	Williams

NAYS—42.

Bankhead	Kendrick	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	King	Pollock	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kirby	Pomerene	Swanson
Culberson	Lewis	Ransdell	Thomas
Cummins	McCumber	Robinson	Thompson
Fletcher	McKellar	Saulsbury	Trammell
Gay	McLean	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gerry	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Walsh
Henderson	Myers	Simmons	Wolcott
Hitchcock	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.
Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—10.

Ashurst	Goff	Owen	Townsend
Dillingham	Hollis	Phelan
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Md.

So the amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock of this the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1919, having arrived, and by virtue of the Constitution and laws of the United States the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States having expired, by virtue of the authority vested in me as the Presiding Officer of the Senate I declare the Senate now adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 4, 1919.

(Continuation of proceedings of Monday, March 3, 1919.)

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this resolution is, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] has said, one of some importance. It has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I trust will be adopted, to relieve the situation which has been described.

Since this bill comes from the Ways and Means Committee I want to make some reference to the fact that certain members of that committee are about to pass out with this Congress. The pleasant exercises that characterized the earlier part of the evening, including the presentation to the chairman of the Ways and Means [Mr. KITCHIN] of a testimonial of the regard of the House, induces me to say that the committee is obliged to sever association with five of its members, who will retire temporarily to private life to-morrow.

Mr. LINCOLN DIXON, of Indiana, is one of these. He was the third member in rank on the Democratic side, and by virtue of his rank had been a conferee on all the important revenue bills prepared by the Committee on Ways and Means during this session of Congress. I think perhaps no higher honor has come to any legislator during this critical period of American and world history than to have been in conference on the great revenue bills that were prepared by this body to furnish ways and means for the conduct of the great war.

Two other members of the committee on the Democratic side will also retire from Congress to-morrow. One of them is GUY T. HELVERING, of Kansas, an active, energetic, useful Member, who took a highly intelligent interest in all of the affairs of the committee. Our co-Member, GEORGE F. O'SHAUNESSY, of Rhode Island, also goes out.

He was chosen to make the fight for Senator in his State and has accepted the fortunes of war in good grace. All we can do now is to bid him an affectionate farewell. Two Republicans, members of the committee, go out with this Congress. One of them is our distinguished colleague from Nebraska, Mr. CHARLES H. SLOAN. I do not know any member of the committee who worked more industriously nor with more patriotic fervor throughout the whole of his membership than did the gentleman from Nebraska. Upon the Republican side of the House, where his services were noted and where his patriotic efforts were appreciated, I am sure his departure will be very much regretted. He had many friends upon the other side. If I might be permitted to say outside of the committee that he had the warm and cordial friendship of all the members of the committee I would very cheerfully make that statement, because it is a fact. Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, of New York, was another Republican member of the committee who of his own volition severed his connection with the House. Mr. FAIRCHILD was a man of large means and large business experience, whose career was marked by success from the beginning. He was what might be called a self-made man, whose advice in the committee was of great value, especially during the war period, when the assistance of such men was needed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having said this much about some of my colleagues upon the Ways and Means Committee, I desire to say a few words on the subject of aviation.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. I think a quorum ought to be here to hear this speech.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not; I think we have a quorum here.

Mr. SNYDER. I will withdraw the point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will be very difficult now, as Congress is about to adjourn, and the voice of the people as expressed by its representatives will be temporarily hushed, to obtain much information about possible malfeasance in any department. While Congress is in session Members are privileged to say what they please about great generals or little lieutenants [laughter] who may offend against public taste. It is possible to criticize the head of a department who might be overreaching himself or who might be grasping for power. While Congress is in session it is possible for the representatives of the people to listen to complaints as they come up from various districts from every section of the country and to give them vent. While Congress is in session it is possible even to discuss the league of nations when the President is abroad, or even when he is on a temporary visit to Washington.

All these things may be considered when Congress is in session, and I say to you, gentlemen, my colleagues upon both sides of the House, though there are some privileges vouchsafed to a Member of Congress as a representative of the people while Congress is in session, when Congress closes the congressional privileges close with it and our lips are sealed to a certain extent, except as we may go abroad and cautiously inform the people of some of the things we know. I think there are many matters coming up from all the departments about which we should inform the people. I regret that we can not get them all in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and, by the same token, I regret that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not have a larger and wider circulation, in order that everything that is done here may be conveyed through that medium to the vast population of the country.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Can the gentleman give us a few remarks about the intracoastal canal?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, if the gentleman from Maryland, who is so well posted and who believes in that project, will take a little time after I am through, he can get an hour in his own right, just as I have done, and he may discuss the question fully. When the gentleman from Maryland is posted as to the rules of the House and knows how to do it, he can get time to discuss the intracoastal canal.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to my outgoing friend from Missouri, the eloquent and fiery gentleman from Missouri, who, if I had noticed him before, would have received a tribute at my hands. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. DECKER. Thank you for the tribute. I wondered if you would give me 10 minutes of that hour in which to make a speech.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. After I get through, if the gentleman will get recognition, he can have an hour, and if he can beat the carpet and the air with his accustomed eloquence we shall all be pleased. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Are we now in recess? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are now discussing the Rainey bill, which I favor.

Mr. CANNON. If we are in recess——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the last opportunity to discuss wet goods this session or any other.

Mr. CANNON. If we are in recess, I want to say to the gentleman, first, that he is making a good speech, and ask him, second, whether he has quoted to our colleagues and friends this evening that original couplet:

Peace and righteousness have kissed each other?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not said that in so many words, nor have I the faculty of quoting so well as the gentleman from Illinois; but I have seen the lion and the lamb lie down together; to-night I have seen the Democrats and the Republicans fraternize; I have heard them compliment each other and pass gifts to each other, and I feel as though—

This is a day we long have sought
And mourned because we found it not.

[Applause.]

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To the gentleman from Missouri, who is to leave us, I would say that I think if he did remain he would insist on a duty on zinc, a proposition I am inclined to approve

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. DECKER. I just wondered how the gentleman got that hour's time if he is in opposition to the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I got it on merit. [Laughter.] And I am not in opposition to the bill. When my distinguished friend and colleague on the Ways and Means Committee rose and presented his bill as a matter of privilege, coming, as it did, from the highest committee in this House, I, being a member of the committee, desired to fortify the argument he had made. I rose in my place, addressed the Chair, said "Mr. Speaker," and, upon obtaining recognition, proceeded with my speech. And now I have arrived at the aviation stage. [Laughter.] Having arrived there I hope the gentleman will not go up in the air.

Mr. DECKER. I will not do it under any circumstances.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield to any more interruptions.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DECKER. It is this: Being about to leave you, and not being a good parliamentarian, there is a question that I wish to propound to the Chairman. There is an important bill before the House, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] spoke in favor of it, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania also speaks an hour in favor it. He claims he has an hour. I ask the parliamentary question——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is referring to me as "he," which is out of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is employing unparliamentary language. [Laughter.]

Mr. DECKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Illinois, both of whom are in favor of the bill, are demanding an hour on each side. I want to know when Members who are opposed to this bill will have time to speak?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. After I get through.

Mr. MANN. To-morrow afternoon. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. At the expiration of the time of the gentleman, if the previous question is not ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. The previous question has nothing to do with the Committee of the Whole. We are proceeding under general debate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish to proceed with this speech, if I may. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER], who apparently did not hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] who presented this bill, will listen to me carefully, I think there will be no opposition to the bill. There will be no occasion for his opposing it.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in exercising the prerogatives of the House. It seems to me that sometimes they are invaded by another body. That accounts for some of us objecting to some of the amendments that come in on conference reports. They are thrown at us without an opportunity to fairly discuss them or analyze them or find out what they mean. I believe the House ought to discuss these questions.

Mr. MADDEN. What questions?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Questions that come back in conference reports, questions that affect the integrity of the departments, questions that relate to the expenditure of public moneys. Why, during this administration we have poured millions and billions of dollars into the hands of small bureau chiefs, as well as great department heads, and those millions and billions have been expended lavishly, and yet we have had no accounting. The public believes that these moneys have been well spent, and yet in the matter of aviation it developed, after we had promptly appropriated $640,000,000 to establish aircraft production in the United States, that though the money was spent we had not produced a single fighting airplane that could be used in France.

These are things that we ought to tell the people. If we can not get them into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and if the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has not sufficient circulation to enable the people to learn these things about which Congress has information——

Mr. MADDEN. Then let us start a paper of our own——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it might be well for the Members of Congress, good Democrats and good Republicans alike, after this session is over, to go about their districts and tell the people the truth. Let us show that Congress is not responsible for waste and extravagance, although the Congress has assumed the responsibility of aiding the President in the prosecution of the war.

I refer to aircraft, because to-day I introduced a certain resolution asking for certain papers and information from the War Department, from the Secretary of War, about certain reports concerning extravagance and alleged malfeasance, which seem to have been suppressed. I think the Congress ought to have this kind of information.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has referred to the difficulty experienced in bringing this information to the public. Here is the reason: In every big newspaper in the United States the Packard Co. has a full-page advertisement, talking about the forerunner of the Liberty engine and what it accomplished in the air. That is why we can not get the information before the people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may account for the expenditure of a large part of $640,000,000, which did not get us a single fighting plane in France. Now, I will ask the gentleman from New York, who is a well-informed and accomplished aviator, if the Packard Co. is the company that patriotically gave up the manufacture of all its automobiles in order to make Liberty motors?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman give us any idea as to the storage capacity of the cellars of Philadelphia to hold all the liquor that he is trying to get in this country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why, the gentleman is talking like an intoxicated man. [Laughter.] He knows more about the cellars of Philadelphia than I do. I believe if the people of Texas ever got onto the fact that the gentleman has been going over there, and that he knows about these cellars of Philadelphia, he would have a hard time getting back to Congress. Texas is a very dry State. [Laughter.]

But I was talking about aviation. What I wanted to do was to lay a few facts before the House before we adjourn, so that the Members may go back to their districts and tell the people something about aviation.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I know the gentleman wishes to be accurate in his statements, and usually he is very accurate. The gentleman has repeated two or three times the statement that we spent $640,000,000 for aeroplanes. Does not the gentleman know that that does not cover the entire bill? Our total appropriations for that purpose amounted to about a billion and a half dollars. Under the Sherley bill, covering a portion of that huge sum back into the Treasury, there was something like $487,000,000 covered back into the Treasury, so that as a matter of fact instead of $640,000,000 there was a little more than $1,000,000,000 expended.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the kind of information we ought to let out. The gentleman is doing just what I wanted to have done. I started with $640,000,000, mostly wasted in this aircraft business without any accounting, and nobody court-martialed, although a court-martial was recommended for some of them, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who is a member of the Military Affairs Committee and who knows about these things, stands up like a man and tells us the amount is over a billion dollars. The people ought to know about it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Ought not the Committee on Public Information to let the people know these things?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; but about the time the Committee on Public Information and Mr. Creel were getting ready to tell the people about it, they were put out of business.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman mean to say that Mr. Creel has stopped creeling?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He has not ceased to put them on the reel, even the Secretary of War.

With these few prefatory words I shall read a letter that was forwarded to the Acting Director of the Bureau of Aircraft Production by Capt. H. L. Scaife, a lawyer and mining engineer, who lives at Clinton, S. C. This man was selected by President Wilson to be one of the Naval Advisory Board and assisted Mr. Secretary Daniels in preparing the Navy for the war. He came up from South Carolina, put on the shoulder straps of a captain, and was assigned to the Aircraft Production Service. When this gentleman told me his story and laid his letter before me, I said, "That is the kind of information the people of South Carolina ought to have."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Did he not go out to California to induce people there to raise castor beans?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I believe he was sent West; but the gentleman referred to as having been sent to California was another officer of the same service, who made certain reports which were suppressed. After those reports had been made he was transferred from his field of activity in Washington and given a remote position in California. Our colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of Washington] introduced a resolution the other day to obtain those reports, and it was up before the House, but we have not yet got the details. I rather think we ought to get them, and for that reason I want to read this letter, addressed by Capt. Scaife, of South Carolina, to the Acting Director of the Bureau of Aircraft Production. If gentlemen will listen to this, they will learn something. Here is an ex-officer of the Aircraft Production Service. He has gone out of the service now, and therefore is free to speak. While he was in the service he could not.

Now, let us see what he says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1919.

Col. JAMES A. MARS,
Acting Director Bureau of Aircraft Production,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I personally placed in your hands a communication, dated January 23, 1919, definitely and precisely informing you of concrete facts of maladministration in connection with the castor-bean-growing section of the Bureau of Aircraft Production, and that you would be sure to have personal knowledge of the details and evidence of the shameful conditions your attention was called to three specific reports which were officially filed by me in the proper office of the bureau, dated, respectively, March 21, 1918, May 25, 1918, and a memorandum directed to Mr. Potter, prepared for the signature of Mr. Edmund Leigh, on or about October 1, 1918.

These reports were prepared by me in pursuance of my duty as an inspecting officer, and they give in detail the history of the castor-bean undertaking and the acts and doings of the castor-bean growing section from the time of its organization until it had become a stench in the nostrils of people who are familiar with its policy——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield? I hope it will not divert the gentleman in his argument, for I do not desire to embarrass him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am reading now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think it would be pertinent to inquire of the gentleman, as he is an eminent tariff expert, what is the present duty on castor beans?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the Committee on Ways and Means I will say that the gentleman from Ohio is considered as the castor-bean expert, and I refer that question to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Did the gentleman say castor beans or castor oil? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Alabama is the expert on castor oil. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman from Cincinnati knows more about castor oil.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (reading)—

The first report sets forth the facts that were necessary to be known to prevent a disastrous ending of the enterprise. The second report was filed when the undertaking was beginning to fall down, and it called for the immediate application of remedies to avert the disaster which has since happened. The memorandum directed to Mr. Potter, prepared by me for the signature of Mr. Leigh, presented the evidence necessary to fix the responsibility and prevent the escape of guilty persons——

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order. This is a very interesting letter.

Mr. MADDEN. I didn't know they raised castor beans in Kansas.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The farmers who undertook to raise castor beans apparently were deceived.

Mr. MADDEN. Was not the seed any good?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to know whether there is a protective tariff on castor beans such as there is on peanuts?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will come to that in due course. I read:

The castor-bean undertaking was laid out as a vital part of the program for the winning of the war, and its signal failure, with the squandering of an enormous sum of money, together with willfully false reports transmitted to higher authorities and unconscionable representations made to farmers, are a few of the things for which responsibility must sooner or later be fixed. My reports will show that the Castor Oil Board, which was charged with the supervision of the undertaking, was not consulted, and that it held no meetings for over a year; that the amount of production which might be expected was willfully misrepresented to the farmers, and, for fear that they might be discouraged from planting if they knew the truth, the original bulletin showing an average yield of about 10 bushels per acre was altered so as to indicate that a production of from 20 to 40 bushels per acre might be expected under favorable conditions——

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. The truth is the yield is only 4½ bushels per acre down in my district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is all explained in the letter, and the gentleman verifies it—that the seed distributed by the Government were represented to be of a certain variety which promised the best yield when it was well known that they consisted of a mixture of inferior and unacclimated seed, which experts and former growers advised would result in a failure the first year; that opportunities to obtain acclimated Bombay seed were neglected; that recommendations were made to plant the beans in sections of the country and in soil where previous attempts at cultivation had been a failure, while contracts were refused in the sections of the Middle West where the castor bean had been most successfully grown; that, regardless of repeated warnings as to the necessity, no adequate efforts were made to procure an efficient hulling machine until the crop was getting ripe for harvest, and, after an efficient hulling machine was finally discovered, a machine which had been demonstrated as worthless was recommended——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. Several gentlemen are listening to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, while those that are not listening are equally disturbed in their deliberations by the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think the whole assemblage should be in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for the interruption. If gentlemen will interrupt me at the end of a paragraph instead of the middle of a sentence, I would appreciate it—protests from the county agents of the Department of Agriculture were ignored; and recommendations unanimously adopted by a joint conference of the field men of the Department of Agriculture and the field men of the Signal Corps were ignored.

The part which has been performed by the castor-bean growing section is now history; and in the State where the bulk of the acreage was planted, instead of 30 to 40 bushels per acre, the average yield is about 1 bushel per acre, and in many sections the amount of seed planted will not be recovered, aside from the loss in time, labor, and fertilizer. The farmers were advised to soak the seed in hot water before planting, which in many instances resulted in poor stands. Notwithstanding the literature then available to the contrary, they were advised that castor beans were singularly free from diseases and pests, and it is now history that in this enterprise thousands of acres of castor-bean plants were destroyed by cut worms, blights, fungus, and various kinds of diseases——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Has the gentleman come to the end of a paragraph?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I wish the gentleman would hold up his thumb when he comes to the end of a paragraph. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is late and the gentleman is tired, but I read:

But for the vigilance of a person not connected with the Bureau of Aircraft Production, a barge of seed which had been sunk in salt water would have been sent to the farmers to plant.

The growers are now clamoring for recompense. A contract is a contract, and the only theory on which they may now be given an award is on the ground that they suffered loss because of fraudulent misrepresentations. To adjust the losses of from 15,000 to 25,000 growers will require an investigation ab initio——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. What does that mean?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. From the beginning. The gentleman is lawyer enough to know that. I read—

since a record and history of the individual growings have not been kept, and when I prepared the blanks for such a record in consultation with representatives of the Department of Agriculture the use of such blanks were forbidden. My reports and the innumerable letters and telegrams of complaint from every section of the country where the castor beans were being planted were ignored and suppressed and official memorandums of the most optimistic tint were transmitted to the higher authorities and to our allies long after any reasonable person might easily deduct that the castor-bean section had hopelessly fallen down and would result in chaos——

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I have been unable to get the cost of production of any product that is gambled or speculated in on the market, and I want to know if the gentleman can give us any information on the cost of the production of castor beans.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the resolution on the castor bean that I have offered is passed, I have an idea that the aviation section will give the gentleman that information. [Reading:]

The innocent have suffered and the fate of the Government's success in the prosecution of the war was jeopardized by a fiasco which is an insult to the most commonplace intelligence, and there should be no further temporizing in placing the responsibility. Early in the season I telegraphed to the head of the castor-bean growing section that such conditions as were then being discovered could not have just happened. Whether the chaotic conditions resulted from flagitious scheming undertaken with crafty pretense and cool impudence by arch traitors or whether they resulted from stupid inefficiency and criminal negligence, the results are the same and public decency demands that the guilty should be called by a voice sufficiently powerful to administer a rebuke that will deter others for years to come——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not believe they raise castor beans in the gentleman's district.

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They may raise them on the fire escapes or the back window sills, but they are not farmers.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. What I desire to ask the gentleman is whether he is reading this long letter for the purpose of defeating the Irish resolution, because I know there is a great deal of interest on the Republican side——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman ask me that question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I am for the Irish resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Then the gentleman ought not to be taking up one hour with this nonsense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois is the last man on earth who should interfere with the exposure of graft under this administration. He stands there deliberately endeavoring to suppress free speech.

Mr. SABATH. I know the gentleman is an expert on beans.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to get this information before the public. Does the gentleman want to suppress it?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has the right to print. I ask unanimous consent that the letter might be printed, so as to save time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is satisfactory to me. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be extended in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was objection; but subsequently Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania obtained permission to extend his remarks by inserting the remainder of the letter of Capt. Scaife, as follows:

The handing out of several millions of dollars to the farmers from the Public Treasury to stifle their criticisms and complaint without sufficient investigation into the merits of their claims would be a finale which would be in keeping with the acts and doings which sooner or later will shock the conscience of the American people. So complete has been the failure of those responsible for this outrageous debacle that the Government does not even know who planted castor beans, where they were planted, and it has no other definite records from which to estimate losses or make adjustments even if such adjustments are allowed by law. To allow the guilty to escape under such conditions, where thousands of citizens, some of them poor and needy, are financially injured, would be a travesty without parallel in public annals. If the whole scheme had been definitely planned for turning the farmers of the country into Bolsheviki it is hard to conceive how affairs could have been more effectively conducted. When you have carefully considered the evidence the question will inevitably arise: Is all this chaos the result of incompetency and inefficiency or was the outcome skillfully planned by some archtraitor?

In justice to the reputations and good names of the officers who are innocent of wrongdoing, common justice demands immediate investigation and the fixing of the responsibility. This is a case where the "buck" must be passed upward as far as necessary and not downward to some "buck private." The reports which have been suppressed not only detail the facts but cite documentary evidence and name the witnesses necessary to sustain charges before a court-martial or in criminal courts. Before the Government is asked to pay out millions of dollars as a gratuity to those who have suffered, it is a pertinent question to ask, Who is responsible?

In response to Bulletin No. 30, from The Adjutant General of the Army, calling upon the officers of the Bureau of Aircraft Production to volunteer for the fighting line, I have the distinction of being one of the seven out of the 350 officers in the bureau who responded to the call and on October 4, 1918, I was transferred to the Infantry. The fact that some one else is charged with protecting the interests of the Government in the premises and however much I would care to be relieved from the presentation of facts which have already been disclosed to officials in authority will not deter me, as an American citizen, from guarding the Government's interests and honor until some responsible official has acted.

In my private professional life it has been a fixed policy that, when mala fides is discovered, to leave no stone unturned until the truth had been brought to light. In this case, where a high officer of the Army who was informed of the truth attempted to hold over me the fear of a court-martial because of my efforts in the line of duty and in keeping with my oath of office, and where an officer of the military intelligence branch attached to the bureau attempted intimidation, my determination to stay with the proposition until some one in authority has acted in behalf of the Government will not be diminished.

If the men charged with the handling of the funds to be used in this enterprise had been turned into the Treasury with shovels and had been ordered to throw away the taxpayers' money, the waste would not have been greater than was actually squandered, to say nothing of the fraud and deceit which were practiced on the contractors and farmers. Almost from the time the undertaking was launched letters and telegrams of warning and protests were received by the castor-bean section. Complaints were received from every section where the castor beans were being planted. Protests from the field forces of the Department of Agriculture and the recommendations unanimously adopted at a joint conference of the field men of the Department of Agriculture and the field men of the Signal Corps were ignored. Bitter controversies arose with the heads of the college-extension branch of the Department of Agriculture in different States where the beans were being planted, and a serious four-sided controversy arose in California between the castor-bean section, the Department of Agriculture, the University of California, and the contractors, until patriotic citizens of that State responded and planted a larger acreage than was requested, regardless of financial consequences.

As already pointed out, the bulk of the acreage was planted in a State where reports showed experiments in the cultivation of castor beans had proven a failure, and contracts in Oklahoma and the Middle West, where castor beans had been successfully raised, were refused; and it was only after frequent protests and late in the season that small acreages were assigned to this section. The shipment of seed to one of the contractors in Texas was delayed for weeks after tracers had been wired, and, in spite of warnings that such might happen, these seed were not delivered until the season for successful planting had passed. "Blue-sky" literature, instead of the conservative information in hand, was circulated in official bulletins and authorized interviews. Although it was patent that the enterprise would result in a failure which would prove disastrous to the growers and to the Government, regardless of advice that a detailed record of the growings was necessary as economic history and for the protection of the Government in the event claims should later be filed against it by the growers, inspectors in the field were directed not to make a detailed report of the growings they inspected, with the result that the physical evidence to support the claims now being filed by the growers is lost.

The complete failure of the enterprise is evidenced by the fact that the growers are now filing claims against the Government, and, although the cost of the crop to the Government is already fabulous, the Treasury will be called upon to contribute to losses which were not only preventable but to guard against which there was timely warning. The conditions were such as would not have been tolerated in private business by the laws of the land, and surely there is ample law to protect the Government, and every responsible officer who was familiar with the conditions or whose duty it was to be familiar with them is guilty of neglect of duty and criminal negligence and should be called to account.

Finding that my reports were being suppressed and that false and misleading reports were being transmitted to higher authorities and to our allies, even to the extent of reporting large acreages planted where the ground had not been broken or the seed distributed, I complied with the conditions prescribed by the one hundred and twenty-first article of war, a law of the land which gives an officer or an enlisted man the inviolable right of appeal to the commanding general. On or about July 1, 1918, I sent a telegram to Mr. John D. Ryan, director of the Bureau of Aircraft Production, setting forth my compliance with the one hundred and twenty-first article of war and requesting that the reports and telegrams I had sent to the castor-bean section be investigated. I was promptly ordered to report to Washington and transferred to another department of the bureau, and, although I held the rank of captain, I was placed under the command of a lieutenant of the military intelligence section and formerly a police officer. An executive officer of the bureau, formerly a captain and now a lieutenant colonel, informed me that an attempt to go around a superior officer, no matter what was happening, would not be tolerated even to the extent of allowing me a hearing, and that I could get nowhere under the one hundred and twenty-first article of war in the bureau; that he had been in the Army six years, and that he had never heard of an officer attempting to take advantage of it. However, this officer was furnished with sufficient facts to remedy the conditions if he had so desired.

This officer of the military intelligence branch informed me that the Hughes investigation would accomplish nothing, and about the same time an order was issued in the Bureau of Aircraft Production which would forbid officers from giving information to the Hughes committee except through military channels, one of the executive officers of the bureau being named as the liaison officer. I was told by the military intelligence officer that conditions in the Bureau of Aircraft Production could not be remedied; that Borglum had tried and he had failed; that President Wilson had been appealed to, and he could not correct them; that Judge Hughes would accomplish nothing; and that I was "batty" if I attempted to go any further about the castor-bean situation.

However, my nominal attachment to the military intelligence branch afforded me a military channel, and I prepared a résumé of the situation for the signature of Mr. Edmund Leigh, chief of the plant-protection section, military intelligence branch, and directed to Mr. W. C. Potter, acting director, and to this letter documentary evidence was attached and in the letter witnesses were named. The military intelligence officer to whom I have referred, and who had full charge of military intelligence work in the Bureau of Aircraft Production, attempted various methods of intimidation to prevent this report from being made, and, although I was his superior officer, he directed that no communication prepared by me would be sent out without his signature. Having been placed under the orders of a junior officer by the executive authorities of the bureau, I placed the report in a sealed envelope, marked "Confidential," and directed to Mr. Edmund Leigh, whom I personally informed as to the nature and contents of the report and where it would be found. Whether or not the telegram I have mentioned ever reached the hands of Mr. Ryan and whether or not my report intended for Mr. Potter finally reached him I have no means of knowing.

As a result of my activities to prevent disaster to the Government and the castor-bean growers and to our Army and to our allies, who were depending on the castor-bean section for castor oil had the war lasted, which disaster was forecasted in my reports, and which disaster has happened so far as the castor-bean section is concerned, my rating as an officer was marked down from 75 per cent to 70 per cent and the annotation made on my military record: "This officer lacks vision." And while it may have been merely incidental, and while I do not state it as a fact, my final rating when I left the service was not made by my commanding officer, as prescribed, but I was informed that this rating was made by an officer who was at one time an officer in the Prussian Army and who had been turned back from France after he had gotten that far in command of American troops. This rating card is now on file in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army and the facts may be investigated and the results of the inquiry may speak for themselves.

In matters that affect the very life of the Nation the personal equation is of small moment and is cited only for the purpose of showing the difficulties which conscientious men sometimes encounter. I was 45 years old when the war started, and my services, therefore, were purely voluntary. The statement has been frequently made that officers in the Bureau of Aircraft Production deplored the fact that young officers who had been in training camps could not get to the firing line. As I have already stated, when the public was criticizing the situation Bulletin No. 30, dated August 16, 1918, was issued by The Adjutant General of the Army and promulgated in the Bureau of Aircraft Production, formally and officially offering all officers the privilege of making application for transfer to the Infantry. I make no criticism of any man who did not take advantage of the opportunity of placing himself on record by filing an application, but in justification of my military record, if it needs any justification, I will say that the record in that particular is made up, and it is a historical fact that I was one of the seven of some three hundred and fifty officers in the bureau who accepted the transfer.

Aside from the high-handed use of power to smother and stifle the truth, there is a specific case cited in my reports, where the names and witnesses are mentioned, in which the castor-bean-growing section procured the arrest of a Mississippi farmer who refused further entry upon his lands on the heinous charge of violating the espionage laws. This was the first and only time that the acts and doings of the castor-bean-growing section have stood before the bar of justice, and there the indictment against this helpless farmer, with the power of the Government in the hands of the castor-bean-growing section arrayed against him, was quashed, and before the same court the men acting under the direction of the castor-bean-growing section were themselves arrested, tried, convicted, and fined.

The oath of an Army officer is to defend the Constitution and laws of the United States, and it is not a question for argument that the Articles of War are laws enacted by Congress for the guidance of the Army. The one hundred and twenty-first article of war provides a method for direct appeal to the commanding general by an enlisted man or officer when military channels fail to function, and if officers of the Army can with impunity take upon themselves the authority to abrogate the laws of the Nation and treat the acts of Congress with contempt, those in power who fail to correct the evil will be defending in Washington a militarism which the overseas men gave their lives to destroy, and unless such a spirit and such a system have been destroyed in the American Army the world war will have been fought in vain.

I offer no apology for the length of this letter, since formal reports, with cold facts and burning statistics, are seemingly pigeonholed. The allegations contained in my reports are facts, and if they are questioned in any particular I am prepared to cite documentary evidence or name witnesses. My first report was filed March 21, 1918, and other reports have been filed as often as necessary. They have been in the Bureau of Aircraft Production to prove that some one has been guilty of neglect of duty in not questioning them, if they could be questioned. For the honor of the Government and for the sake of the reputations of men who are innocent, I insist that these reports be acted upon; and while I have no objection to anything I have written being shown to any person, nothing can be accomplished by referring the matter to those whose conduct is involved, unless it be for a reply by indorsement.

Things that concern the Government concern every American citizen, and the truth must be brought out. Are the enemies of truth so strongly entrenched as to allow to go unchallenged the statement of a military intelligence officer that conditions in the Bureau of Aircraft Production can not be remedied, that Borglum had tried and he had failed, that President Wilson had been appealed to and he could not correct them, that Judge Hughes could accomplish nothing?

I will say further that if the truth about the Bureau of Aircraft Production is desired, when an investigation is on rescind the order appointing a high military official of the bureau as liaison officer between the bureau and the investigating body and send a questionnaire to each member of the present and past personnel of the bureau, assuring them of immunity and inviting them to give information.

With the end in view of finding some one to whom incompetency, stupid inefficiency, willful misrepresentations, suppression of the truth, and Prussian methods are hateful, I brought the situation to your attention in my letter of the 23d ultimo, and I again request that action be taken.

Very respectfully,

H. L. SCAIFE.

Mr. WINGO and Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to the floor, am I not?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois reserved the balance of his time.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; but I addressed the Chair and was recognized, and under the rules I am entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman; the Chair recognized him for the purpose of inquiring for what purpose he was addressing the Chair. The time of the gentleman from Illinois is reserved.

Mr. WINGO. I did not hear the Chair put any limitation on my recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman for the purpose of inquiring his purpose.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Illinois having yielded the floor when no time is allotted, is not the gentleman from Arkansas entitled to the floor?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I reserved the balance of my time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What difference does that make? The time was not allotted under any agreement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A motion to rise at any time is in order.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman stated that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—98 ayes and 114 noes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 96 ayes and 98 noes.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] three minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I was quite sure that my distinguished friend from Illinois would never take part in the filibuster in the House at this hour which is seeking to prevent consideration by the American Congress of a most important resolution that has been reported favorably by two committees of Congress and for which 90 per cent of the membership of this House has been waiting all day long to vote. I refer to the so-called Irish resolution. I here and now desire to advise the political party which is attempting to throttle that resolution that the party, mayhap, is fooling with dynamite. Shame on the men who would juggle with liberty and justice for Ireland! I appeal to this House to stop its nonsense on the last day of the session, get down to business, and consider the resolution in favor of freedom for a people that has suffered for seven centuries [applause], and let the word go forth to the world that the American Congress believed in its President when he said we entered the war to make the small nations free.

Remember, sir, that the whole country is awaiting the action of Congress on this resolution, and that the long suffering, liberty loving sons of the Gael, whether they still abide in the land of their birth or are here in our own America enjoying the privileges of citizenship and breathing the air of freedom, are in prayer even at this hour that Ireland may be released from British thraldom. [Applause.]

I ask you, sir, why can not Ireland, as well as other maltreated lands, have a fair hearing and fair play at Paris? I am glad to raise my voice here in the Congress of the United States in emphatic protest against ruthless and unceremonious discrimination toward Ireland's appeal. Let us get busy now and pass the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I can not quite understand the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] when he seeks to place upon this side of the Chamber the responsibility for the delay in voting on what we have hoped to vote upon for the last year, the resolution known as the Irish resolution.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I have only three minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I never mentioned which party I had in mind.

Mr. KNUTSON. He did not mean the Republican Party.

Mr. MASON. All I want to say is that that resolution has been pending before the House for a year, ever since the President announced his 14 points and ever since he spoke in favor of self-determination. I had the honor of introducing one of the resolutions. The gentleman's own party has control of the committee that has slept and slept. We were informed through grapevine sources that as soon as the President paid his social visit to the United States [laughter] that possibly we would be permitted to vote upon this question. It has slumbered not in a Republican committee, and I now ask unanimous consent to take that resolution from the Committee on Rules and put it on its passage, and let the man object who wants to.

Mr. MANN. I did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose, but if I had it would not do any good, for we are in Committee of the Whole and can not in committee take things from other committees.

Mr. MASON. The people are ready to vote on the question. It does not reflect upon the honor or the integrity of our ally. It is merely an expression of opinion of one branch of Congress, such as has been indulged in for a hundred years, and it has never been a cause of war. It has not been a suggestion of unfriendliness. It was used years ago as an expression in the interest of Greece. It has been used eight or ten times as an expression of hope of independence for South Africa, for the different States of South America, as they came out from under the yoke of Spain. All I want to say is that I thought from the gesture that the gentleman made he was looking upon this side of the Chamber, and I simply ask him to put his own house in order before he dusts the front chamber in mine.

Mr. KNUTSON. He was looking over here for assistance.

Mr. MASON. I will give it to him if he can get up the resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Will not the gentleman ask his colleague [Mr. MANN] for unanimous consent to make a motion that the committee rise so that we can get into the House, so that we can take the resolution up in the House?

Mr. MASON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], my friend and colleague, a Democrat, and I a Republican, if he had been anxious to get this up, being in the majority, should have been able to do it. Why has he not procured from his committee some action?

Mr. SABATH. I have secured the action from the committee.

Mr. MASON. I have just now asked unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Wait until I make a suggestion. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask purely for the purpose of information when the program was shifted?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please state when the program was arranged?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That I do not know. The gentleman understands that I am for this resolution.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield? He is speaking about a program. What program? Is there some secret program that the House is not aware of?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not that I know of, except what was published in the newspapers. I understood that the first resolution that was to be called up, as a report from the Committee on Rules, was the bill making in order the Lane land bill.

Mr. RIORDAN. Who has charge of that bill in committee?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The chairman of the committee, of course.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman and I are both members of that committee and I am sure we have the same impression as to the program, that the soldiers' land bill was the first to come up, that the second was the retirement bill, and the third was the Irish resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; the third was the deportation bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will say the chairman of the committee was taken sick in the early hours of the night and left, requesting me to present two of these resolutions. The gentleman from New York has the rule on the Irish resolution. I have been trying to get recognition and will continue throughout the night to try to get recognition for these other two rules in the order named. The soldiers' land bill first——

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman talks about a program. I will say that I went to the Speaker and asked for recognition to suspend the rules when the time arrived at which that could be done, and the Speaker agreed to recognize me to move to suspend the rules and take up a measure and move its passage, and I determined to make the motion to suspend the rules and take up the Irish resolution that we have been here all evening trying to bring before the House, and to urge this House to suspend the rules. We have been kept from doing it by a foolish filibuster that has been going on over on the Republican side for the last two or three hours.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that.

Mr. MASON. Has the filibuster kept you for a year?

Mr. FLOOD. This measure could be passed now. If the Republican side wants this to pass it can pass to-night.

Mr. BAER. We want some time to discuss it.

Mr. FLOOD. You have 40 minutes to discuss it.

Mr. MASON. It does not need discussion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My own personal attitude toward this resolution is that I am favorable to it. The gentleman says he will move to suspend the rules. The Committee on Rules has nothing to do with that, but I do not wish after a program has been arranged by the Committee on Rules and after an agreement has been entered into as to which resolution shall be presented first, although the first two rules that are to be presented are rules to which I am opposed——

Mr. RIORDAN. Will the gentleman yield to me? I am in control of the rule for the Irish question, and I have kept my agreement to the letter. I do not think some of the other gentlemen who have been parties to the agreement have been on the square with the agreement. I have kept my agreement to the letter, as I keep every agreement I make. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not believe that the gentleman from New York ever violated an agreement in his life, knowing him as I do.

Mr. RIORDAN. No; he is trying to hold to this one, and I will hold to it up to the breaking point, but it is pretty close to that point now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. RIORDAN. Just precisely what I say, that this question has not been treated fairly. Every subterfuge has been used here to-night for the purpose of keeping this rule out of a position where it could be considered. This and the retirement rule have been kept out by a subterfuge. There is no question, as it is fairly apparent to everybody.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not a party.

Mr. FLOOD. Of course the gentleman from Tennessee is not a party to it. All we have to do is to have an opportunity to move to suspend the rules and take this Irish resolution up under suspension of the rules and pass it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. With that the Committee on Rules has absolutely nothing to do.

Mr. FLOOD. If you will vote that this committee rise it can be done inside of 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield me further time.

Mr. MANN. How much time did I yield the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield him three minutes more.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman from Tennessee to remind the membership here that the first rule to be taken up is the Lane reclamation bill, upon which there was three hours of general debate.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There is no doubt about that; everybody agrees to that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The House has often overturned the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Committee on Rules is peculiarly the servant of the House, and the House may certainly, if it desires, overturn and very properly disregard the program arranged by it and pass this Irish resolution. But I do not like to be deceived about the program. I told those gentlemen who have talked to me the order in which the rules were to be called up. I have told them the rules to which I was opposed.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman never told me about any program.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I told the gentleman about the Irish resolution. I told the gentleman fully about the order the Committee on Rules had arranged.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it was the program to take up the reclamation bill and the civil-service retirement bill, what chance has the Irish resolution for going through this session?

Mr. RIORDAN. It was done orderly through the committee.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. FLOOD. I want to say to the members of the committee that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] is going to once more move that the committee rise. Those who are in favor of the Irish resolution will vote to rise. Those who are opposed to it will vote that the committee stay in session. We are willing to put it to that test.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no doubt about my going on record, but I would like to ask, after this is over, what is coming up next?

Mr. SULLIVAN. We will take a chance on that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is all right, but I would like to be able to give somebody some information when I am asked as to what is coming up next.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the noble old warrior, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to blame either side of this House——

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. I do not yield. I have not started yet. I do not desire to yield until I start, at least.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. Indeed, I do.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in this Irish question since July 25, 1917. I introduced a resolution then. It was not all that I would like to have for Ireland, but it was asking for the same measure of justice for Ireland that Canada, Australia, and South Africa had then and now have. It was introduced as a war measure and not as a final settlement of the Irish question. I believe that Ireland would reap great and immediate advantages from it, and that these advantages would be reflected in greatly increased enthusiasm by Ireland's sons in the cause for which we went to war, for the right of weak peoples and small nations. I would like to ask if Ireland is not one of the small nations that has been persecuted for 700 years? [Applause.] The party in power is in a great hurry now. I have been in the same kind of a hurry that they are trying to manifest now for over a year. This resolution was reported out of committee sometime about four weeks ago.

I asked to-night for one minute of whatever time was allowed on the Irish resolution, and I could not get it. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs said it was all gone. Such an important question as that will, to my mind, make for the peace of the world, because there will be no peace if Ireland is not included in this agreement with other countries. [Applause.] Therefore, gentlemen, I trust that this resolution will have the unanimous vote of the American Congress, which speaks for all free people. And I trust also that Ireland will get what the other small countries have succeeded in getting by the sword. We have paid our debt to France; let us now pay our debt to Ireland [applause], for Ireland has done so much for America.

Mr. Speaker, at this turning of the tide in human affairs this House can make no decision more vital to the happiness of millions—even of millions yet unborn—than a favorable decision on the right of Ireland to inclusion among those nations now granted, through the power of the sword, the right of self-determination.

The right of Ireland to liberty does not rest upon the power of the sword. Through 800 years of defeat and slander, through wars and famines, through the long blight of illiteracy enforced by statutes, through the darkness of an exile which scattered its children as are the leaves of the forest and dispersed them as that other race was dispersed which fled from the task of making bricks without straw, the Irish have followed the ark of their liberties through the wilderness of denial and have clung fast to their faith that one day their Zion of freedom, too, would be restored to their keeping.

THE CLAIM OF IRELAND THE OLDEST.

The claim of Ireland to self-determination is not of yesterday. Its right reaches back beyond the dawn of history. It is written in the annals of every nation in northern and western Europe that from the seventh to the ninth centuries the schools of Ireland sent forth missionaries, teachers, lawyers, physicians, philosophers. Alfred the Great was educated in an Irish school, and the foremost names in European scholarship in those dark ages were Irish names.

The Anglo-Normans came to Ireland upon the invitation of an Irish prince, upon the pretense of establishing his right to the throne, and until the reign of Elizabeth all relations between Ireland and the English Government were justified by treaties between independent princes, or Irish kings, and English ambassadors or agents. The nationality of Ireland was recognized during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries by both the French and Spanish Governments. A treaty was made by the Spanish Government with the Irish Government, established in Kilkenny in 1641, and as late as the opening of the nineteenth century Napoleon treated with the agents of the Irish people as with an independent nation.

In fact, I can find no record of any nation acknowledging the overlordship of England in any question linking Irish affairs with foreign policy. During our own Revolution communications were exchanged between the representatives of the Irish people and the Continental Congress. Congress, through Benjamin Franklin, officially thanked the people of Ireland for their sympathy, and the foremost leaders of the Irish people on the floor of the Irish Parliament boldly declared that the heart of Ireland was with the Colonies in their fight for self-determination.

The existence of an Irish Parliament until 1801 is in itself an irrefutable constitutional and statutory acknowledgment by England of the distinct national entity of Ireland.

The Republic of Poland—now formed—has had no legislative assembly to keep distinct its national form since its partition from Russia, Prussia, and Austria. The Republic of Bohemia—now shaping itself as a result of the war—has been submerged, without a semblance of representative symbols, for more than two centuries. The Jugo-Slavs—arising like a Phœnix from the ashes of destruction, only emerging from the rule of the Turk within the lifetime of men still living—have yet to lift their nation from its cradle. The Jews—whose dream of returning to the ancient land as sovereign citizens, whose aspirations have been deemed mystical—have been given the promise of the great nations—even the pledged word of Great Britain—that they shall be restored to the promised land and be granted, too, the right of self-determination.

Shall Ireland, the oldest of the small nations, be denied this right? For Ireland is not only the oldest of the small nations, she is the largest geographically, and, excepting Belgium, the largest in population. Ireland pays more taxes than either Norway, Denmark, Switzerland, or Greece. Her influence on the course of civilization has been more powerful than that of any of the small nations except Greece, and her power to-day, socially, intellectually, industrially, and spiritually—even though deprived of her political sovereignty—is without parallel in the history of nations, large or small.

THE IRISH QUESTION AN AMERICAN ISSUE.

Great Britain has habitually, consistently, and often vigorously offered her suggestions to other nations regarding their internal administration. It would accord with the policy of all great States were America to offer friendly counsel in the endeavor to secure self-determination for Ireland. For the Irish question is now a world question, as it has been for generations an American question.

The maladies that have afflicted the world are about to be remedied in a great council of statesmen—physicians of the body politic. It is a truth of all curative statesmanship, as well as of all remedial science, that the affliction of pain in the remotest part affects the health of the whole structure. America can be neither healthy nor happy until Ireland is restored to full vigor of national health, because the blood of millions in America is Irish blood; myriad hearts that beat faithfully and strongly in every hour of our national peril were Irish hearts, and the very soul of countless deeds in our history were reflections or inspirations of an Irish soul.

It is needless to dwell on the commingling of the Irish race with the other elements of American citizenship; on the early Irish emigrants; on the Irish soldiers in our Revolution, in our Civil War; on the man-made Irish famine, which saw nearly the whole population of Ireland turned into toilers; and it was these toilers who built our railroads across the continent, peopled our waste places, and gave brains and brawn to that vast industrial system which made America wealthy, and which has prompted her to extend her freedom to the oppressed peoples of the world.

There is a deep meaning in this exhibition of Irish character in the creation of America's power and in the formation and administration of America's institutions. Can any just mind deny that a race which has done so much for its adopted country could do less for its cradle land?

The public opinion of America has agreed with that of many of the wisest Englishmen, such as Lord Byron, Rev. Sydney Smith, Charles James Fox, and Mr. Gladstone, that the union of Ireland and England is that of the "shark with his prey." This opinion has been officially recognized in state papers of American statesmen, in the platforms of our national parties, and on the floor of Congress, Charles Stewart Parnell in 1879, receiving an official tribute to the justice of the cause of his country.

It has been written by investigators who derive their conclusions from the census figures, that every fourth person in the United States can trace the source of his origin, either direct or remote, to Ireland. It is incontestably true that the majority of the Irish race are Americans, with no divided allegiance, but with an imperishable loyalty to that freedom for which their fathers have toiled, and hoped, and died. Here they have received the citizenship they have been denied there. The broken promises—the bitter misfortunes—which have closed the door of hope just as their feet have trod the threshold—have fixed the conviction of the Irish people, in whatever country they may dwell, that only the hand of America can unlock the gates of Irish liberty.

The sentiment of the American Republic is entitled to find expression, not only on the floor of this Congress, but wherever the laws of justice are broken and the rules of humanity are defied. The continued binding of the chains of servitude upon the spirit of Irish freedom would outrage the public opinion of the world, and would perpetuate that animosity which must ever exist where any race or any nation persists in trampling upon the rights of another.

No leader of public opinion, no member of any legislative body, no thinking American, can ignore the effect that the settlement of the Irish question would have, not only upon the relations between England and America, but upon the tranquillity and confidence which must exist within any nation which desires to preserve friendship with another.

OUR DEBT TO IRELAND.

We have paid our debt to France. Our soldiers and our fleets have steadied the wavering lines of England in the most perilous hour in her history. Indeed, it is declared by some that we have saved the British Empire.

Let us now pay our debt to Ireland. What is that debt? It is too vast to comprehend, for wherever the eye may look, wherever the thought may wander, wherever the foot may tread or the hand touch in America, wherever the imagination may take its flight—there will be present something to show that an Irishman lived or an Irishman died.

There are material and physical reasons why our debt to Ireland is so vast. But the reasons that should guide the course of America are those of an immortal similarity of sentiment, which has bound the spirit, the intellect, and the aspirations of the two countries in kindly friendship.

The debt that we owe to the political thinkers of Ireland would justify every sacrifice we could make for its payment. Did not Jefferson receive from Molyneaux, an Irishman, the ideas, the principles, the very words, of the Declaration of Independence?

Did not Burke, an Irishman, thunder against the taxing of the Colonies? What we call English literature blazes with the fire of Irish genius. Have not the people which inhabit all the nations speaking our language been called the Anglo-Celtic race, because of the immense admixture of Irish elements? Does not every legislative assembly owe a debt to the dauntless championship of just laws, to the eloquent enlightenment of Irish leadership, and to the ideas and progressive boldness which characterize the Irish vision? Does not every battle field of America speak with silent appeal for gratitude to Irish valor? Does not the contribution in this war, the instant and loyal eagerness of the Irish in America to die for the Republic, merit this token of appreciation?

But above all it is the duty of America to lift up fallen freedom wherever it may be prostrate in the world.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude with the same request I made in my talk before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I appeal for your favorable action on this resolution—appeal to your high sense of justice and real Americanism—that the call of Ireland may be answered—that she may enjoy the realization of a deathless ideal—Ireland a nation!

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], who reported the Irish resolution sometime ago, never said anything about it on the floor of the House. So far as I know, no one else over there had said anything about it until I took the floor and gave them the opportunity. [Applause.] They have had the power but lacked the nerve to even talk on the subject until to-night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MANN. And then I yielded them the time. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask the gentleman if he knows whether anything was said about this question at the White House dinner the other evening?

Mr. MANN. I was not there. I only know what I have been told, and I never repeat a private conversation under any circumstances.

Now, the program for the evening was, first, to take care of some conference reports and the wheat bill, and two or three private omnibus pension bills of the House with Senate amendments. I have been in this House a good while and never have seen and never propose to see, if I can prevent it, in the last 24 hours of a session an occasion when the opposite side, if they are in a majority, shall bring up what they please without any consultation with the minority side of the House. [Applause.] People wait, and wait, and wait all during a session of Congress, and then they think, perhaps, they can arrange a program and put it through as they please. They can not do it in the last 24 hours of a session unless the minority is taken into their confidence and made a part of the program.

Now, I was told through the newspapers that the Committee on Rules had agreed to report four rules, in the following order: First, on the reclamation bill, with three hours' general debate, and unlimited debate under the five-minute rule, and under a rule which would throw the House into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on anybody's demand for the regular order. If that rule had been adopted or should be adopted I do not think you could even make a motion to suspend the rules.

It is a rule that the House shall automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and it is a long-enough bill to take a long time on under the five-minute rule after you use up three hours in general debate, and I question very much whether there could be three hours' general debate on that with a quorum present between now and to-morrow at 12 o'clock. This is the legislative day of the 3d of March, and 12 o'clock to-morrow is 12 o'clock on the 4th, when the 3d ends legislatively.

I have seen so often, both when the Republicans and when the Democrats have been in the majority, a buffer bill introduced to become the regular order, with no expectation or intention to pass it, but solely for the purpose of keeping the House from considering anything else. I remember once——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman mention the other bills?

Mr. MANN. Well, another bill was the retirement bill, and another was the alien-deportation bill, and the fourth in order was the Irish bill. I am not sure, but that is my recollection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. With an hour and a half on the retirement bill, I think. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference how much time was allowed on any except the first, because the first would still be pending when the gavel comes down and the Speaker declares that the Congress is adjourned sine die.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman says that he had his information from the newspapers. I want to say to the gentleman that I am surprised at the accuracy of the information given the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Well, evidently the Committee on Rules——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. MANN. Evidently the Committee on Rules furnished the information directly to the newspapers, although I had not heard anyone in the House say anything to me which contradicted the idea that I gathered from the newspapers.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I want to ask the gentleman if the minority members of the committee could not have notified the leader of the minority concerning the program?

Mr. MANN. Well, they usually notify me of what takes place. I do not think that in this case they notified me of the order, because I already knew it from the newspapers before I had a chance to see the minority members of the Committee on Rules. The minority members of the Committee on Rules usually undertake to keep the minority leader acquainted with what takes place in the Committee on Rules. I knew enough from long experience here to know that if that rule was adopted you could write over the door—

Abandon hope, all ye who enter here—and I am frank to say that under such circumstances I have not endeavored to expedite the unusual business of the House until I knew what was going to come up.

What is the situation now? What we are really waiting for here is the general deficiency bill. It ought to be passed. I do not know whether it is going to pass the Senate or not. So far as I can learn, nobody else knows. If it does not pass the Senate pretty soon, it probably will not pass and become a law.

Now, gentlemen, I think we have a little time while we are waiting. There are two or three men in this House who are going out, whom I am very anxious to hear from. There are some as to whom I am not so particular whether I hear from them, although they all have my good wishes. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to our fine, splendid Member from Missouri [Mr. DECKER].

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the leader of the Republican Party both in title and in fact, for his kindness in yielding me some time. It is true that I am going out of Congress, and I am not like some of those who would have people believe that they are going out without regret.

Since my entrance into this great body it has been my desire to be of service. It is my desire to-night to be of service. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] took up an hour of the time of this body to-night in talking about castor beans and about the mistakes made in the great war for human liberty that has been triumphantly won. While he was consuming that hour in finding fault about matters not concerned with the measure before the House, which was the bill called up by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], I did ask for 10 minutes to speak against that bill.

But I have learned, what everybody knows, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not consuming an hour of the time of this House for the purpose of throwing light upon the bill which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] had called up, but for some other purpose which I did not then understand. Until the gavel falls to-day at noon I have the desire to be of service to my country, and in an humble way to be of service to my fellow citizens and to the people of this world, and I would be derelict in my duty if I consumed a moment's time at this hour of the night and prevented, as other gentlemen are trying to prevent, the consideration of the great question of human liberty involved in the Irish resolution. [Applause.] Whatever rule has been adopted or whatever the program is, the representatives of a free people still have the power here to-night to change the rule and to talk upon the Irish resolution here and now, and then if we have any time left we should consider the great question involved in the bill fathered by the great Secretary of the Interior, Secretary Lane.

You may not agree with it, you may not believe in its provisions, but you can not deny that the purpose of the bill is noble, for it is to do something for the brave boys who bade good-by to home and native land and crossed the rolling sea to fight for humanity, for human liberty, for the self-determination of little peoples in this world. These boys are coming back. They are coming back to find themselves without employment. We may not have time to pass the bill, but for my part what I have to say between now and the time when the gavel falls will be on the Irish resolution and the Lane bill for the American soldiers who fought for human liberty. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back four minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished soldier, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HEINTZ]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEINTZ. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words about America. [Applause.]

Upon my return from the battle line in France it was expected by many that I should make a long speech and by others it was hoped that I would make a sensational one. Not only have I no desire to do either, but the inarticulate language of the trenches does not particularly qualify one for speech making. What is more, the problems that I have in mind must be settled by the next Congress, and it would be but an extravagant waste of valuable time for me to lay them fully before this House. There are too many unfinished matters already pending before this session.

But having been in the Army 18 months and in France over 6 months, and in some of the most difficult fighting over there, I think it my duty to offer at least a few of the observations I have made. I wish to say at the start that all the officers with whom I have spoken have agreed to lay aside any personal disappointments and grievances as well as feelings that injustice has been done them, wherever such feelings existed, and, striving for the good of the Nation as a whole, to see that valuable permanent lessons are learned from our very expensive experience; and, indeed, the experience was most costly—more so than most of us think. Later on, when the full realization of the tremendous cost comes upon our citizens, there will be a great clamoring for explanations and investigations, but I fear it will then be too late.

The time to investigate is now, and those who do the investigating should not be members of the Regular Army nor members of this House. They should be civilian soldiers who have had wide experience in business and other affairs of life, who have been in touch with the war situation from its beginning, through the fighting in France and right up to the present time. And if I were called upon for suggestions, I would name three men who, were they able to give sufficient time to it, could investigate the whole war business, both in munitions, in preparation, and in the field, and give an unbiased report that would be of incalculable permanent value to the Nation. Those three men are Col. Frederick Galbraith, of Cincinnati, Lieut. Col. John Greenway, of Arizona, and Maj. David Goodrich, of New York.

Each of these men had a far wider experience with men and affairs than any officer in the Regular Army, with the possible exception of one, and certainly than the Secretary of War. They entered the Army with open minds, have learned more about modern warfare than the vast majority of Regular Army officers, have dealt with and commanded men all their lives, have earning capacities many times greater than that of any officer in the Regular Army or the Secretary of War, and know business and business methods thoroughly. All of them were exempt from the draft, and all of them, at great personal sacrifice, entered the Army at the outbreak of the war.

The various complaints that we hear from officers and soldiers that are voiced on the floor of this House and in the press are not only a waste of time but do a decided harm. There should be one investigation, and one only, and it should be without limit or sympathy. The investigators should be given all the time, money, and resources necessary to glean from the vast mass of chaos the indisputable facts which we must perpetuate as a duty not only to posterity but to those whom we buried in a foreign land and those who come back home broken and shattered.

But there are a few things so patent that no investigation is necessary to prove them, and the one most outstanding is the failure of the Regular Army. It has been repeatedly said that only about 30 per cent of the Regular Army officers were in the zone of the advance. Those who were not, have learned practically nothing of modern warfare. Of those who were in the zone of advance, a great many of them have learned nothing and never will. Their minds too long ago, by reason of years of freedom from competition, indolence, and inactivity, became closed to new ideas. When a civilian officer at the front failed to make good, he was sent to the rear and will go out of the service. What is to happen to the Regular Army officer who failed to make good and to those who never reached the zone of the advance?

Of course I know there are capable men among them, but they are the exception. They should be retained in the service. But is this vast percentage of officers, absolutely unschooled in modern warfare and entirely lacking in front-line experience, to be retained in the Army as the teaching nucleus for our future forces and as the leaders of our future divisions in the field? The very thought is outrageous! [Applause.] Many bright young civilian officers who have made good at the front and who desire to remain in the Regular Army will be denied because of lack of vacancies. The places that they would otherwise be called upon to fill are now occupied by the 70 per cent of Regular Army officers, most of whom have proved to be "duds."

A particularly progressive brigadier general of the Regular Army told me that when the war broke out there was not a single officer in the American Army, "not one," he said, "who was equal to his job." Now, is it not apparent that if another war should break out to-morrow there would be about 70 per cent of our Regular Army officers about whom the same criticism would apply right now? And the officers themselves are not so much responsible for this condition as many others. Probably nobody is so much to blame as the Members of Congress, unless it be the "peace at any price," "too proud to fight," "peace without victory" elements, that effectively prevented our officers from learning the methods of modern warfare before it was thrust upon them.

There is only one solution, and that is universal service [applause], not only military service but vocational training as well. Our first purpose should be not to develop a nation in arms, but to develop our citizenship. The physical condition of many of the enlisted men that came to us was simply appalling. Worse still, they did not know what their physical condition was. These men have been practically made over and will come back strong in body, healthy in mind, with their productivity and usefulness increased many per cent. One of the greatest compensations that we will have obtained from the war will be the improved citizenship of the returned soldiers.

But many of the returned soldiers have been square pegs in round holes in civilian life, and some will continue to be. It is because they never have had a fair chance. Most young men's life vocations are chosen purely by circumstances or by accident. They have no opportunity to know whether they are fitted for their life's work or whether they will like it, and many of them go through life dissatisfied, disgruntled men, for whom their daily vocations are irksome and compulsory drudgery. The plan of universal service which I shall advocate before the next Congress will be one in which every man, both rich and poor, will be subject to a course of universal service for possibly one year, during which time he will not only be made physically strong and confident and be given a proper amount of military training, but he will learn the work he is best suited for and the work he likes, and will go away with a love of that which he has chosen for his life's work and with the desire to learn more about it. [Applause.]

Officers of the Regular Army will be chosen from this class, just like other vocations are adopted, by reason of aptitude and competition and not by reason of congressional appointment. I am not sure whether the failure of Regular Army officers is due to the method by which they are originally chosen or by the fact that promotions come, and come surely, by reason of seniority instead of by competitive tests. Most of our present brigadier generals in the Regular Army never commanded more than 65 men before the war broke out and never were in a battle. In peace there was no particular need of their studying or working to keep abreast of the times, because they were not subject to competition. Their promotions were assured. Suddenly they had to learn a new business. A major general, for instance, was placed at the head of a business that practically represented over a hundred million dollars in cash, outside the unmeasurable personal value of human life. How could he, who probably never had commanded more than several hundred men at a time, be expected to succeed in this new business except after tremendous and needless loss and sacrifice?

I would like to go into details here, but I cannot. It is a subject that can be properly thrashed out only before the Military Committee of the next Congress, or preferably before an investigating board such as I have suggested. Nothing can be gained by now going into it piecemeal and by citing particular cases. It is not my purpose to blast reputations, however cheap and unworthy a great many of them may prove to be. All we can hope to do now is to arouse public interest in the situation to a sufficient degree that it will demand and be given a thorough investigation of the whole subject, with the idea of bringing about lasting results.

We accomplished a great work. There is no doubt of that, and it was accomplished almost solely by the great fighting spirit of our enlisted man, in spite of the tremendous handicap and unnecessary burdens that he bore. Now, are we going to let this slide and leave in responsible places this 70 per cent of officers who can not possibly render the service that will be required of them in any war that may follow?

In the first place, they will not have the confidence of the men, and that is one thing that was woefully lacking in this war. I think that Gen. Pershing did have their confidence and that he did splendid work. But the men were deprived of the leadership of one other who enjoyed their confidence and devotion to a remarkable degree, a general whom I have never met and, indeed, have never seen, but in whom I have the utmost confidence. It means at least 50 per cent of the battle—Napoleon says more—that the men have the feeling that they are being led by an able, courageous, red-blooded, fighting commander. After talking with many officers and men, I am convinced that those qualities existed in a superlative degree in one commanding general of our Regular Army, and yet we were denied his leadership. Just who was responsible for the men being cheated of their strongest weapon and the reasons for it should be one of the most important subjects for the investigation that I propose.

Naturally all the fighting men wanted Roosevelt in the field. [Applause.] On that whole front, both British, French, and American, there was not a single eye that would not have brightened nor a pulse that would not have quickened had they been told "T. R. is out here with us." [Applause.] The reasons for our having been deprived of him are, of course, patent. There can be nothing, to my mind, so selfish, so mean, and so unworthy, as politics being allowed to deprive fighting men of the comfort, support, and inspiration they so hungered for while out on the front fighting for their country.

Because Roosevelt was a magnetic leader and an inspiration to fighting men, because he could make the rank and file understand what they were fighting for and that he was fighting with them, was possibly no more to his credit than it is to the discredit of those who have not the same genius. But the fact remains that Roosevelt had it, just the same as Napoleon, Wellington, and Stonewall Jackson had it. It was the one great thing our men yearned for and Congress had granted it to them; yet it was coldly snatched from them and they were given "14 points" and making "the world safe for democracy" instead. Had they only been able to realize that they were fighting with Roosevelt for America, it would have added a new and priceless spirit to their enthusiasm and hitting ability and to their desire to go to the very gates of Berlin.

So I say that I do not endeavor to go into details as to the Army, although many details are available. And the time is all too short; but I beseech every mother, every father, and every relative and friend of our fighting men to help us see to it that if he is ever again sent out to fight for his country, he will not only know what he is fighting for but will have the strength of every weapon that can be furnished him, whether it be material or moral, and that he will not again be left to carry through on his own grit and gameness and upon his own fighting spirit alone. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 16 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to a gentleman whom we all love to hear, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will be as brief as I can in 10 minutes, because I know you have been kept already too long. I am indeed very thankful to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for this great privilege, and to you, gentlemen, for your courtesy.

I am just about to become a farmer again. You know, Mr. Chairman, I was raised on a farm, and all my life, whether as a newspaper printer's devil or a country editor or a struggling young lawyer or an officeholder, my dream has been that I might amass a competency and go back to the country and follow the plow, feed the pigs, pick up the fresh eggs, and live in the fresh air of the open country in which I was born. [Applause.]

You know my recent experience as a Member of Congress has more nearly endeared me to that country I love than ever before. Now I am positively homesick for Turkey Creek. Now I want to go back, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Congress, more than I ever did before. That wonderfully beautiful stream winds through my pasture its limpid waters to the Gulf, and along its banks are the wonderful woods of that native forest—the beech, the birch, the elm, the oak, the pine, and the dogwood. I want to go back there. I had dreams that some day I might become a Member of Congress and stand where Clay and Randolph stood, that I might serve my country by so doing. But, you know, I never had much ambition to be a rubber stamp. [Laughter and applause.]

Departing, my friends, in these brief moments from pleasant things, and these are pleasant to me, you know nothing in this world will ever give me so much pride as to have served in the Congress of the United States for 10 years. I have met many brainy men here, many lovable characters I have known here, and something tugs at my heartstrings with the thought that to-morrow I take my leave.

But I can not talk 10 minutes without saying some serious words, because there are serious times ahead for this great Republic.

Just now men are clamoring for the consideration of the Irish question, as though the Republic of the United States had not enough to do without the Irish question. Men are clamoring to have the country entangle itself with what? With the integrity of the British Empire. We have no more right to consider the Irish question than the Irish have to consider the American question, or the British have to consider the Philippine question, or Japan has to consider the question of Lower California.

Well, Mr. Chairman, as I have said often on this floor, so often that I am almost ashamed to say it again, this wonderful Republic, with this magnificent territory of America with its millions of hopeful, prosperous sons, God has placed us apart from the enemies that might assault us, with the ocean rolling between us and the wars of destruction in Europe, that we might live here, and our children after us for ages yet unborn, in happiness, peace, and liberty on this hemisphere. We are wonderfully anxious now to mix up with Europe, Asia, and Africa; we are wonderfully anxious to entangle ourselves in the hopes and destiny, with the broils, distractions, and feuds of the animosities of Europe.

You know, as God shall judge me when I stand before Him, and I believe He lives, the best hope of this great Government, the best hope of this great people, and the children yet to be born from the loins of men and the wombs of women, is to live on this hemisphere and attend to our own business, and not mix up in European politics. [Applause.]

When Washington wrote his farewell address he spoke of the feuds and broils of Europe. They are a million times more accentuated to-day than then. How soon will the Frenchman forget his despoiled villages and ruined cathedrals, overrun by the brutal foe? How soon will the Serbians forget the ravages of the Bulgarians? How soon will the rankling hatred in Europe cease? Yet we sit here to-day anxious that we may embroil ourselves in the affairs of Europe!

They say this is provincialism. In my judgment, when the history of this world shall be written in the years yet to come, it may be said truly, as it is said now, that the best example of free Government the world has ever known was between the signing of the Constitution of the United States and the good year 1912. A hundred years, two hundred, and history will write it down that this Republic, these United States, afforded the best opportunity to mankind for liberty, for hope, opened widest the door of opportunity, of any Government that ever existed in the world from the day the Constitution was made to the fateful days of the present.

The future is not given to mortal man to know. That we are departing rapidly from all of the spirit and traditions of this Republic is apparent to every man with an iota of sense. The very proposition here to-night, for the Congress of the United States to take up the Irish question, is no less meddlesome on the part of this Republic than for the Diet of Japan to take up the question of the war between the States, or for the British Empire to take up the question as to whether Japan should release Korea. I only wish, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Congress, that we might have a return to the spirit of democracy and republicanism. I only wish that the truly great men who have lived on this earth might send their spirits to guide us now. He is a great man who is content to abide the law, who is not so concerned with his own egotism and self-importance that he wants to change the law in order that he may make the change. Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Cleveland, Taft, were willing to live under the Constitution and bow in obedience to its mandates and its precepts. A wonderfully good thing it would be for this country, a wonderfully good thing it would be for the parties on both sides of the aisle if they might learn to respect the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set.

Gentlemen, these are my sentiments. They are as deep in my heart as the very blood that flows through it. I love this Republic. I love it because I am familiar with the history of other governments in this world. It is the best that ever existed. I believe yet the old ship of state will right herself, but these be big times in this world, these be times when men ought to be brave. I am almost tempted to say something now that will displease you. You will send your boys out to fight for the flag, you will send your boys to die in France for the flag of your country, and they will die for the flag of their country on the fields of France, but you Congressmen, will you die politically for your convictions? [Applause.] What sort of courage is it in this America, what is the article of men's courage who will send their sons to the trenches to have their bodies mangled with shells of the enemy, and yet who are not willing to vote their honest convictions as Members of Congress? That is what is the matter with the Congress of the United States to-day. It is not that you are not intelligent, for you are; it is not that you do not love your country, for you do. The great bane of this body to-day is the want of that courage to take your political lives in your hands and do your duty as God Almighty gives you the vision to see it. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in a speech delivered in the House on February 27, 1919, attacking the present court-martial system of the Army, I stated that the commander in chief of the Expeditionary Forces in France was ignoring and refusing to follow General Order No. 84, issued by his military superior, directing him to refer the records of general courts-martial originating in the Expeditionary Forces to the Acting Judge Advocate General in France, who shall review such records and return to the proper commanding officer such as are incomplete, and to report any defect or irregularity which renders the finding or sentence illegal or void, in whole or in part; to suspend the execution of all sentences involving both dismissal or dishonorable discharge pending such review; to disapprove, modify, or set aside in accordance with the recommendation of the Acting Judge Advocate General any sentence or part thereof found by him to be illegal, defective, or void in whole or in part.

I further stated that he had not complied with a recent order to the same effect. This has evoked a denial from the Secretary of War.

In the report of my speech my remarks concerning these two orders were confused. I admit it. General Order No. 84 was issued September 11, 1918, following Gen. Pershing's refusal in a number of cases to refer the records of courts-martial to the Acting Judge Advocate General in France for review upon the ground that he, as the military commander, had the power to carry the sentences into execution without and regardless of any review by the law officers of the Army. The general order in effect commanded him to carry the sentences of court-martial into execution only after the record of those cases had been received by the law officers and findings modified in accordance with the latter's recommendation. This general order was issued by the military superior of Gen. Pershing, and it was his duty to obey the same without question or delay. But in a number of cases he has refused either to refer the record of cases to the law officer or to follow the latter's recommendation, or to suspend the execution of sentences pending review. His position was shown in the recent case of Corpl. Ivy, which involved a death penalty, where the law officer recommended to him that the record be referred to the President, as Commander in Chief, under Article of War 51, which provided that cases imposing sentences of death must be confirmed by the President before the finding is executed. His attitude in refusing to forward the record of this case led to a recent specific order, cabled by the Secretary of War to him, directing that the record be sent to the President. This was the recent order to which I referred.

To show that the commander in chief and his subordinate military commander are not following in other cases General Order No. 84, I cite—

1. The case of Frederick Huff: The law officer advised the commander in chief to disapprove a finding and sentence because they were illegal, which advice he refused to follow. In this case the law officer held that the accused charged with and tried for the violation of one article of war can not be convicted of the violation of another and wholly different article of war.

2. The case of Pvt. E. J. Mullen: The law officer advised one of the subordinate military commanders that the finding and sentence were illegal because the facts did not show a violation of the article of war under which the man was tried.

In other words, the attitude of the military commanders in France is one of defiance to their military superiors and one of apparent disregard of military justice. They refuse to follow a general order which, in effect, is an order from the President, the Commander in Chief, and they are determined to sentence men regardless of whether the men were legally or justly tried and without appeal.

I have no desire to accuse Gen. Pershing of insubordination, and I do not do so. He is too good a soldier to disobey an order, and he has a right to stand up for his own views, whether right or wrong, and ask for an interpretation of any order.

You will be told, as everybody else will be told, that General Order No. 7 was a remedy for the great wrongs of court-martial injustice. General Order No. 7 is a makeshift. It simply stayed a few sentences until the Judge Advocate General could "advise" with the officer appointing the court-martial in an effort to induce him to preserve the legal rights of an accused. It is predicated upon the theory that the commanding officer is the sole judge of what is and what is not legal error in the trial of a case before a court-martial. This is the sole contention in Europe right now. Gen. Pershing and the other commanding generals over there contend that they are by law the final authority to determine whether a soldier gets his rights on trial or not, and they contend that it is not even within the power of the President to say that the Judge Advocate General of the Army shall decide such a question.

General Order No. 7 at the time it was adopted was known to be not a remedy but a makeshift and a palliative. This order was drafted by Gen. Crowder, and his own words will best show what he thought of it and why he adopted it. You will find what he thought of it and why he adopted it expressed in paragraph K of Gen. Ansell's letter to Congressman BURNETT, (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 19, 1919, p. 3810). He said it was necessary to adopt this order to head off a "threatened congressional investigation," which was about to come because of agitation and the concurrent happening of the hanging of those negroes in Texas, without review of any kind whatsoever. He said it was "to silence criticism" and also "to prevent talk about the establishment of courts of appeal," and, further, to make it "apparent that an accused did get some kind of revision of his proceedings other than the revision at field headquarters."

In God's name, could a man who could so describe his motive and purpose in getting out such an order believe in the order itself, or believe that anybody would get justice under it?

The question of veracity should never come up between real men, and I hope that in my capacity as a Member of Congress it will never again have to be met, even inferentially. Heretofore in the infrequent cases where anyone has accused me of direct untruth, the statement has brought forth direct action, and I have followed the motto of the marines, "Treat 'em rough."

Every latitude of expression is given on the floor of this House in cases where the veracity of Members has been questioned, but as I do not yet feel that there is any direct issue between the Secretary of War and Gen. Crowder and myself, I shall content myself with a statement of the facts as I believe them to exist. I have hoped that we could be done with wars, arrive at a common foundation of justice, and feel yet that we can achieve that goal. If we can not, the war has given us little vision and little knowledge, and I refuse to accept a challenge which I do not believe has been given, because the question of human rights is involved, and the personal fortunes of any of us should be little considered. This attitude is taken because I have watched the Secretary of War when he was fighting the battle of human rights. He was courageous and I hope will continue to be so.

In the closing days of this Congress, where there is much politics, in which by inclination and choice I shall take little part, I hope the Secretary of War will not be blinded and will not believe that the questions which we have been discussing are political or personal. That can be demonstrated by the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], and many others on the Democratic side of the House have joined with the gentlemen from New York [Messrs. GOULD and SIEGEL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and other Republicans in a fight for correction of the law.

If the Secretary of War should be blinded to the rights involved, I would say that the life of one of his intimate friends has been wasted and lived in vain. At heart the Secretary of War and I agree, and there is no reason that we should become involved in a controversy affecting the inherent rights of men.

It is not a question which concerns the league of nations, the matter of revenue, and will not be made a party question unless it is made so by the Secretary of War and his advisers. "May I," as heretofore somebody has said, express the hope that there will be no hand grenades thrown, no rifle grenades fired, no extra supply of ammunition used, no S. I. W.'s brought into the controversy either at home or abroad. The Secretary of War will, in my opinion, live up to his heritage, his traditions, and his environment and do the fair and just thing. I say that because I hope to assist him in the choice he is now making. His advisers wish him to demote Gen. Ansell to the rank of lieutenant colonel and degrade him. The Secretary in his heart wishes to put him at the head of his department, because he knows Ansell is right in his contention. I have been informed by newspaper men that demotion has been decided upon. Otherwise I should not now be discussing the question. What will occur if the Secretary of War will not be his own man, a man's man, and a "he" man will be the recall of some officer from France who will outrank Ansell. The plan will be proposed by those who advocated the demotion of Ansell. He is either right or wrong. If wrong, court-martial him. If right, give him his rights. I can only say that if he is demoted or outranked or court-martialed, he has our respect. If when his children go to school to-morrow they are slurred, because of the demotion of their father, they should know that it took greater courage to fight the moral fight than the physical; more nerve to fight for the rights of humanity than to fight against the bullets of the Hun. And will they always remember that there is no American soldier who wears on his breast the Victoria Cross, the Croix de Guerre, or the Distinguished Service Cross who would not willingly surrender it for merit and courage to their father. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY].

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this world's history is a chainlike succession of ages descriptive of man's tendencies, activities, and progress at various times.

We have since 1914 witnessed and we have since 1917 gone through a war whose importance and magnitude, to me, are not measured so much by the flagrant atrocities which have been committed in its name, not so much by the number of lives which have been mercilessly sacrificed, not so much by the number of men who have become infirm and crippled thereby, not so much by the injustices which have been perpetrated on womanhood and tender youth, not so much by the extensive and intensive advancement in the machinery of war and in the engines of destruction; no, though all these may be most lamentable, for wars prior to that of the world's war have been atrocious, calamitous, cruel, and wasteful, both of life and property, just as the last, but the vastness, the stupendousness, the immensity, I might say, of the world's war is to be measured by its result to generations, both present and to come, by the force with which it has shaken the world's pillars and undermined the world's foundations.

Useless it is for me to review or depict for you a mental picture or outline the panorama of the past war, because it has been related, painted, and brought out in the boldest of relief, time and time again and by tongues more eloquent and knowing than mine; but what I would draw your attention to is the present period or age, already and properly termed the "age of reconstruction." I will refrain from a discussion of the material, industrial, economic, or commercial reconstruction and will dwell solely on that of political reconstruction—a part of the plan of the drama that is being played at the peace conference table to-day.

By that I mean to identify the phrase "political reconstruction" with the phrase "making the world safe for democracy." I wish to impress upon you the import of the idea of "giving equal opportunities and liberty to all nations, great and small"; I wish to draw conclusions from the principles found in the word "self-determination."

During recent months these terms have been bandied about so much that they seem to have become trite and their meaning has been dimmed by a gossamer web of international sophistries and racial prejudices—or is it by that diplomacy which we have been condemning? But remember, gentlemen of this House, that our stand as a Nation, our position in this war, our pledge to our people and to those of all the world, our status at the conference table—all these rest on those principles enunciated by our Chief Executive, to which we all have given assent, which we all have approved, and of which we have demanded of our enemies, the central powers, recognition of the right of small nations to independent existence as a basis for a lasting peace. These are and have been our principles and with them we stand or fall as a Nation before the eyes of the world in their practical application. They must not become in their application, if not a "scrap of paper," a subterfuge for hypocrisy and high-flung rhetorical statements and embellishments. I say this fearlessly, because I have the firm belief that those principles are well founded in point of history, humanity, right, and justice, and I have the utmost confidence that he who had the stamina to stand forth before the self-destroying world to enunciate those principles as the only basis upon which peace could be considered by the friends of democracy, will also have the honesty of conviction, the firmness of will to see that they are properly applied at Versailles; but a duty half performed is ill performed, a principle which can not be universal in its application is vicious or those applying the same are unjust. Jutice and honesty must have both hands turned palms up and outward.

It has been for me food for thought to notice the little activity toward applying these principles of equality, liberty, self-determination, and free democracy in reference to certain peoples and, on the other hand, the enthusiasm and untiring activity toward other peoples. I am not speaking with the hate of centuries in my heart; I am speaking according to the existing facts and the present conditions of the world. I am not blind or prejudiced in this matter, for I am first and above all and entirely an American, with American thoughts and feelings, but I am willing to be guided and to see the light if I am groping in darkness. I have tried to explain the situation to myself and I have been attempting to solve in my own mind and to reason out the procedure of the ruling nations of to-day in reference to the application of those principles already mentioned. Could the answer be as follows? Is it because certain peoples are or were either with or against us during the past conflict? Is our silence and inactivity toward the application of the principle of self-determination and self-government regarding nations heretofore allied either with England or France or Italy so explained by the fact that they are our friends, that therefore we have no reason to fear them, and that, further, they can wait for another day? And is our enthusiasm and hurried perseverance in applying those principles to other peoples explained by the fact that said peoples were at one time part and parcel of the central powers, that due to the enunciation and propaganda of our principles of democracy as an antidote to those of kultur these nations arose and overthrew the imperialists who lorded it over them? And is it that we feel that it is our sense of justice, righteousness, fair play, and squareness to these people to make our word good with them which makes the allies direct their first efforts to secure for such peoples the freedom, the liberty, and the well-being that we had showed them from afar? If so, good and well. We are all anxious to see Poland rule itself and to see that nation again occupy the place it is entitled to in the sun of nations. Indeed, we long for the day when the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slovaks shall be reunited under their respective banners. Indeed, it would be a blessing to the world to see the races of the Balkans united and living peacefully under their respective rightful colors. Indeed, we owe these peoples a debt of gratitude for the loyalty they have manifested by adhering to the principles and laws of humanity and for having been such very effective forces—if not military, at least moral and political—in the overthrow of the régime of the alleged God State, advocating the dastard principles of imperialism.

But notwithstanding all this and approving both the procedure and the measures, why such slackness, such silence, such fearfulness in advocating the same principles toward peoples who have always been friendly to right government, and who also are entitled to liberty, self-government, and self-determination, and who are entitled by every right, justice, and law to be free and to strive to attain the realization of their natural and national idealism? I have in mind the land to which the consideration of the present resolution refers, the land to which we owe much, the land which has always considered America its second home, even from its island habitation. I refer to the land of "poets and saints"—Ireland. Ireland—is this word a national euphemism? There is no ire natural to that land and there is no reason why ire should come from it. There may be ire in the Irishman's breast, but ire never came from Ireland; it was placed there by foreign hands.

In 1917 we spoke and we enthused our people with the idea of repaying a national honor debt to a sister Republic in her hour of trial, a debt which we acknowledged and which we, thank God, have repaid a thousandfold when our marvelous and spirited boys at Chateau-Thierry, at the Marne, in the Argonne Forest anointed with their blood the land first to see the light of democracy in Europe. Washington and Lafayette in reverence and admiration bowed as the paling lines of horizon blue and khaki brown advanced steadily against the hordes of hell's kultur. If our desire of gratitude to France was so intense and so unreservedly repaid, what ought we not to do to encourage and to assist that land to recover its freedom, that land which sent us her most valiant sons at all times to help us found and establish our democratic institutions? If France deserved well of us for assisting us in 1776, what do we not owe to that land from whose bosom came those to whom France came with assistance? Read the annals of American history; its pages are filled with Irish names. Read the names of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and you will find names that would make you think that a new Ireland was to be founded on Columbia's shore. I say it is only right, just, and worthy of American honor to at least voice our sentiments in behalf of Erin's freedom and to pass this resolution, so that the people of the world may know that we stand unreservedly and impartially behind the principles of democracy to which we have recently reconsecrated ourselves in the last war.

Is it necessary for me to advance arguments to prove to you that Ireland is entitled to self-government? Is it necessary for me to show that there is nothing preventing or barring her appeal for liberty and that her perennial cry for freedom is only just, right, lawful, and honest? Historically, geographically, and politically Ireland is entitled to self-government. Historically Ireland has always been a nation, sui generis, has always held to its racial differences, its national life, customs, and usages, and Ireland has never consented to be bartered, to be subjected, has never been submissive under the rule of her sister island. By what right has one of these islands the power to lord it over the other one? History fails to show. There is no intrinsic reason why Ireland should not govern her sister island, as the latter has from time immemorial. If oppression, cruelty, and injustice confer rights and authority, yes; but if otherwise, never.

From the day that Hugh O'Neill, the Earl of Tyrone, in 1594, rebelled against unwarranted and unlawful oppression, through all succeeding ages Ireland has asserted her right to self-government and has repudiated the rule of England. Follow the long corridor of time and see that continually such has been the stand of Ireland. She has never given up her right to govern herself. And pray where does the right to rule arise? Must I repeat age-old laws to make clear that Ireland's fight is just? Is society simply a conglomeration of beings held together by force and might, or is it a well-ordained union of rational beings trying to make the most of life and attain their life's goal? And, therefore, if authority there must be in society, as the word "well-ordained" presupposes, where does this authority come from? We draw away from the idea of the divine right of kings, but where does this power to rule peoples come from? This power to rule, to administer the law, is of the essence of society, and if of the essence of society it comes from the Almighty. But does Providence confer this power to rule, does He vest authority in whomsoever subjects his neighbor by force, might, oppression, cruelty, dishonesty, and secret diplomacy? God forbid! In whom, then, does this power to rule vest? There is no other alternative—it is vested in him or them whom the people themselves have signified or determined by a free selection and by a choice of their own. Then, I ask, is Ireland's right to govern itself unrighteous and is her present subjection just? Not if there is a God in heaven, not if men live as they were ordained to live. Where in history do you find the Irish people have signified their assent to be ruled by England? Was it during the days of James I, in 1610, the days termed the Plantation of Ulster, the attempt to Anglicize and Protestantize Ireland? Was it during the Irish rebellion of 1641, a result of the acts of James I?

Was it during 1649 to 1652, when England warred upon Ireland, during which period there was attempted the "Cromwellian settlement," now called the "Curse of Cromwell"? Was it under William's reign in 1690, when the Irish again manifested their detestation of England's rule and when was fought the now famous battle of the Boyne? Was it in 1782, during our war for independence, when England, fearful of an Irish upheaval, again showed her guilty hand of unlawful tenure by granting Ireland a pseudo legislative independence which was afterwards handily recalled? Was it in 1869 when England enacted the disestablishment of the Irish Church, which in itself might be overlooked, but which act forced the Irish to maintain the Anglican Church against their wishes, against their right to adore their God according to their free volition? Finally, and particularly, was it in 1800, "when Napoleon coming to the head of affairs in France, there was apprehension on the part of English statesmen lest he should utilize Irish discontent to secure a foothold in the islands, and they resolved to get rid of the Irish Parliament," established in 1782, which resulted in the act of the union, under which England to-day claims the right to rule Ireland? But does not history record the fact that it was only by wholesale bribery that the members of the Irish Parliament were induced to pass a sort of self-denying ordinance whereby the parliament was abolished or rather merged with that of Great Britain? Is this act of the union the Irish people's will? Did they exercise their right of self-determination? I have recited history, permit me to explain, for no other purpose than to prove my contention. "England, of course, has her faults and Ireland has her good points, but reconciliation will never come between two races through writings of a George Bernard Shaw" and certain other writers "when such writings are steeped deep in the hatred of centuries." The application refers as well to English as to Irish writers and enthusiasts. If narrow-minded ideas are going to rule the thoughts of those higher up, what can they expect from those in the ordinary walks of life? I bear no one malice, but I believe in excoriating injustice and unwarranted oppression wheresoever it may be found. But the fact remains that Ireland has demonstrated to the world at all times her desire to govern itself, and at no time did she ever consent to barter her state rights to England.

Geographically Ireland, lashed by the wild waves on the north and kissed by the Gulf Stream on the south, presents no objection as to territorial boundaries, as to rival claims of neighboring peoples. Her boundaries are by God and nature fixed and not contrived by man's ingenuity. She stands alone in the ocean's blue, as she should stand alone in the world's nations.

Politically the times are ripe. The war has brought it about, and there is no use denying it. The principles we have been advancing of late have simply emphasized Ireland's life-long cry for freedom. Objections which heretofore might have been offered in reference to Ireland's political and religious complexion are a matter of the past. Some have attempted to say that the Irish question is not a religious or political one, but rather an economic question. At one time it was, I say, threefold—religious, political, and economic; that in time the religious phase has been wiped out, the economic one is fast dwindling, and now the political only remains to be settled. And in this regard I would ask you but one question and let it rest at that. If in 1776 the colonies were justified in declaring their independence and fighting for it, where does the iniquity arise for Irishmen to do the same, especially now that by their last election they have manifested their desire in that direction by electing representatives who stand openly for self-government?

I understand that mandatories are necessary to rule the southwest Africans, the Hottentots, the Fiji Islanders, until they have reached that rung in the ladder of civilization which will warrant the nations of the world to grant them self-control. But if the Slavs, the Poles, the Balkan peoples are capable to rule themselves, why can not the Irish? The question may appear puerile; but, believe me, it is to the point. And if certain Anglophiles will kindly peruse the world of letters, art, science, philosophy, commerce, and industries they will come across an Irish name just as often as they do that of any other nationality. Summing it all up, there is nothing plainer than this: If any subject European nation has the right to be free, Ireland has the right.

Therefore the Irish people have manifested, in conformity with the principles heretofore propounded, their desire to govern themselves, "which derives its power from the consent of the governed." Otherwise our own independence is simply words and no more, and our national tenets are simply pretensions. I might go on and ask by what sophistry do we deny the central powers and Russia the right to oppress and rule the Poles, the Czechs, the Finns, and admit the same right regarding England toward the Irish? If the reasoning is sound, then right is not might, as we would have had the world believe, but rather might is right, and the world should have been made safe not for democracy but for despotism and imperialism. But the conclusions drawn are untenable; therefore the premises must fall, and Ireland should be free. Heretofore certain arguments were advanced which the league of nations plan will now render futile.

Remember, my position is not that of asking mercy or craving your support toward an oppressed nation, for the fact that a nation is oppressed does not ipso facto right her cause. I speak to you from a standpoint of what is right, just, and lawful. It is the question of the Irish being governed by the English, not to the betterment of the Irish but to further England's purposes. It is that kind of government which we have never approved, which Washington objected to and against which he rebelled, and which Lincoln denounced, and against which America has just recently victoriously fought. Will the fruit of our work be nil? Did not Lincoln state "the world can not live in peace half slave and half free"? Will we, gentlemen of the House, who more closely than any other body of men have witnessed the great effort of America during the past two years, who more than any other American body can realize what it has cost the Nation to be able to stand on the mountain top and say and then to go into the valley of death and die "that democracy must be safe in this world"? Will we suffer the shame that must be our Nation's if we do not assert our firm conviction in the universal and impartial application of that principle? What will generations to come say, after reading the casualty lists and realizing the sacrifice to win this war which it had cost their ancestors, to know that what they fought for was squandered, was bartered? God forbid that such shame should be our country's! Let us stand firm upon the ground we have taken; let us stand firm in the face of cupidity, diplomacy, and false friendship; let us assert our firm convictions, as our boys did on blood-soaked French soil. We have gone over the top as the beacon light of civilization to all oppressed nations; let us not permit any kind of kultur, no matter what its name may be, to dim our light.

Like the boys in Flanders fields, like the boys on the ocean's crest, like the boys in Thierry, like the boys in the Argonne, let us say we know not what retreat or surrender means, either on the fields of battle or in the parliaments of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this Irish resolution may come to a vote before very long because I took the floor on the pending proposition; at least I smoked them out. But, after all, what is it? The House of Representatives can pass a resolution in reference to the freedom of Ireland and transmit it to the President of the United States as an official expression of opinion of the Representatives elect of the American people. But is that the proposition? Oh, not at all. There was a joint resolution introduced which would have required to be passed by the House and Senate and signed by the President. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, however, did not report a joint resolution, I suppose evidently intending to let the President out from signing it. But what did they do? They reported not the House resolution, which the House could pass and officially transmit to the President, but they reported a concurrent resolution which, when it passes this House, is so much waste paper until it has passed the Senate. It has as much chance of passing the Senate now as a snowflake has in hell. [Laughter.] If there is a sincere purpose on the part of the Members of this House or the gentlemen who propose to move to suspend the rules to take any action by the House for the purpose of having it brought to the attention of the President, there is no sense in passing a concurrent resolution such as has been reported without any intention that it should ever pass both bodies. The thing to do is either to pass the House resolution——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; I can not. I would like to do so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. Just for one question.

Mr. MANN. I would like to do so, but I have not the time. I am trying to force these fellows here to do something. [Cries of "Ah!"]

Mr. MANN. You may say "ah" all you please, but I have got you now where you can not refuse to move to suspend the rules and pass something. [Applause.] You have been delaying it as long as you could. You have had all sorts of schemes cooked up to prevent consideration of the question at all, and now what you have in mind is to pass something which never can get to the President. If you mean business, pass a resolution of the House and send it to the President as an expression of the wishes of the American people shown through their Representatives elect. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration House joint resolution 438 had come to no resolution thereon.

RELIEF OF CLAIMANTS, MISSISSIPPI COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Public Lands from the further consideration of the bill S. 5566, and ask for its immediate consideration by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to discharge the Committee on Public Lands from the further consideration of the bill S. 5566, and asks for the immediate consideration thereof. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5566) for the relief of the claimants of certain unsurveyed lands in Mississippi County, Ark.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas in the Government survey made in February, 1846, and approved December 23, 1846, an area in sections 19, 20, 29, and 30, in township 11 north, range 10 east, in Mississippi County, Ark., containing 602.45 acres, was erroneously meandered and designated as a lake on the official plat of the survey, which area is known locally as Round Lake; and

Whereas the United States is now asserting title to said area as public land; and

Whereas many years ago the riparian proprietors, R. E. Lee Wilson and J. W. Rhodes, in good faith, believing themselves to be the owners of said area, drained and reclaimed the same by the construction of ditches and canals and cleared every acre of said land, and the same is now in a high state of cultivation; and

Whereas the said claimants are in the actual possession of said area, and tilling and cultivating the same, and are entitled to some equity by reason of such labor, expenses, and improvements, and the great value which they have added to the land: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said claimants shall have a preference right at any time within one year from the filing of the official plat of corrected survey in the United States land office at Little Rock, Ark., to purchase from the United States the lands within the meander lines of Round Lake, in sections 19, 20, 29, and 30, in township 11 north, range 10 east, Mississippi County, Ark., at the rate of $12.35 per acre: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to grant to any person a title to any part of said land which is shown to be within the limits of land previously surveyed and disposed of by the Government: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARAWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent a House bill of similar tenor was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit to the House the report for which I have previously had permission and which I have from time to time deferred and now desire recognition to present.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have been recognized.

Mr. WALSH. I have received assurance from the Speaker that when these unanimous-consent matters were taken out of the way I would receive recognition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] says is true.

Mr. WALSH. If that is true, I ask for recognition.

Mr. FLOOD. I had already received recognition.

The SPEAKER. I know, but the Chair has put the gentleman from Massachusetts off a dozen times to-day to let people in with these other bills.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

The SPEAKER. And the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts as soon as he gets through with the report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a filibuster.

Mr. WALSH. It is not a filibuster. I have been waiting all the afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The other day the Chair appointed Mr. McCLINTIC to the Committee on Printing. It ought to have been to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to serve notice that I shall ask for order during my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, while not disagreeing in toto with the findings of the special committee, because of the omission of important matters and because of certain conclusions drawn, I beg leave to submit the following as individual views:

The undersigned, a member of the special committee appointed under the provisions of House resolution No. 469, hereby submits the following views and conclusions upon the matters referred to said committee. House resolution No. 469 reads as follows:

House resolution 469.

Resolved, That a committee of seven Members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to the articles of incorporation, the officers, agents, and employees, membership, financial support and names of contributors, expenditures, general character, activities, and purposes of the National Security League, a corporation of New York, and of any associated organization, that purport to be organized or engaged in or have been directly or indirectly engaged in the nomination, election, or defeat of Representatives in Congress during the year of 1918.

Said committee shall also inquire and ascertain whether charges affecting the loyalty of Representatives in Congress have been made by said organizations; and if so, by whom, and upon what information, testimony, or record; and it shall ascertain whether said organizations have complied with the provisions of law in the filing of expense accounts; and for such purposes it shall have power to send for persons and papers and enforce their appearance before said committee and to administer oaths; and the said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have the right to sit at such times and places, in or out of the city of Washington, as the committee may deem advisable, and shall have the right to report at any time.

Pursuant to the authority conferred, the committee has held numerous hearings in Washington, New York City, and Chicago, Ill., and has taken the evidence and testimony of very many witnesses, including the officers of the National Security League of New York, and of the officials of its branch organizations in New York, Illinois, and Wisconsin, as well as Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

The National Security League (Inc.) on January 7, 1915, received a certificate of incorporation from the State of New York, which certificate or charter is as follows:

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION OF NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE (INC.).

We, the undersigned, all being of full age and citizens of the United States, and at least one of us being a resident of the State of New York, and being desirous of associating ourselves together for the purpose of forming a membership corporation as hereinafter more particularly described, pursuant to and in conformity with an act of the Legislature of the State of New York, entitled "An act relating to membership corporations," being chapter 40 of the Laws of 1909 of the State of New York, constituting chapter 25 of the Consolidated Laws of the State of New York and the several acts of the State legislature amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, do hereby make, sign, and acknowledge this certificate for that purpose, as follows:

1. The proposed corporation is not organized nor to be conducted for profit.

2. The name of the proposed corporation is National Security League (Inc.).

3. The territory in which its operations are to be principally conducted is the United States of America, its Territories and dependencies.

4. The particular objects for which the corporation is to be formed are to secure, through effective investigation, authoritative and complete information in regard to the condition, organization, and methods of administration of our national defenses, naval and military; to ascertain what defects exist therein, and what changes, improvements, and additions thereto are desirable, together with the probable cost thereof; to bring to the attention of the Government and of the people the facts so ascertained, with such recommendations as may seem proper; to bring about such organization of citizens throughout the Nation as may make practicable an intelligent expression of public opinion upon the matters presented; and generally to do all things that lawfully and properly may be done to provide for the United States adequate and efficient defenses by land and sea, and thereby a reasonable assurance against war. Also to aid in research of problems affecting the development, welfare, and economic growth of the United States, and in disseminating the results of investigations, whether made by public bodies or private citizens.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] makes the point of order there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander	Doughton	Kahn	Sanford
Anthony	Drane	Kehoe	Sears
Ashbrook	Drukker	Kennedy, Iowa	Sells
Barnhart	Dupré	Kettner	Shackleford
Blackmon	Eagle	Key, Ohio	Shallenberger
Booher	Elston	Kiess, Pa.	Sherley
Britt	Emerson	Kinkaid	Sherwood
Browning	Essen	Kraus	Shouse
Brumbaugh	Estopinal	Langley	Slayden
Buchanan	Evans	Lazaro	Slemp
Burroughs	Fairchild, G. W.	Lee, Ga	Sloan
Caldwell	Ferris	Lever	Small
Candler, Miss.	Flynn	Little	Smith, Mich.
Cannon	Fordney	Longworth	Stafford
Cantrill	Foss	Lunn	Steele
Carlin	Frear	McCormick	Steenerson
Carter, Mass.	Freeman	McKenzie	Stephens, Nebr.
Cary	Fuller, Ill.	McKinley	Stevenson
Chandler, N. Y.	Fuller, Mass.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sumners
Church	Gard	Magee	Swift
Clark, Fla.	Garland	Mondell	Taylor, Ark.
Clark, Pa.	Garner	Moon	Temple
Classon	Gillett	Nelson, J. M.	Templeton
Claypool	Godwin, N. C.	Nicholls, S. C.	Thomas
Cleary	Goodall	Osborne	Tilson
Coady	Gordon	Overmyer	Towner
Connelly, Kans.	Graham, Pa.	Paige	Van Dyke
Cooper, Ohio.	Gray, N. J.	Park	Vare
Cooper, Wis.	Gregg	Peters	Venable
Copley	Griest	Platt	Voigt
Costello	Hamilton, Mich.	Porter	Walker
Cox	Hamilton, N. Y.	Pou	Ward
Crago	Hamlin	Powers	Wason
Curry, Cal.	Hardy	Pratt	Webb
Davis	Hayes	Price	White, Ohio
Dempsey	Heintz	Purnell	Williams
Denison	Hensley	Reavis	Wilson, Ill.
Dent	Hood	Roberts	Wilson, Tex.
Denton	Houston	Robinson	Winslow
Dewalt	Howard	Rowland	Wise
Dickinson	Huddleston	Rucker	Woodyard
Dill	Hull, Iowa	Russell
Doolittle	Jones	Sanders, Ind.

The SPEAKER. On this vote 258 Members have responded to their names—a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I was reading the charter of the organization when interrupted by the point of order, and now I will proceed from there:

5. The principal office of the corporation is to be located in the Borough of Manhattan, city, county, and State of New York.

6. The number of its directors shall be nine.

7. The names and places of residence of the persons to be its directors until the first annual meeting of the members of the corporation are as follows:

S. Stanwool Menken, No. 54 West Fifty-second Street, New York City.
Herbert Barry, Llewellyn Park, West Orange, N. J.
Edward H. Clark, Hotel Netherland, New York City.
Franklin Q. Brown, No. 34 East Thirty-eighth Street, New York City.
J. Bernard Walker, No. 22 Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Lawrence F. Abbott, Cornwall, N. Y.
Charles E. Lydecker, No. 11 East Eighty-first Street, New York City.
Frederick H. Allen, Pelham Manor, N. Y.
William T. Hornaday, No. 2186 Loring Place, Bronx, New York City.

They issued a call for a meeting, to be held December 1, 1914, at the Hotel Belmont, New York City, copy of which call is as follows:

52 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK.

You are invited to attend a meeting, to be held on Tuesday, December 1, 1914, at the Hotel Belmont, at 5 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of forming a committee to advocate an inquiry, under congressional authority, as to the condition of our Army and Navy and national defenses, to the end that the people of the United States may know the exact facts relative thereto and form with knowledge an opinion as to what should be the proper national policy.

S. STANWOOD MENKEN.
HERBERT BARRY.
GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM.
LAWRENCE F. ABBOTT.
J. MAYHEW WAINWRIGHT.
CHARLES E. LYDECKER.
FRANKLIN Q. BROWN.

Reply may be sent to Mr. Menken at above address.

This meeting, it will be noticed, was to discuss a resolution which had been introduced by Representative Gardner, calling for an investigation of our national defenses.

The meeting was held, and attended by some 150 men of prominence in various business activities in the city of New York, and a voluntary association was formed, which later was incorporated as the National Security League.

Mr. Menken was the first president of the league and the late Joseph H. Choate was the first honorary president.

Later Robert Bacon, former Cabinet Member, was president, to be succeeded by Mr. Menken, until June 26, 1918, when Charles E. Lydecker was elected president, which office he now holds.

Hon. Elihu Root succeeded Mr. Choate as honorary president on the decease of the latter.

At the time of its incorporation or some period thereafter the organization adopted the following by-laws:

BY-LAWS OF THE NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE (INC.).

I. NAME.

This corporation shall be called the National Security League (Inc.).

II. OBJECT.

The league is established to promote patriotic education and national sentiment and service among the people of the United States, and to promote recognition of the fact that the obligation of universal military service requires universal military training, as more at large set forth in its certificate of incorporation.

III. MEMBERSHIP AND DUES.

(a) All those who were enrolled as members of the league prior to its incorporation on January 7, 1915, and have continued in good standing up to the date of adoption of this by-law; and those who shall have been enrolled and remain in good standing in the league or any of its branches heretofore organized are members of this corporation. On and after April 2, 1916, any citizen of the United States may become a member of the league upon election by the executive committee of the league or by any branch and the payment of the dues prescribed for the class of members in which he or she enrolls.

(b) Regular members shall pay annual dues of $1; regular contributing members shall pay annual dues of $5; life members shall pay a fee of $25; and founder members shall pay a fee of $100, and both shall forever be exempt from annual dues; associate and service members shall pay annual dues in such amount, not less than 10 cents in any branch, as the executive committee of such branch may prescribe.

(c) Branches shall be created and organized by and with the authority of the executive committee. The form of organization, the by-laws, and all proceedings shall be subject to approval of the executive committee. The executive committee shall arrange for the organization of divisions, which shall include the branches in a State or States or other convenient geographical division for the purpose of representation and such other use as such divisions may find to be in the interest of the league, under such names as the branches may give to their divisions. Pending action by the executive committee the branches in each State shall constitute a division.

IV. GOVERNMENT AND ORGANIZATION.

(a) Directors: The directors shall be chosen at the annual meeting of the league by the votes of the delegates at such meeting as herein provided.

The directors shall meet on call of the president, or three or more members of the board may require a meeting to be called by the secretary.

The directors, in addition to their functions as members of the executive committee and elsewhere provided for in these by-laws, shall have the power, by resolution adopted by a majority vote of all their number, to require any decision or action of the executive committee to be submitted to a meeting of the league for approval or disapproval, and in such event no further proceedings shall be had, pursuant to such decision or action of the executive committee, until approved by resolution passed at a meeting of members so to be held.

(b) Officers: The national officers of the league shall be a president, not more than seven vice presidents, a secretary, and a treasurer, all of whom must be members of the league but need not be directors thereof.

At the annual meeting the league may elect an honorary president and one or more honorary vice presidents.

The national officers shall be elected at the annual meeting of the league by the votes of the delegates at such meeting as provided for the election of directors. Officers shall hold office for one year and until their successors are elected and qualify. An executive secretary shall be appointed by and may be removed at any time by the executive committee.

The president may from time to time, with the consent of the executive committee, appoint one or more assistants to the secretary and treasurer, who may respectively perform any part of the duties of the office in the place of said secretary and treasurer. The respective officers shall have such powers and shall perform such duties as are prescribed by law for their respective offices, and in addition they shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be prescribed by the executive committee.

(c) Executive committee: The executive committee of the league shall consist of the president, vice president, secretary and treasurer ex officio, the directors of the league, the members of the executive committee elected by the divisions, and 15 members at large, to be chosen from the league at the annual meeting by the votes of the delegates of the branches as provided by Article V, and one member of each division of the league to be chosen by the branches thereof as provided in Article VI.

A quorum of the executive committee shall consist of seven members thereof.

Pending the appointment of the members at large and the members accredited to the several divisions, the executive committee shall consist of directors and officers above specified.

The executive committee shall generally have power to determine and direct the action to be taken by the league and to do all acts incident to such general powers, subject to any restrictions imposed by law or by the by-laws. A majority of the committee voting for that purpose in person or by proxy shall have power of removal of any officer of the league or of any branch and like power to terminate any membership.

The activities of the league shall be conducted under the immediate direction and responsibility of the executive committee, who shall lay down the lines of organization and appoint the necessary personnel and executives with power to transact the business of the league in compliance with the regulations and general instructions given from time to time by the executive committee: Provided, however, That no contracts shall be executed committing the league to expenditure beyond the amount held at the time in the treasury, and provided that all payments, except disbursements out of petty cash, shall be made by check, and that signature and countersignature of two duly appointed officers of the league shall be required on each check. It is further provided that a special committee of the executive committee shall make quarterly audits of the receipts and disbursements of the league and that no officer having the right to sign checks shall act upon said committee.

(d) Other standing committees: There shall be the following standing committees in addition to the executive committee, to wit: A finance committee, a committee on the navy, a committee on the army, a committee on the militia, a committee on transportation, a committee on supplies, a committee on legislation, a committee on extension and branches, a publicity committee, a committee on membership, a committee on receipts and expenditures, and a committee on management, and the executive committee may from time to time create such other standing committees as it may deem advisable and may also terminate the same. Each of the standing commmittees other than the executive committee shall be appointed by the president, with the advice and consent of the executive committee, and shall consist of as many members as may be so appointed. Each standing committee shall adopt its own rules for the conduct of business not inconsistent with the charter and by-laws of the league. The functions of the respective committees shall be those heretofore authorized and exercised, subject to such modification and direction as the executive committee shall have power at any time to discharge any committee and to appoint other members thereto.

V. MEETINGS.

There shall be an annual meeting of the league on the Wednesday following the 1st day of May in each year and such special meetings as may be called by the directors of the league or the executive committee. Such meetings shall be held on notice of not less than 15 days, sent in writing to each division and branch of the league. The meetings of the National Security League (Inc.) shall be meetings of officers and delegates, and such delegates and their representations shall be as follows: Each division as herein provided shall be entitled to two delegates for each branch in said division and shall be entitled to vote as many votes as there are regular and life members in all the branches in said division, and in case of divided vote the delegates of each branch may vote the votes of their branch, if the delegates of a branch divide each voting half their total vote.

The officers who shall each ex officio be delegates to all meetings of the league shall be the national officers of the league, chairman of the executive committee, and the chairman of the advisory council.

At all meetings of the league all delegates may vote in person or by proxy.

VI. BRANCHES.

(a) Organization: The local constituted bodies of the league shall be known as branches and may, under the direction of the executive committee, be organized in any State, Territory, or dependency of the United States or among American citizens living abroad. Each branch shall represent its particular locality and shall bear the name of such locality: Provided, however, That the executive committee may define or limit in its own discretion the membership and extent of any branch or in any other manner it sees fit.

When chartered by the executive committee the branch shall at once organize, adopt by-laws, elect an executive committee of not less than seven, and elect officers as prescribed.

In any State where the members of the league have already effected an organization upon a plan of branches differing from that hereby provided they may continue such form of organization, if desired, and shall be entitled to representation at the annual and other meetings of the league in proportion to the number of their members through such delegates as they shall appoint pursuant to their respective methods of organization, provided in other respects they conform to the aims, objects, and general provisions of this organization and its by-laws.

When more than one branch has been organized in any State or other convenient geographical division as designated by the executive committee it shall be the duty of the chairmen of the several branches therein to meet together at the call of the president of the league and annually in the month of April thereafter to choose a State or division committee of not less than seven persons to represent all the branches of such State or division, which committee shall be known as the division committee, taking the name of the appropriate State, Territory, or geographical unit it represents. In voting for such division committee the chairman of each branch therein shall be entitled to vote as many votes as there are regular and life members in his branch.

The division committee shall likewise choose officers for the division in the prescribed manner who shall supervise and control the work of the league among the several branches of such division. It shall be the duty of each division committee to create new branches in its division wherever possible and encourage and carry forward the purposes of the league. Such committee shall at all times be subject to the control of the executive committee of the whole league.

Each division committee is entitled to name one member of the executive committee of the whole league to represent the branches of such division in the executive committee, and it shall be the duty of the division committee when organized and annually in the month of April thereafter to choose such members forthwith.

The provisions of Article III, section c, shall be deemed modified in conformity with this provision as to the organization in such States.

(b) Branch officers: The authorized officers of the branches of the league shall be the same as herein prescribed for the national officers, except that the chief officers of branches shall be called chairman and vice chairman instead of president and vice president. They shall be chosen by the executive committee of their respective branches in the prescribed manner. The duties and powers of branch officers shall correspond within their respective jurisdiction with those prescribed for national officers within the whole league.

(c) Apportionment of annual dues: The proper officer of each branch shall pay each month one-fourth its annual, contributing, and life-membership fees when collected to the treasurer of the league for the general purposes of the league, with power to the executive committee to remit dues under their discretion for any period.

VII. ADVISORY COUNCIL.

An advisory council of the league, not to exceed 100 members of the league, may be chosen by the executive committee immediately after the annual meeting of the league. The council shall elect its own officers. Twenty members shall constitute a quorum. The duty of the council shall be to aid the executive committee on matters of policy and to encourage and carry forward the purposes of the league. The executive committee shall have power to make such changes in the advisory council from time to time as they think proper.

VIII. AMENDMENTS.

These by-laws may be amended by the executive committee of the league by a vote of a majority of a total membership thereof voting in person or by proxy or at any annual or special meeting of the league by a vote of two-thirds of those present, provided that in either case seven days' notice in writing of the proposed amendment shall have been given to the members of the executive committee and to all branches of the league. On consideration of any proposed amendment amendments germane thereto may be offered and voted upon at the meeting.

Many committees were selected to conduct its activities, the membership of which embraced men and women of prominence from all parts of the country, but the majority of which were from in or about New York City.

The executive committee was made up of over 40 members, yet many policies were adopted and plans of action approved at meetings of the committee at which only from 5 to 12 members were present.

After its organization and incorporation the National Security League held various meetings in New York, Chicago, Washington, and elsewhere, passed resolutions on many subjects, and engaged in a publicity campaign for the purpose of stimulating public thought on matter of preparedness for war. Literature in the form of circular letters, speeches, pamphlets, and bulletins were distributed throughout the country, and material in the form of news items was furnished to some 1,200 newspapers throughout the land. A list of literature printed and distributed was furnished the committee, and is as follows:

LIST OF PAMPHLETS ISSUED DURING THE LAST TWO YEARS, 1917–18.

America and the Great War. Arthur E. Bestor.
America at War. Albert Bushnell Hart.
America's Present Needs (address). Elihu Root.
Americanization Service.
Americanism and the Americanization Problem. A. S. Somers.
Autocracy v. Democracy, Speakers' Bureau Leaflet.
Before the War, During the War, After the War.
Christianity in International Relations. Herbert Barry.
Concept of National Service. S. Stanwood Menken.
Congress of National Service, Delegates.
Conscientious Objector, The. Dr. George Herbert Mead.
Converted and Secret Americans. Alfred M. Brooks.
Correspondence Course in Patriotism.
Crack in Germany's Armor, The. W. H. Hobbs.

Concurrent resolution submitted to the Senate of the United States. ROBERT L. OWEN.
Defense Not Offense, The Guard at the Door. Form 10B.
Defense Not Offense, The Guard at the Door. Form 10F–G.
Defense of the Republic, The. George Haven Putnam.
Declaration of Principles of the National Security League.
Declaration of Principles adopted by the Congress of National Service.
Declaration of Independence and the World War, Relation Between. T. J. O'Donnell.
Democracy and Compulsory Service. G. G. Coulton.
Democracy and World Politics. Shailer Mathews.
Democracy's Educational Problem. C. H. Van Tyne.
English-French Handbook.
Espionage, Some Suggestions of the Perils of. John B. Stanchfield.
Educational Work, Annual Report upon the.
Food Administration, The. Frederic C. Woodward.
Future of the Republic, The (card). Thomas R. Marshall (2d).
Fight the Next War Now! Dr. Theodore G. Soares.
Fighting the Dragon. Samuel Harden Church.
Fifteen Little War Stories. Herbert Myrick.
Fourth of July Oration. Hon. George W. Wickersham.
German Tragedy. Dr. Henry W. Farnam.
Getting Your Audience. Rev. Dr. Sartell Prentice.
Gibbons for Training, Cardinal.
Great Emergency, The. J. Bernard Walker.
Gompers v. Arthur Henderson, Samuel. E. S. Van Zile.
Gompers, Address by Samuel.
Germany Self-convicted (from "Out of Their Own Mouths").
Germany's Guilt Established. Prince Karl Lichnowsky.
How the War Was Made in Germany. Albert G. Meier.
How to Pronounce War Names.
How the German Empire Has Menaced Democracy. Talcott Williams.
How to Work for Physical Reserve.
Hurry Up, America! Pomeroy Burton.
Handbook of the War.
Handbook, Suggestions for Use of. Hart & Lovejoy.
Ideals of Our War, The. R. M. McElroy.
Jewish Pamphlets (Why We Are at War).
Knowledge by the People True Basis of National Security. S. Stanwood Menken.
Lawrence Plan for Education in Citizenship; a Statement of Aims and Principles.
League and the Teacher, The. Col. C. E. Lydecker.
Menken, Remarks of S. Stanwood.
Menken, Address of S. Stanwood.
Mitchel, Address of John Purroy.
Make America Safe. Mrs. Linden W. Bates.
Money, Munitions, and Ships (address). Frederic R. Coudert.
Naval Policy. Bradley A. Fiske.
Naval Preparedness, What is Adequate. J. Bernard Walker, 2d.
Naval Inferiority, Our (address). Charles G. Curtis.
Navy and the War, The. Franklin D. Roosevelt.
National Solidarity and International Unity. Oscar S. Straus.
National Military Training, the Basis for. Henry L. Stimson.
National Security League, Report of the Army Committee.
National Security League, Annual Report of President of Committee, May 3. 1916.
Annual Report of the President, May 8, 1918.
National Security League (card). O. T. Keep.
National Security League, National Headquarters of (card).
National Security League (address). Elihu Root.
National Security League, Report of Director of Branches, Annual Meeting, May 3, 1916.
National Security League Roster.
National Security League, Report of the Militia Committee.
National Security League, Which of the Following Things, etc. (card).
National Security League, What It Is and Why, etc.
National Security League Bulletin (February, April, June, September, and November, 1918).
National Security League, To the Members of the. Col. C. E. Lydecker.
National Security League, By-laws of the, May 15, 1916.
National Security League, Constitution and By-Laws for Branches of, March 30, 1916.
National Security League, How to Form a Branch and What to Do.
National Security as It Involves the Preparation and Use of the Citizenry. H. K. Love (2).
National Security Congress, Washington, January 20–22, 1916, Proceedings of (2 vols.).
Our Job. E. K. Hubbard.
Outlook for Democracy. Dr. William H. Hobbs.
Pacifism, The Failure of. Francis J. Oppenheimer.
Policy and Armaments. Frederick Scott Oliver.
Preparedness, The Necessity of. Rev. William Carter.
Preparedness, The Spirit of (posters). Edwin H. Blashfield.
Program, Congress of Constructive Patriotism, January 25, 26, 27, 1917.
Proposed Bill for Physical and Military Training to be Submitted to State Legislature.
Preliminary Plan for a High School Patriotic Legion. Breasted.
Perils of Autocracy, The. Talcott Williams.
Pan-Germany Attained To-day (map). The Outlook.
Pan-Germanism. E. E. Sperry.
Principles of the Declaration of Independence. W. M. Wiley.
Physical Exercise, A Manual of.
Posters: The Meaning of America—Awake and Safeguard America—Belgian Children.
Price of Victory. Dr. Henry W. Farnam.
President's War Message. Woodrow Wilson.
Rouse Ye, Freemen! (card). J. A. Browning.
Root, Address by Elihu, September 14, 1917.
Representative Idea, The. R. M. McElroy.
Reamaekers, A Mainspring of Armed Force. S. S. Menken.
Relation Between Declaration of Independence and the World War. T. J. O'Donnell.
Straus, Address of Oscar, February 20, 1916.
Stimson, Remarks of Henry L., January 20–22, 1916.
Some Neglected Aspects of Public Speaking. Prof. Solomon H. Clark.
Songs for Patriotic Meetings.
Song of the Marchers, The, June 14, 1917.
Speakers' Training Camp, Reasons for and Objects of.
Suggestions for the Organization of a State for Patriotic Education. M. F. Libby.
Stop Malicious Rumors—Help Win the War. National Committee of Patriotic Societies.
Suggestions for Pro-American Propaganda. E. V. Leighton.
Suggestions for Speakers on the United States and the World War. Richard T. Ely.
School Liberty Loan Campaigns, 1918.
Spanish Pamphlet. E. V. Leighton.
Second-Line Trench. E. V. Leighton.
Teaching of Patriotism in Home and School. Mrs. A. J. George.
Ten Fundamental War Principles. Dr. Thomas F. Moran.
Tentacles of the German Octopus in America. E. E. Sperry.
Teacher and the War, The. Dr. F. L. Patton.
This Will Win the War (poem). R. Kipling.
Teachers' Patriotic Leaflets, volume 1, 1–6. E. V. Leighton.
United States and the World War. Richard T. Ely.
Universal Military Training, Now Let's Have (leaflets).
Universal Selective Training, Plan of.
Universal Obligatory Military Training and Service. George R. Conroy.
Universal Military Training. H. L. West.
Vote by States in the Senate and House on Preparedness Measures.
War Points for Americans. M. F. Libby.
Why We Are at War, Why You Must Help, etc.
What Doest Thou Here, America? Sartell Prentice.
War, Issues of the. Henry L. Stimson.
War, the Cause and Meaning of This. F. W. Henshaw.
What Our Country Asks of Its Young Women. Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker.
What Rutherford Has Done.
Whitnes Articles, The Casper.
What Fight Ye For? Rev. J. R. Cassidy.
Why American Labor Is Back of the War. George W. Perkins.
War, The. Clarence Darrow.
Why British Labor Supports the War. J. S. Seddon.
Woman's Place in Our Cities. Susanna Crocroft.
Why the U. S. Is at War. Dr. Shailer Mathews.
Why Do We Fight Germany? Hon. Franklin K. Lane.
Why We Are at War. Josephine Daskam Bacon.
Wisconsin Resolution, May 17, 1918.
Wake Up, Teachers of America. E. V. Leighton.
What Universal Military Training Can Do (leaflet).
What the Kaiser Says.
Why We Are at War with Germany. Charles Robinson Smith.
Work of the National Security League. Henry L. West.
You Will Win the War. George Horace Lorimer.
Your Fellow Citizens Ask You to Do Your Duty (circular).

Its officers solicited funds to carry on the work, and its appropriate committees assisted in the formation of branch organizations in a great many States of the Union. It was particularly interested in the question of military training, and it sent requests of the attitude of Members of the Congress upon the question of universal military training and service. It invited Members of Congress to become members of the league, and many Senators and Representatives joined, and many Members of Congress replied to the questions relative to universal military training and service, a majority of the replies received being favorable to some plan which would provide for this. Branch organizations were established in many States under the auspices of the corporation at New York. The league caused to be printed many thousands of patriotic circulars and pamphlets which were sent throughout the Nation, upon various patriotic topics, and it organized various meetings at which addresses were delivered by many men prominent in the public service and of eminent distinction. Through its committee on patriotism and service it developed a plan of Americanization which was executed on a tremendous scale in many States.

No characterization of the votes was made, nor were any Members charged directly or indirectly with lack of ability, want of patriotism, or loyalty in the 1916 election campaign.

The activity at this time seems to have been inspired by moderation and a desire to be accurate and fair.

Supplementing the issuance and distribution of this circular the National Security League printed and circulated several thousand placards in October, 1916, just before the election, as follows:

> Vote for the candidate in Congress in your district, irrespective of party, who believes in these principles of preparedness: Universal obligatory military training, an adequate Army, Navy second in strength, governmental efficiency, industrial preparedness, country above party, patriotism through education, unified national spirit.

